THE CHURCH ADVOCATE.

A Family Paper---Devoted to the Diffusion of Bible Truth, Religious News and General Intelligence.

ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A YEAR. "EARNESTLY CONTEND FOR THE FAITH WHICH WAS ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS." PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

VOLUME XI. HARRISBURG, Pa., MAY 16, 1846. NUMBER 2.

THE ADVOCATE

Is printed and published in Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge, Harrisburg, Pa.,

By JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M., Editor.

Terms and Regulations.

THE CHURCH ADVOCATE, will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents, which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

All the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and such other persons as shall have regular certificates of their appointment from the Editor, shall be the only authorized agents for this paper.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Our first and second Numbers.

WE were delayed with our first number beyond the date thereof, for several days. But as we are now better prepared for efficient operations, it is hoped the like will not occur again.

We are pleased to hear, that the appearance and contents of the paper, give pretty general satisfaction. If this can be kept up, together with its regular issues, it will, perhaps, fully atone for its long delay. On our part we shall do what we can to make every number of the Advocate interesting and acceptable. But we cannot do all ourselves. We hope, therefore, as we said before, that our old and new contributors, will come to our aid, with regular and suitable communications for each consecutive number. If every one will do a little, we can get along. Please then, one and all, to bear this reitterated request, in faithful remembrance.

We would, also, say again, to our general, travelling and local agents, now is your time for effective action. What can be done, towards increasing our subscription list, ought to be done in the commencement of the volume. Among other considerations, that may prompt you to vigorous effort, forget not our premiums. Who will come off victor and take the first and highest premium? And who the second! &c.

We would further request our brethern of the quill and pulpit to send us in full and regular accounts of religious, marriage and obituary notices. These are to our readers, very interesting and satisfactory.

This second number of our paper, will not have as much original matter, as the first, owing to the unavoidable delay with our first issue. In our next, we hope to give more.

Our news department will be found very rich and interesting.—The miscellaneous is good and worth a careful perusal.

Our contributors' department is improving. We hope it will continue to do so. One of the ex-editors has repented and come back. See his communication. We bid him welcome, and hope he may never have occasion to migrate again.

Those who send us new subscribers, will please to write their names correct and plain, and always give the post office, county and State.

War with Mexico.

HOSTILITIES have commenced between the United States and the Republic of Mexico.—On the 24th ult., an engagement took place, in the State of Texas, on the Rio del Norte, between the Mexican forces and a party of U. S. dragoons, in which about sixteen men were killed and wounded, and the remainder of the United States company, consisting of about 46, were taken prisoners. This sad affair has aroused the whole country. Gen. Taylor, the Commander of the United States army, in Texas, has called on the Governors of Texas and Louisiana for auxiliary forces. Gov. Johnson of Louisiana, has issued his requisition for 2500 volunteers. The Legislature of Louisiana has passed a bill by acclamation, appropriating $500,000 to equip and forward troops. The army under Gen. Taylor consists of from 2500 to 3000 men, whilst the Mexican forces are about 8000 strong, and increasing rapidly.

The President of the U. S. has sent a special message to Congress, recommending the adoption of some timely measures for repelling invasion and subduing the Mexican aggressors. Congress has passed an act authorizing the President to accept the services of 50,000 volunteers, and appropriating $10,000,000 for the prosecution of the war now existing between the United States and the Republic of Mexico.

Thus, then, the calamities and horrors of war, the greatest and worst of scourges, have broken in upon us. As a nation, we are guilty, and have long since deserved to be punished for our great and crying sins. May the Lord give us repentance and save us from the horrors and desolations of war.

The Weather, River, and Bridge.

THE weather for the last three weeks has been exceedingly wet and rainy. It rained more or less almost every day, and on some days in heavy falls—The heaviest of all were on Friday and Saturday last.

On Saturday night and Sabbath the Susquehanna river rose rapidly. It was about eight feet above low water mark. The weather having cleared off this week, it is now falling.—Yesterday it began to rain again.

The railroad bridge has again suffered some damage. The "false works" of the second span were swept away on Sabbath afternoon. This, however, was the result of accident, more than the violence of the flood itself. Two arks of lumber were caught by the ferry-rope of the old Harrisburg bridge, which broke off their oars. The consequence was, that the men on the arks had no means to steer them, so as to avoid the "false works" of the new bridge; and, accordingly, it was swept away. However, the most, if not all, has been recovered.

The re-building of this noble bridge, is now in rapid progression. Some three or four of the piers, between the Dauphin shore and the Island, have been repaired, and the first span of the wood-work re-built. A large force is employed, both on the stone and wood-work. If no further misfortune befalls the bridge, it will be ready for crossing sometime next fall.

Divorce Acts.

WE have seen it stated in several newspapers, that the Pa. Legislature have granted about sixty divorces, during the last session; and the tax levied upon each divorce was $20. The amount of taxation, on each case, we believe to be correct, but as to the number decreed, that is a mistake. There were only about half that number of divorce acts passed. But these were too many. I know not on what grounds, these numerous acts to annul the marriage contracts in a christian community can be justified. The Divine Saviour has expressly stated the law of divorce to be this: "Whoever putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whoever marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery." Luke 19: 9. And the Apostle has said, 1 Cor. 7: 11. "Let not the husband put away his wife"—"let not the wife depart from her husband: but, if she depart let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband." "For the woman which hath a husband, is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adultress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adultress, though she be married to another man." Rom. 7: 2, 3.

These statutes of Heaven, prohibit and disannul all legislative acts and decrees, except in cases of fornication. Query:—Were these 28 or 30 divorce acts, passed by our late Legislature, for the cause of fornication or adultery? If not, how will that body justify itself?

The Notice Resolution.

THIS resolution, with the preamble, will be found among the news items, in the news department. The vote in the House, on the question, stood 142 to 46; and in the Senate, 42 to 10. The resolution was signed by the President, soon after its passage, and transmitted by the Secretary of State, to the British Government.

The Bribery Case.

MR. MCCOOK, who was charged with bribery before the Pa. Legislature, has had his trial before the Court of this county, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $600, with costs of prosecution. He has paid fine and costs, and is gone on his way, never we hope, to do so again. We hope, also, that this will be a lesson to all similar craftsmen, not soon to be forgotten. Some men's sins are open before hand, going before to judgment, others they follow after. But be sure, sinner, your sins will find you out, either here or hereafter.

Unity and Liberality.

THESE are cardinal characteristics of a true church, and of a good and prosperous state of religion; whereas, disunion and illiberality are sad marks of a corrupt and fallen church, and of a low state of religion; or, at least, promontory signs of being in imminent danger of soon lapsing into such a deplorable condition.

The Lord help the churches to examine themselves by the aforesaid criterions, in order that they may fully know their true character and condition!

Liverpool Conference.

THE conference which was held in Liverpool, in October last, and which issued the call for holding a World's Convention in London, in August next, for the purpose of promoting the cause of Christian Union, have issued a kind of creed, as a test of orthodoxy, a subscription to which, is to be the test of membership in the Convention. Now, it may be useful for all concerned, to know the precise terms of admission, in order that they may judge whether they can coincide with the same, and under them claim a seat in the Convention. Accordingly, we insert below the restrictive articles as published in the proceedings of said conference, and which must be agreed to. They are as follows, viz:

1. The Divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of Holy Scripture.

2. The unity of the Godhead and the Trinity of persons therein.

3. The utter depravity of human nature, in consequence of the fall.

4. The incarnation of the Son of God, and his work of atonement for sinners of mankind.

5. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.

6. The work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.

7. The right and the duty of private judgment in the interpretation of Holy Scripture.

8. The divine institution of the Christian Ministry, and the authority and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

Bridge burnt—Rope Ferry—War.

On Thursday last, the remaining spans of the fine bridge at Clark's Ferry, 15 miles up the river, were burnt down, catching from a steamboat plying there. Great loss. The Rope-ferry at the old Harrisburg bridge is nearly completed.—A large War meeting was held here on Thursday evening, to sustain the Government in the war with Mexico.

Meaning of the word Kingdom.

This term, with its appelatives, is used to signify;

1. A country subject to a king; Deut. 3: 4. 1 Kings 2: 15. 2 Chron. 22: 9. Dan. 2: 37.

2. The people of a country; 1 Kings 12: 21-26.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Letter from a Returning Wanderer.

Harrisburg, May 12, 1846.

To the brethren of the "Church of God:"—

Dear Brethren, by referring to the proceedings of the last Eastern Pa. Eldership, and the action of the Standing Committee on my case, you will see that I have sought a settlement of the difficulties which led to my withdrawal from the Church last fall a year, and that these difficulties have been so far removed (especially by the withdrawal of Geo. McCartney from the Church) as to induce me to return to the fold, from which I have been parted in form (but not in principle) for nearly two years. I have, upon application to the Standing Committee, been duly re-instated as a member of the Church, and shall defer further application till the next meeting of the Eldership. All the difficulties which led to my separation from the Church had their origin in the undue conduct of Mr. McCartney towards me, after he became editor of the "Gospel Publisher." And he having refused to do me justice, I was led to take the step I took; but as he has gone out of the Church, I leave him to his own reflections, and can now return with joy to the fellowship of my dear brethren of the "Church of God." I shall probably visit some of the churches during the summer and have the happiness to exchange salutations, and mingle my prayers with theirs.

And now I would suggest to all others, who may have become disaffected, during the past two years of strife and dissention, to remember the former days of happiness they enjoyed in the Church, and come back to sweet communion with their brethren, whom they once so fondly loved. The devil goeth about seeking whom he may destroy, and often accomplishes his end most effectually by causing a separation of brethren from the Church of Christ. There are some now standing aloof, who were perhaps influenced, more or less, by my example in becoming separated; and for their sake, especially, do I urge a due consideration of their present situation, and a return to the fold with which they formerly enjoyed themselves upon the green pastures of God's grace. Brethren, I know, from experience, that while you are parted, by disaffection, from the Church in which you were converted and taught the ways of the Lord, you cannot enjoy yourselves as formerly.—Therefore, let my admonition and warning voice be heard, and my experience and example induce you to return again. The Church has suffered through various influences, for several years; let us rally once more, and with consolidated force, in the name of the Lord, do battle against the spirit of darkness and division. As a Church of Christ let us do honor to his name.

I would also take the liberty to urge all the brethren and sisters to patronize the new paper, "The Church Advocate," and do all you can to extend its circulation in your neighborhoods. May the Lord bless you all and prosper the Church and all his individual children every where—Amen.

JOHN F. WEISHAMPEL.

P. S.—I understand that a writer in the "Religious Telescope," of last year, has reported, in a communication, that I said to him: "Miller wanted to destroy the world by fire, and Winebrenner wanted to destroy it by water." I deny that I made any such remarks to him or any person else. He must either have wilfully misrepresented me, or forgot what I had said—I trust the latter.

The World's Convention.

In the last number of the Advocate, I see brother Winebrenner throws out the hint, that he would be willing to attend the great World's Convention in London (England,) to consider the subject of promoting Union among Christians. This is a very important matter, and should concern and deeply interest every Christian in the whole world; and every denomination should send a delegate to represent them in said Convention. It behooves us, who are so much striving to effect a gathering of Christians on primitive principles and grounds, not to let this opportunity slip to communicate to the world at large, our views of Christian Union, and the proper means, in our opinion, to effect it. Even, should the object aimed at, not be accomplished at this Convention, still it would be well for us to send one or more delegates, in order that Bible truth, and BIBLE LIGHT, may have its advocates and disseminators in great abundance, in the Convention; and then we may hope for at least some good to be done, though it fall short of the amount contemplated. I do not mean to say, that we alone have the true light on this Union subject; for I know there are others who see alike with us; but I mean: we should increase, by our delegation, the number of those who are willing to lay aside all human doctrines, and adopt the Divine plan exclusively, to effect the object.

But who shall pay the expenses? It will take, for one delegate, perhaps, to do the matter rightly, about one hundred and fifty dollars. Who will raise this? Fifteen rich brethren, by paying ten dollars each, can settle the question of sending a delegate; or thirty, by paying each five dollars. Let every one who feels interested in the matter, say now, what he will give by the middle of July; and if the sum sufficient can be raised, I have no doubt the Standing Committee of the General Eldership, will delegate brother Winebrenner, or some one else, to go in the name of the Lord and the "Church of God," to aid in this great and desirable object.

Union.

May 12, 1846.

Without union of effort no great work can be done. One of the main causes of disunion is self-love, or selfishness which is the same thing. Self-love is indicative of a diminution of genuine piety. And soon as we see individuals no longer subordinate to co-operative principles, but each one trying to strike for the independency, we can fairly look upon such as disorderly and disobedient, and co-workers with Satan for the downfall of religion.

The cause of Christ demands concert of action to pull down the strong holds of Satan. And the real christian, who has the promotion of the kingdom of God truly at heart, will always, in view of this, carefully avoid every thing that would tend to break the union between him and his brethren. But it is not so with all, some from the moment they step within the bounds of the church, try to produce division, to disaffect the brethren, and depress the brotherhood. Paul speaks of them being in some of the primitive churches and calls them "false brethren." who crept in unawares, to spy out their liberty which they had in Christ, that they might make them slaves to satan again. But they soon rid themselves of these enemies of the cross of Christ, and then they had piece. It will be clearly seen by the most casual observer, that such persons are destitute of the peaceable spirit of righteousness, and like Ananias and Sapphira, are lying unto the Holy Ghost.—Show me an individual who is constantly finding a family fault, provoking contentions, and absenting himself from the house of prayer, and I will show you a mere pretender, a professor without a possession of the "one thing needful" for the salvation of the soul.

How can the labors of a minister of the Gospel be blessed, unless there be a union of feeling between him and the "little flock" among which he labors. Often it happens that his labors are entirely lost, merely because the church will not co-operate with him. They seem to catch the confusion that reigned at Ephesus, when PAUL first labored there.—Some therefore cry one thing and some another; and they think they know all about spiritual matters when they are not yet out of their novitiate. And you may preach to them until you wear out you lungs, but all to no benefit, because their true master, the devil, has given them an elasticity of conscience, perfectly in accordance with their profession, that will bend to any way but the right one.—There is an obstinacy of character about them. that the fire of the pit will only subdue, but it will then be too late!

To the wise these few remarks would be sufficient, but to those that never apply anything that is said, to themselves, but are ever on the alert to judge others, we have a few concluding remarks to make. In Paul's letter to the Galatians 5th chap. 19th to 23d verses inclusive, we have both the works of the flesh, and of the spirit laid before us in plain and clear language, let us try ourselves by it and see whether we can pass the ordeal clear. But lest some might forget to refer to it, we will quote a few of the many sins, which if committed will exclude from heaven; viz, "hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings," &c. And yet it is greatly to be lamented, that many are daily doing the very things here spoken against, and which will inevitably bring them to misery, unless they repent of this glaring wickedness.

RUFUS.

Letter from Elder G. U. Harn.

PITTSBURG, Pa.

WE are frequently told by prayerless professors, that family religion is not commanded by God, and, therefore, should always be left to the choice of men and women, either to attend to it, or dispense with the practice. I shall, therefore, prove,—

1st. That family religion is divinely authorized; and,

2d. Notice the most proper order of conducting it.

We shall, then, prove in the first place, that it is divinely authorized.

In Gen. 18. 19, we read, that God said concerning Abraham, the father and pattern of all believers: "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." From this we learn that Abraham's family was a religious school, in which the worship of the true God was taught and practised; and this, too, before the law was given. But Moses was not forgetful of this important duty, when giving his comment on the law. In Deut. 6: 7, he says: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house; and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down; (or just before going to rest) and when thou risest up," (or in the morning before going about the duties of the day.) Also, see chap. 11: 19: And Joshua, the leader or generalissimo of the armies of Israel, after the departure of Moses, told the whole Israelitish host, "to chose whom they would serve; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Here is the resolution of one who might have been the king of that nation at a word, and who had successfully led them for many years, avowing his settled determination to set an example of holy living and family religion, before the world and his children. Jos. 24: 15. The prophet Jeremiah, (chap. 10: 25) prays the Lord to pour out his fury on the heathen who knew him not, and the families who call not on His name. This amounts to a prophecy that it will be so; and if it will be so, certainly the prophet considered it wrong to neglect this part of religious duties.

We find, then, that in the Patriarchal, Mosaical, and Prophetical ages, family religion was enjoined and practised; and is it not to be practised in the school of Christ? Some have wondered why the New Testament says so little about it. Well, some duties are so plain, that even the nature and necessity of things apprise us of them, and there is but little need of saying much about them in revelation; but we think there is sufficiently said to leave those without excuse, who are disobedient to this law of heaven and reason. We are informed, "men should pray every where, lifting up holy hands without wrath or doubting." A part of this every where, surely includes the family circle. Again, we are told, "to pray all manner of prayer," and this is one manner of prayer. And Paul, in Eph. 6: 4, says: "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." After these scriptures and arguments, can any professor of religion be free from censure, who neglects this duty? I think surely not.

But even reason itself will teach us the necessity of so ordering our family affairs.—Shall we, as families, receive God's blessing; and not as families, give Him thanks for them? Shall we see our dependencies on Him; and not as such, pray together for His aid? Shall we, as families, see the necessity of learning His will concerning us, and not study that will togerher? Nay. Reason, then, tells us we should make the family circle a school for religious instructions and worship. But I proceed,—

2d. To notice the most proper order of conducting it.

1. I have long since thought the general order of merely reading a portion of God's word, in a cold, dead, formal manner, singing a few verses of a hymn, and then saying over a formal prayer, and then dismissing the whole as soon as possible, is far from answering the design of the Lord in requiring it.

2. There should be a regular hour for begining family worship, in every family, and should be well understood by all who appertain to it; that it is their indispensable duty to be ready at the appointed time. Allow no infringement. Particularly should this hour be early in the evening, before the children get sleepy, or go to rest, or get fretful and peevish. I have been in some families where worship was put off till the very last thing; all were dull and sleepy, except those who had retired, and some would get to sleep while I was reading, or on my knees praying. But where a regular time is appointed, and that at an early hour, all can be done in a lively, cheerful and profitable manner; and if there is any talking to be done, or if the domestics have any business to attend to, let this be done after worship.

3. Children should be made to be quiet during services. I have been in some families where two or three children, all the time of religious services, were either crying, running about the floor, pulling the chairs or something else about, so that I could not hear my own prayers, and have frequently cut them short, and got off my knees on this account. To avoid this, some parents will chose such times that their children are not in the house, or will put them into another room during services. This is wrong, and I verily hold such parents guilty before the Lord, who train their children in no better manner.

4. The best way of conducting family religion, is, to be punctual to the time. Let every one who can read, have a Bible or Testament, and read verse about; and let some one ask questions of the family circle. Then sing and pray; and if any thing else is then to do, do it. This will be doing as Abraham did, and as Moses commanded Israel to do, when he told them "to talk to their children when they were retiring, and when they rose up in the morning."

I have seen brother A——'s family formerly of Frederick county, Md., conducted in this way, and I was deeply impressed with the correctness of the order. In this way, families might become divines, and be learned in the most useful knowledge.

I am sorry you did not appoint your Eldership campmeeting. Urge this through the paper. I think I have preached more this winter, than I ever did. I am now at father KARN's, in Butler county. I came here on Monday, and will return to-morrow or Saturday. In four weeks I have preached about thirty discourses, and travelled one hundred and fifty miles—a great part of it on foot. Elder Knapp was with us for near two months last winter and has created quite a stir among the Baptists. I suppose they have baptized 125 since he came here. The Methodists have done a little. Elder Knapp has left for Albany.

The small-pox has been very bad in our cities. I suppose there have been 2500 cases of it, since I have been here. Brother Gray lost his eldest daughter, four years old.

I remain yours,

FREEMAN'S LANDING, Brook co., Va.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER—

Dear Sir:—I herewith send six new subscribers for the Church Advocate. They are all good for their subscriptions, and will comply with your conditions. I am glad to see the good paper started again, and do hope that the brethren will sustain their ground.

There is no special news in this place.—The Wesleyan brethren are doing the only good here; the other sects gather in anything that counts. The former demand a change of heart. This is as it ought to be. I will write to you as soon as I receive the first number, and send you the money for your paper.—May peace ever be yours here and hereafter.

Yours in love,

JOHN S. KERR.

Letter from Elder T. Hickernell.

April 22, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This is to inform you, that I am now at brother John Bamberger's, Champaign Co., Ohio, on my way to Archibald Young's, north of Columbus. Last week I was at Cincinnati for the first time, and expect to return thither in June next. I also went to see Christian Winebrenner your cousin at Miamiesburg, Butler county. He is by all accounts a good christian, and a member of the Christian church. I saw brother Reis at Middletown, and found him strong in the faith of the disciples. I also saw brother J. Achey and family at Dayton, and found them all enjoying reasonable health. I likewise met our mutual friend brother David Kinsinger, formerly from Cumberland county, Pa., he seemed considerably discouraged on account of a want of the Society of his brethren. Brother John Bamberger has had a hard scourge of the winter fever, but is now in good health.

Revivals were more extensive in Ohio last winter than for years past. I heard of 10 or 12 different places where the good work was going on. I was in some neighborhoods myself, where we had refreshings from the presence of the Lord. The most extensive revival that I was in, was at Dalton or Dover, Wayne county; the brethren have built a fine meeting house there in which brother Magrew and myself commenced a protracted meeting the 21st of Feb. last. I only staid three days, during which time I did all the preaching, and had to leave on account of other appointments. I received a letter from brother Magrew dated the 11th of March, in which he states, that the meeting was going on still, and did not know when it would stop. About 30 had already been converted and 21 baptized, and others where making up their minds to follow the Saviour in the ordinance of baptism. Amongst those that were baptized, was David Myers, which astonished every body.

I will here also give you a short statement of the work in other places, of which I received intelligence. In the neighborhood of Chester there were 15 converted. Union church about 15. David Shelley's about 16. Shoup's Broad Run about 30. In the neighborhoods of Gills, S. N. Miller and Stevens about 60. In the neighborhood of Geo. Plaster's 8 or 9. Clark's 5 or 6. Hogereek about 3. I understand there are some revivals on Adams's circuit, but I did not hear the particulars. Brother John Martin was at my house and states, the Lord is reviving his work in the State of Indiana, some 40miles beyond Fort Wayne. He wants me to come out there and help him to hold a camp-meeting, which is to commence the last of May, which I purpose doing, when I get through with my appointments.

I presume you are anxious to know what we are doing for the Relief Project, in Ohio. I have about four hundred dollars subscribed, and have but ten dollars collected, which I will send to the East by the first opportunity. I suppose you are aware of the hard times in Onio: this operates very much against us.—Brother Magrew and myself have also collected some money for the Publisher, which we paid over on the St. Myers affair. There are probably 30 dollars yet to pay. You have sent me a prospectus, and requested me to send on subscribers, by the first of January. But it so happened that I did not get it till the last of December. I passed around my old mission and received the following names for the Church Advocate which I send you.

Yours truly,

THOMAS HICKERNELL.

Letter from Elder Edward West.

Wooster, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I received your letter, and will proceed forthwith to answer your inquiries, and inform you of the state of things in Ohio. We held an extra session of the Eldership in January last; and the proceedings of that meeting were, as far as I can learn, satisfactory to all the brethren. And in consequence of the restoration of harmony and peace among all the members of the Eldership present, I have agreed to take an appointment in this Eldership. Where I may, labor is not yet positively ascertained; but I think it will be with brother Neal on the Mohicon circuit. I will, therefore, remain in Ohio for the present. I have not time to give you a minute account of the proceedings of the Eldership; but I will try to do so in my next letter to you.

The license granted to me by the East Pa. Eldership I shall not want, as I am not, nor do I expect to labor within its bounds; but I wish, through you, to tender my thanks to the brethren composing that Eldership, for their kindness shown towards me, in giving me an appointment.

We have had a precious revival in the church at Gile's, and the church where brothers Miller and Neal live, about three miles from the former place. The meeting commenced some time last fall, and up to the present time, there have been sixty or more conversions, and the meeting is still in progress. I have not been at home but a few evenings since the meeting began, nor do I expect to be at home much for sometime to come. There have also been about 10 or 12 conversions near Canal Dover, on brothers Magrew's and Murry's circuit.

We are looking for still better times, the churches generally feel encouraged to look for the coming of the Lord, to revive his children, and cause his work to prosper.

I have distributed those prospectuses sent to me, some of them have been sent on, and some I have not heard from, but I expect I will retain the prospectus I have; I may get more subscribers. I send you seven subscribers at present.

I remain your brother in the Lord.

EDWARD WEST.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Joint Resolutions Concerning the Oregon Territory.—Whereas, by the convention concluded the 20th day of October, 1818, between the United States of America and the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the period of ten years, and afterwards indefinitely extended and continued in force by another convention of the same parties, concluded the 6th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1827, it was agreed that any country that may be claimed by either party on the Northwest coast of America westward of the Stony or Rocky Mountains; now commonly called the Oregon Territory, should, together with its harbors, bays and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be "free and open" to the vessels, citizens, and subjects of the two Powers, but without prejudice to any claim which either of the parties might have to any part of the said country; and with this further provision, in the second article of the said convention of the 6th of August, 1827, that either party might abrogate and annul said convention, on giving due notice of twelve months to the other contracting party—

And whereas it has now become desirable that the respective claims of the United States and Great Britain should be definitely settled, and that said territory may no longer than need be remain subject to the evil consequences of the divided allegiance of its American British population, and of the confusion and conflict of national peace and good understanding of the two Countries.

With a view, therefore, that steps be taken for the abrogation of the said convention of the 6th of August, 1827, in the mode prescribed in its second article, and that the attention of both Countries may be the more earnestly and immediately directed to renewed efforts for the settlement of all their differences and disputes in respect to said territory—

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to give to the British Government the notice required by the said second article for the abrogation of said convention of the 6th of August, 1827.

Mormon Affairs.—The Hancock, Ill., Eagle, of April 17th, publishes a letter from Major Warren, in which he says, that he was directed, by the Governor, to disband the force under his command on the 1st of May, inst. And he hoped that the removal of the Mormons would be completed by that time. The "Eagle" estimates that about 5000 had already left the county. Some had gone to Wiskonsan; some had left for other States; many had gone by the way of the Missouri river to Council Bluffs, and the remainder were then in the camp of the "Twelve" on their way Westward. Another company were to have started in a week or two, and a large number of teams had already crossed the Mississippi, to form a camp, and others were crossing daily.

Emigration from Lancaster Co.—Lancaster county is one of the finest and most productive in the State, yet we see the spirit of emigration has seized upon its inhabitants, and several parties have left. The "Examiner" says, "On Thursday week 20 families, numbering about 100 individuals, from the Northern section of the county, started for Illinois, taking with them nine tons of household goods, &c., and a large amount of money. Another large party will start from the neighborhood of Mount Joy in a few days, and a number of individuals and families from other parts of the county have already left or are about leaving. Several families have gone to Maryland, but much the larger number have gone West."

Progress of the Telegraph.—A contract was concluded recently with Mr. Cornell by the Albany and New York Magnetic Telegraph Co. to build that line immediately. Mr. C. Livingston has made a contract to have a line built from Troy to Saratoga in time for the fashionable season. The Boston and New York line was to have been in working order by the 1st of this month. The Philadelphia line is ready to Jersey City, with the exception of crossing the river at Newark, arrangements for which were to have been perfected last week. The line between Albany and Buffalo will soon be ready. By the 1st proximo there will undoubtedly be telegraph communication complete between Boston and Washington. The Boston line is soon to be extended to Portland. By recent improvements, intelligence can be communicated at as many different points as desired, merely by placing a battery at the several places.

Canals.—The most stupendous canal in the world is one constructed in China, which passes over 2000 miles, and to 41 cities, commenced in the tenth century.—The canal of Languedoc which joins the Mediterranean with the Atlan. Ocean, was commenced in 1666. That of Orleans, from the Loire to the Seine, commenced in 1675. That between the Caspian Sea and the Baltic, commenced in 1709.—That from Stockholm to Gottenburg, commenced 1751. That between the Baltic and the North Sea at Kiel, opened 1785. That of Bourbon, between the Seine and Oise, commenced 1790. The Erie canal, which is 330 miles in length, was commenced in 1817. The first canal made in England was by Henry I., when the river Trent was joined to Witham, A. D. 1134. In England, there are 2800 miles of canals, and 5500 miles of rivers, taking the length of those only that are navigable—total 5300 miles. In Ireland there are but 300 miles of canal; 150 of navigable rivers, and 60 miles of the Shannon, navigable below Limerick; making in all 510 miles.

Great Meeting of the Jews.—Dr. Bushnell of Hartford, who is now on a tour for his health in Europe, says, in a letter dated Geneva, Oct. 7, 1845:—"When I was in Frankfort, a large city in Germany, which you know is the metropolis of the Jews, I was informed that a great meeting of Jews, from all parts of Europe, had recently been held there, in which they voted that there is nothing obligatory in the use of the Hebrew in their worship, and accordingly that it was best to retain it, only in part, as a badge of their nationality and a bond of unity. Also, on full discussion, that the Messiah is already come. The present toleration and comfort they enjoy, being what is meant by the promised Messiah. Also, that now there is nothing to forbid their freely blending with the nations among whom they reside. God is at work everywhere in all varieties of conflict and change, and whether we see it or not, truth is to conquer."

Bishopric of Jerusalem.—The death of Rev. Dr. Alexander having left this see vacant, it has been filled by the appointment of M. Belson, a converted Jew, by the King of Prussia, who holds the right of alternate appointment with the government of England.

The "Malleable" Glass Invention.—A paper on the continent mentions the re-discovery of "malleable" glass, in Saint Ettenne. "It is the production of a sort of glass as malleable when cold as while hot. This metal, which ere long will be more valuable than gold, and which the inventor has called 'Silicon,' is of a white color, very sonorous, and as brilliant and transparent as crystal. It can be obtained with equal ease opaque or colored; combines with various substances, and some of these combinations produce shades of extraordinary beauty. It is without smell, very ductile, very malleable, and neither air nor acids affect it—It can be blown like glass, melted or stretched out in threads of perfect regularity. It is very hard, very rough, and possesses the qualities of molten steel, in the very highest degree, without requiring to be tempered. A variety of objects have been made of this 'Silicon,' which are about to be exhibited to the public."—Monitor.

New use of the Daguerreotype.—We understand that the French people have recently applied the wonderful invention of M. Daguerre to a purpose which we think, will be attended with a great many good effects, and tend in a great degree, to the prevention of crime. The authorities take a Daguerrian portrait of every known thief and pickpocket in Paris, and send duplicates to the police authorities of all the other departments of the kingdom.—In this way, those characters are known to the police everywhere, and can be watched wherever they may be.

The Mail to Oregon.—We learn that the Post-master General has recently reported in favor of an ocean and overland mail to Oregon, which will be in a few days laid before the House of Representatives.

The design is to start a steamship every month from Charlestown to Havana and once in two months, the trip will be extended to charges, on the west side of the Isthmus of Panama; from thence the mails are to be conveyed in wagons to some convenient point on the west side, and then by sailing vessels to the mouth of Columbia river.

Extension Canal.—This Canal, says the Erie Gazette, is now in full tide of successful operation. Heavy amounts of groceries, glass and glassware, and other Pittsburg manufactured articles, have been carried from Pittsburg to Erie, to be there transhipped to various points on the lakes. From the auspicious commencement, we should judge that a brisk trade will be carried on this season.

A large European company have purchased about 300,000 acres of land in Hamilton, Bradley and Polk counties Tenn. It is intended to settle a large number of foreign emigrants on this tract of country, and direct their labors chiefly to wool-growing and manufactures.

New Discovery.—Professor Morse has ascertained that the Magnetic Telegraph can be worked without the use of batteries. The Baltimore Patriot says several experiments have been made, all of which proved satisfactory. The discovery will be the means of saving much trouble and expense.

Item.—The Connecticut sewing machine is said to stich 700 stiches in a minute.

"License or No License."—The Legislature of New York have submitted to the people the question whether there shall be in that State, after the third Tuesday of this month, any more licenses granted to retail alcoholic drinks. Mr. E. C. Delavan, in connexion with other noble friends of the cause and mankind, are earnestly and most actively engaged in preparing the minds of the people for the great decision. They have within a short time put in circulation near five hundred thousand copies of an able "Appeal" to the voters of the State, a copy for each family.

Towanda Relief Notes.—By a notice of the State Treasurer, the Collectors of tolls and taxes in this State are notified not to receive any more of the Towanda relief issues, as the states there are now but $275 outstanding, which amount can only be received at the State Treasury. Our readers had better remember this, and not receive any more of these issues.

A Curiosity.—We saw on the Schuylkill a few days ago, a beautiful iron steamboat, called the Mount Vernon. The construction of this little vessel is entirely new to our waters, having no smoke-pipes. Her length is about 86 feet and her breath 13 feet, and can accommodate fifty to one hundred passengers. Her speed is about ten to twelve miles per hour. She is well calculated to ply on any canal, displacing little or no water, and drawing but two feet.—Ex. paper.

Intemperance in England.—The London Temperance Chronicle estimates the amount expended in England for strong drink, together with the losses occasioned by intemperance, at £130,000,000, to which is added not less than £10,000,000 lost by accidents on sea and land, resulting immediately from drunkenness.

China Opened.—The Journal of Commerce gives an encouraging statement of Rev. Mr. Doty, who has just arrived from Amoy, and says, there is now no obstacle in that city to the distribution of Christian books, and preaching the gospel—that ladies may accompany their friends without molestation, on a walk through the streets—that the late edict of the Emperor grants free toleration, alike to the religious enterprises of all Western nations.—Evan.

Railroad Iron.—The Rolling Mill at Danville is now again in full operation, making, on an average, about forty tons of railroad iron per day. They have made as high as forty-five tons per day. The Great Western Company at Brady's Bend, above Pittsburg, have made a very large amount of railroad iron the past winter.—Pittsburg Advertiser.

A Presentment.—The Grand Jury of Wood Co., sitting at Parkersburg, have presented the "Western Christian Advocate," edited by Rev. Dr. Elliott of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as a nuisance and an incendiary publication! The Advocate is published at Cincinnati.

Indians.—The Indian population within the states and territories of the United States, including Oregon, is estimated at 350,000 souls.

Good Choice.—Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen has been elected President of the American Bible Society—a worthy man for a worthy office.

Shocking.—A late London letter says:—"Some of the best blood of Poland has been poured out in the late insurrection. The Austrian authorities in the Grand Dutchy of Posen, offered about five dollars a head for every Polish nobleman, dead or alive! In two days more than 400 noblemen were massacred! And this barbarous and sanguinary order was issued by what has been mis-called the paternal government of Austria."

Transportation Wagons.—The mechanics of Pittsburg are making 100 large wagons, to be used in transporting goods from Independence in Missouri, to Santa Fe, the present Spring. They are building at the same place a splendid carriage, which will cost $1500, for a Mexican merchant.

Flood at Pottsville.—Loss of Life.—On the 1st inst. the Schuylkill river rose considerably, from the heavy rains, and did much damage at Pottsville and on the canal; and several persons lost their lives.

The Wheat Crop.—The wheat crop is spoken of every where as very fine. In Ohio it looks much better than usual. In Michigan it looks well, not having been injured by the late severe winter. The farmers feel much encouraged with the prospects.

Emigration.—The flood of emigration pouring, and yet preparing to pour into the United States, from Germany, is represented as immence. No less than 6,396 emigrants from England and France arrived in New York last month.

Marble.—A vein of fine marble between 30 and 40 miles in length, has been discovered in Hawkins co., Tenn., which alternates in color from the lightest to the darkest red and is susceptible of the highest polish.

Consumption.—Fifty thousand persons have fallen victims to Pulmonary Consumption, in the cities of Bosten, New York and Philadelphia, during only thirty years, as the bills of mortality will show.

Acquitted.—Ritchie who killed Pleasants of Richmond, in a duel, has been tried and acquitted. The laws of Virginia, it appears, do not punish the survivor in a duel as a murderer.

Tooth-ache.—To cure the Tooth-ache, plunge your feet in cold water. Strange, but true.

Dishonest and mean.—To refuse a paper after taking it for some time, without paying up arrearages.

Conference.—The General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church was in session last week at Cincinnati.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Whisper to Wives.

The first inquiry of a woman after marriage should be, "How shall I continue the love I have inspired? How shall I preserve the heart I have won?

Endeavor to make your husband's habitation alluring and delightful to him.—Let it be to him a sanctuary to which his heart may always turn from the calamities of life. Make it a repose from his cares, a shelter from the world, a home not for his person only, but for his heart.—He may meet with pleasure in other houses, but let him find pleasure in his own. Should he be dejected, soothe him; should he be silent and thoughtful, do not heedlessly disturb him; should he be studious, favor him with all practicable facilities; or should he be peevish, make allowance for human nature, and by your sweetness, gentleness, and good humor, urge him continually to think, though he may not say it, "This woman, is indeed a comfort to me, I cannot but love her and requite such gentleness and affection as they deserve."

2. Invariably adorn yourself with delicacy and modesty. These, to a man of refinement, are attractions the most highly captivating: while their opposite never fail to inspire disgust. Let the delicacy and modesty of the bride, be always, in a great degree, supported by the wife.

3. If it be possible, let your husband suppose you think him a good husband, and it will be a strong stimulus to his being so. As long as he thinks he possesses the reputation, he will take some pains to deserve it: but when he has once lost the name, he will be apt to abandon the reality.

4. Cultivate and exhibit with the greatest care and constancy, cheerfulness and good humor. They give beauty to the plainest face; and impart charms, where charms are not. On the contrary, a gloomy, dissatisfied manner is an antidote to affection: and though a man may not seem to notice it, it is chilling and repulsive to his feelings, and he will be very apt to seek elsewhere for those smiles and that cheerfulness which he finds not in his own house.

5. In the article of dress, study your husband's taste. The opinion of others, on this subject, is of but very little consequence, if he approves.

6. Particularly shun what the world calls in ridicule, "curtain lectures." When you shut your door at night, endeavor to shut out at the same moment all discord and contention, and look on your chamber as a retreat from the vexations of the world, a shelter sacred to peace and affection. How indecorous, offensive, and sinful it is for a woman to exercise authority over her husband, and to say, "I will have it so. It shall be as I like!" But I trust that the number of those who adopt this unbecoming and disgraceful manner, is so small as to render it unnecessary for me to enlarge on the subject.

7. Be cautious how you join in a jest and laugh against your husband. Conceal his faults, and speak only of his merits. Shun every approach to extravagance. The want of economy has involved millions in misery. Be neat, tidy, orderly, metodical. Rise early; breakfast early;—have a place for every thing, and every thing in its place.

8. Few things please a man more than seeing his wife notable and clever in the management of her household. A knowledge of cookery, as well as every other branch in housekeeping is indispensable in a female; and a wife should always endeavor to support with applause, the character of the lady and the housewife.

9. Let home be your empire, your world. Let it be the scene of your wishes, your thoughts, your plans, your exertions. Let it be the stage on which, in the varied character of wife, of mother, and of mistress, you strive to shine. In its sober, quiet scenes, let your heart cast its anchor, let your feelings and pursuits all be centered. Leave to your husband the task of distinguishing himself by his valor or his talents. Do you seek for fame at home, and let your applause be that of your servants, your children, your husband, your God.

Eloquent Extract.

A spirit of fault finding; an unsatisfied temper; a constant irritability; little inequalities in the look, the temper, or the manner; a brow cloudy and dissatisfied—your husband or your wife cannot tell why—will more than neutralize all the good you can do, and render life any thing but a blessing. It is in such gentle and quiet virtues as meekness and forbearance, that the happiness and usefulness of life consists, far more than brilliant eloquence, in splendid talent, or illustrious deeds that shall send the name to future times.

It is the bubbling spring which flows gently; the little rivulet which guides through the meadow, and which runs along day and night by the farm house that is useful, rather than swollen flood or the warring cataract. Niagara excites our wonder; and we stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there, as he "pours it from his hollow hand." But one Niagara is enough for the continent or the world; while that same world needs thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gentle flowing rivulets, that water every farm and meadow, and every garden, and that shall flow on, every day and every night with their gentle quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds only, like those of Howard, not by great sufferings only, like those of the martyrs—that good is to be done; it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life—the christian temper, the meek forbearance, the spirit of forgiveness in the husband, the wife, the father, the mother, the brother, the sister, the friend, the neighbor, that good is to be done, and in this all may be useful.—Rev. Albert Barnes.

Albert and Victoria.

The present Royal Family of England consists of six persons: Alexandria Victoria, twenty-six years of age; and Albert Francis Augustus Charles Emanuel—we delight, like the good Vicar of Wakefield, in giving the full name—her royal husband, who is three months younger than the lady; his wife and Queen. The eldest child, will be five years old in November, and rejoices in the mellifluous appellative of Victoria Adelaide Mary Louisa. The next child is a boy, and will be four years old the 9th of November. He will be the king hereafter, if he outlives his mother, and the kingdom endures; the boy taking precedence of the sister, although younger. His name is Albert Edward, and his style the Prince of Wales. The second Princess Royal; two years old—is Alice Maud Mary.—The Royal Prince born the 6th of August last, is named Alfred Ernest Albert.

Twelve excellent Rules

TO PROMOTE HARMONY AMONG CHURCH-MEMBERS.

1. To remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities of one kind or another.

2. To bear with, and not magnify each other's infirmities. Gal. 6 : 1, 2.

3. To pray one for another in our social meetings, and particularly in private. James 5 : 16.

4. To avoid going from house to house, for the purpose of hearing news, and interfering with other people's business.

5. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to lay no charge brought against any person until well founded.

6. If a member be in fault, to tell him of it in private, before it is mentioned to others.

7. To watch against a shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.

8. To observe the just rule of Solomon, that is, to leave off contention before it be meddled with. Prov. 17: 14.

9. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious, how god-like it is to forgive, and how unlike a Christian it is to revenge. Eph. 4 : 2.

10. Remember that it is always a grand artifice of the devil. to promote distance and animosity among members of churches ; and we should therefore watch against every thing that furthers this end.

11. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the church in particular, when we are all united in love, than we should do when acting alone, and indulging a contrary spirit.

12. Lastly, to consider the express injunction of Scripture, and the beautiful example of Christ, as to these important things. Eph. 32. I Peter 2 : 21. John 13 : 5, 35.

The American Tract Society.

The domestic operations of this Society are every year increasing in interest and importance. Our whole country lies before the Society as its field, without any restrictions of territory, and with almost none of sect or language. The system of volume circulation, prosecuted so successfully for many years, supplies tens of thousand annually with the choicest productions of centuries. Incessant streams are continually flowing from the Society's Depository to the army and navy, to criminal and humane institutions, and through missionaries to the West, and others, to the destitute settlements of the country ; the ordinary grants for these purposes amounting to not less than 26,-000,000 pages yearly.

There are, however, large districts of country, and scattered families in almost every district,—indeed whole classes of people, including swarms of emigrants that crowd every foreign vessel, and throng the canal and steamboats of our own waters, for whose spiritual instructions some other plan is imperitively demanded. The Colporteur system adopted by the American Tract Society has been found to meet this exigency. It is suited to a wide scattered population. For the newer settlements, where the people live far apart, and cannot be brought together statedly to hear the word—for the poor, the ignorant, the neglected classes of our wide country, this system is especially designed. The colporteur, or book agent for the destitute, has for his main object the supply of the families of his district with the Society's standard books by sale or gift, accompanied with religions conversation. In prosecuting his work he seeks the counsel and direction of the minister or ministers of the Gospel where he labors, if there are any ; and the co-operation of the people of God, when any such are to be found ; but where there are neither ministers nor christians, he trusts in God, and proceeds from family to family, from man to man, till all have been supplied with the means of salvation. In thousands of instances his visits and counsel are the first that ever came on a christian errand to the abode of poverty or vice ; and the remembrance of the colporteur, associated with the book that he left, will be an abiding witness for God.

The Home of the Drunkard.

A man who lived a drunken life for about ten years went from his already miserable home on a spree and was gone four weeks. On his return he found that the landlord, as the rent was not paid, had turned his family into the street.—After considerable difficulty he found that they had gone to a back cellar in the upper part of the city (N. Y.) With fear and trembling he approached the place; for he was sober then. After winding his way through a damp, dark and narrow passage, he discovered his family: he hid himself in a recess, and the scene which he beheld sent a convulsive thrill through his whole frame.

In one corner on a broken chair, sat his much abused and almost heart-broken wife, his children clinging around her ; the first words that caught his ear were from his little girl, who looked piteously up in his wife's face and said, "Mother, I'm so hungry !" It piereed him to the heart. His wife wept bitterly, while in another corner sat in solemn silence his poor old broken down mother. "My son," said the wife, when the weeping had subsided so that she could speak, "my son, go to the corner and ask the grocer for God's sake to give us something to keep us from starvation!" His poor little bare-footed, half-naked and half-starved son passed him, and after a short absence returned, saying that the grocer refused to give him any thing.—His wife arose almost in despair, looked round, and found some of the children's ragged clothing. The mother stood some time, as if turning over in her mind how she could make them go the farthest ; at length she told her son to get three cents' worth of potatoes, and as he was entering with them the little girl exclaimed, "Now we can have something to eat, can't we, mother!"

The father, before he became a drunkard, had supported his family in comfort. He now took the temperance pledge, and he and his family are once more happy. Young, husbands, fathers, shun the wine-cup before it is too late.

Parallel between Deism and Christianity.

1. I have never met a man, woman or child who had been made better by embracing deistical sentiments.

I have met hundreds of persons who had been benefitted by having embraced the principles of christianity.

2. I have seen those who, after having abandoned the faith of their fathers, (through the sophistry of the infidel,) have delivered themselves up to the most wicked deviations from the path of rectitude. And I judge of deism by its fruits.

3. I do not remember to have met with a deist who could assure me that his belief rendered him peaceful and happy.

I remember to have seen a great number of christians who have assured me that they owed to their religious sentiments a peace and happiness that passeth all understanding.

4. I have no where found a deist whose actions were really directed by a belief in rewards and punishments beyond the grave. The deist says he believes in a life to come, yet acts though he did not.

I have no where found a true christian whose actions were not governed by a belief in rewards and punishments hereafter. The christian not only says but also evinces by his actions that he believes in the life of the world to come.

5. I have seen many deists seized at the hour of death with a horrible despair, accusing themselves with having completely forgotten the commandments of God. Hell besieged their dying couch with all its horrors.

I have seen many christians rejoicing at the hour of death with ineffable joy, and blessing that Lord who had brought them to the knowledge of his mercies and commandments. Heaven brightened their dying bed with all its glory.

And I said—deism is an incomplete religion. an error of men—christianity is a perfect religion, a revelation of God.

Hints for Christians.

The way to secure the future, is to improve the present.

Opportunities to do good create obligation to do it ; he that has the means, must answer for the end.

Knowledge is power: seize every opportunity, therefore, to discipline the mind and to acquire as much knowledge as possible.

In all doubtful cases, take the safe side, remember he who parleys with temptation is lost.

Prefer the duty you owe to the danger you fear.

Pray often and you will pray oftener.

God requires the service of the whole being. Strive, therefore, for a pure heart, a clear mind and a sound body.

Let no impenitent husband, wife, parent, child or friend, go down to death unwarned.

Cultivate an enlarged benevolence,—remembering that you live in the nineteenth century ! Refuse no contribution to the cause of God until you have thought of the judgment.

Sow such seed while you live, as you would be glad to eat the fruit of when you die.

Do what you can to induce others to do what they ought.

Watch lest you go towards heaven by your resolutions, and towards hell by your conduct.

In dependance on the Almighty and sovereign grace of Jesus Christ, labor for a constant revival of religion, that the Holy Spirit may dwell in your heart, and that he may pervade the entire community aronnd you.

Rest not till you have evidence of increasing sanctification. Hear, think, read, speak, labor and live to be holy and useful.

Books.

There are three mistakes in regard to books.

1. Some persons through their own indolence, and others from a sincere belief of the vanity of human science, read no book but the Bible. But these good men do not consider, that, on the same principle, there ought to be no preaching, no sermons.

2. Some collect great quantities of books for show, and not for service. Of such as these Louis XI of France aptly observed, that "they resembled hunch-backed people, who carried a burden which they never saw." This is a vain parade, even unworthy of reproof.

3. There are others, who purchase large libraries with the sincere design of reading all the books ; a very large library, however, is but a learned luxury.—Nations may profitably make such accumulation, but an individnal is likely to be overwhelmed with vastness of his stores.

Reviving.—The N. Y. Observer states that there are encouraging appearances of awakening in Pearl Str. Church, and in many others of the city Churches, especially an increased interest felt among the young. There is also mention of reviving at Amherst College, Mass., and in Hamilton, and Greenbush, N. Y , and at South Bend, Ia. Forty will be added to Dr. Smyth's Church in Charleston, S. C., at the next communion.

A bad Training—a bad End.

Lucien Hall, lately executed in New-Haven, at the early age of twenty-eight, for a shocking and unprovoked murder, imputes his life of infamy and crime, and his miserable death. to the want of early religious training. His last words were these :

"I have given a full and true account of all the crimes I have committed in my short life. I desire before I close, to say to all, that I impute all my wickedness and crime to a bad bringing up. Nobody ever gave me a good advice ; my father either made me work, or allowed me to play on the Sabbath ; and I never heard a prayer in my father's house. If I had been taken to church, and religiously taught, I should not now be in my present situation. I wish to say to all parents, do not bring up your children as I was brought up. Give them the advantages of schooling, of religion, and good advice. For want of these I was led to be what I am. I wish to warn all young people against the course I have taken.—Beware how you reject good advice. or break the Sabbath. If you have religious friends and religious privileges, value them more than anything else; reeeive the advice of such friends; improve those privileges while you have them. I wish with my last breath to warn all the young against the neglect of religion, and the Sabbath, which have brought me to ruin. I have suffered a great deal, and enjoyed myself very little, and have found that the way of transgressors is hard."

Things I don't like to see, and vice versa.

I don't like to see a Minister declaim against salaries, when if he can't get $200 or $300 a year will take to shoemaking.

I don't like to see a minister an hour behind his time.

I don't like to see ministers make appointments and not fill them.

I don't like to see a church member retailing intoxicating liquors, thereby causing men to lie in the gutter, and then go to meeting and pray for the poor inebriate.

I don't like to see a church member worth ten thousand, expect a brother worth five hundred, to pay as much for preaching as himself.

I don't like to see the seats of church members empty on days of public worship.

I don't like to see one brother misrepresent another in replying to his former article.

I don't like to see a person subscribe for a paper, and not pay for it.

I don't like to see a meeting house used for all kinds of debates, lectures and public gatherings.

I do like to see ministers punctual to their appointments.

I do like to see ministers sober, grave and intelligible.

I do like to see each church member pay a little for preaching, and the rich pay much.

I do like to see church members always at meeting.

I do like to see a warm missionary spirit in the church.

I do like to see ministers and brethren live soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world.—Gospel Herald.

Salting Horses.

A curious fact is mentioned in Parker's Treatise on Salt:—"A person who kept sixteen farming horses, made the following experiment with seven of them which had been accustomed to eat salt with their feed. Lumps of rock salt were laid in their mangers, and these lumps, previously weighed, were examined regularly, to ascertain what quantity weekly had been consumed, and it was repeatedly found that, whenever these horses were fed on hay or corn, they consumed only two and a half ounces per day, and when they were fed with new hay, they took six ounces per day. This fact should convince us of the expediency of permitting our cattle the free use of salt at all times; and it cannot be given in so convenient a form as rock salt, it being more palatable than the other in a refined state, and by far cheaper. A good lump should always be kept in a box, by the side of the animal, without fear that it will ever be taken to excess.

First Synod in India.

The first meeting of the Synod of Northern India, in connection with the General Assembly, was held on the 15th of November, 1845, and was opened with a sermon by the Rev. James Wilson the oldest minister present. The following extract from the Records will be interesting to our readers:

"The following resolution was adopted, viz:

That a Committee of two be appointed to draw up a Report to be presented at the next meeting of Synod, in reference to the following and similar questions, viz.

"1st. Is the marriage relation dissolved by desertion, when the party deserting goes back to Heathenism, or Mohammadanism?

"2d. When a man embraces Christianity, having previously married a plurality of wives, what is his duty in relation to them?

"(1st.) Should he retain them all as his wives?

"(2d.) Should he separate from all except one of them?

"(3d.) In this case, should he be required to support those from whom he is separated.

"(4th.) If any of those thus separated embrace Christianity, are they at liberty to be married to another man?

Married Women.

A law recently passed by the Ohio Legislature, having in view the protection of the rights of married women, contains the following among other provisions.

1. The real estate of the wife, whether inherited, given, or devised by deed or in trust, is protected in all forms against the creditors of the husband—not for the wife only, but for the heirs of her body.

2. The personal property such as Stocks, Money, &c. (which the husband has not actually converted to his own use) is protected against his creditors.

3. The Furniture and Household goods, bought with the money of the wife, or given, or devised to her use, cannot be taken for debts contracted by the husband.

4. The interest of the husband in the estate of his wife cannot be conveyed except by Deed, properly acknowledged, &c.

This Act, however, does not take effect against the debts contracted during the marriage of the wife, and before the passage of this Act.

Church Union.

The divisions and contentions of those who claim to be the friends of the Savior have done more to foster infidelity, and to hinder the progress of evangelical truth, than all other causes put together. Such a state of things was evidently never contemplated by the great Head of the Church. It is antagonistic to his whole scheme of mercy to our ruined race. In constituting his Church, God designed that there should "be no schism in the whole body." Indeed it is utterly opposed to the whole spirit and genius of Christianity; as is evident from the very terms of our Lord's prayer: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Such a union among professing Christians would indeed have a most powerful and salutary effect upon the "world." It would stop the mouths of gainsayers, it would silence the clamors of infidelity, it would constrain many to "believe" to the saving of their souls.

Baltimore Conference.

We have been shown a private letter from a member of the Baltimore conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in which it is stated that the conference has unanimously resolved to remain in connexion with the Methodist Episcopal Church; to resist, as it has uniformly from the first, the introduction of slavery among its members; to hold no connection with any ecclesiastical body that shall make non-slaveholding a condition of membership in the church, and to stand by the discipline as it is.

The conference also expressed its determination to favor the division of the general funds of the Church, as provided for in the plan of separation. The writer of the letter says, there was at no time any warmth of feeling or division of sentiment respecting these matters. It farther states that a pastoral address will be sent out in accordance with these facts. —Phila. North American.

Fashion--Dress.

"The estimated annual cost of dress in the United States, consequent upon the fluctuations of fashion, is $500,000,000, or about $25, for every soul in the union."

Silly butterflies! How inconsiderate! how foolish! how abominably wicked!!!

Ignorance, vice in every form, and agonies of physical suffering, enough to cause the very heavens to weep aloud, fill our land; and right in the midst of it all; $500,000,000—sufficient to educate every child, clothe and feed all the destitute: money sufficient to bring about the anticipated and long desired "Millenium" in many important particulars—this vast sum expended in offering sacrifices on the altar erected to that most whimsical and tyrannical goddess—fashion.

O that the Lord would deliver us from this fruitless, foolish, reckless servility!

The South a Field for Missionaries.

It is stated in a report of the New Orleans Presbytery, published in the New Orleans Protestant,—

"That there are within the bounds of the Presbytery, at least 100,000 colored persons, most of whom are slaves. It is a lamentable fact that by far the greater part of them, are famishing and perishing, for the bread of life, of the 100,000, it may be safely asserted, that 75,000 never hear the doctrine of salvation, through a crucified Savior, preached; and have none to tell them what they must do to be saved. And of the remaining 25,000 who occasionally hear the preaching of the gospel, not more than 5,000 enjoy its regular and constant administration."

Mode of increasing the Growth of Potatoes.

The flowers being cut off as they appeared on the plants, the number produced was much greater than where the blossoms had remained untouched. Early in October, the stems of the plant which had not borne flowers were strong and green; the other yellow, and in a state of decay. The plants which had been stripped of flowers produced (on the same space of ground) about four times the weight of large potatoes, very few small ones being found. Those on which flowers were left, produced but a small number of middle sized potatoes, with a great number of little ones, from the size of a common filbert to that of a walnut.—[New Genesee Farmer.

An undesirable way of Speaking.

A Christian brother, whom we highly esteem, though of another denomination, and whom we will not name in this connection, writes thus:

"The day of peaee and love among the followers of Christ MUST COME, or the Bible is not what it professes to be, the book of God, but a fable.

Why not rather say, the day of peaee and love must come. The Bible is not a fable, but the book of God. It has promised such a day, and it must come.

It may be true, that the former mode of speaking has the greatest strength of language; but the latter has the greater reverenee for the Divine word.

Geology and Infidelity.

Infidels and skepties are fond of appealing to the seienee of geology, as affording evidence against the truth of the Seriptures. How little they know whereof they affirm. What will they say to the faet, that there is not a living geologist of any celebrity who indulges skeptical views or disputes the Bible account of the creation? We have been assured by one of the most eminent scientific men in this country, who is in correspondence with almost all the geologists of any note on both sides of the Atlantic, that such is the fact, so far as his knowledge extends.—Let our young men who are so apt to be caught in this pseudo-scientific trap, take notice of this.—Ex. paper.

DISOBEDIENCE TO PARENTS.—A young man lately sentenced to the South Carolina Penitentiary for four years. When he was about to be sentenced, he stated publicly that his downward course began in disobedience to his parents—that he thought he knew as much of the world as his father did, and needed not his aid or advice; but that, as soon as he turned his back upon his home, then temptations came around him, like a drove of hyenas, and hurried him on to ruin. There is no place so safe and happy as a good home.

POETRY.

Jesus Christ came into the world to save Sinners.--1 Tim. i. 15.

Lo! at noon, 'tis sudden night!
Darkness covers all the day!
Rocks are rending at the sight;—
Sinners, can you tell me why?
What can all these wonders be?
Jesus dies on Calvary!

Stretch'd upon the cross, behold,
How his tender limbs are torn!
For a crown more rich than gold,
He has suffered one of thorn!
Cruel are the hands that bind
Thorns upon a brow so kind!

See! the blood is falling fast,
From his forehead, then his side!
Listen! he has breathed his last!
With a mighty groan he died!
Sinners, can you tell me why,
He should condescend to die?

He, who dwelt with God above,
Left his glory for the grave,
Came in pity and in love,
That the guilty he might save:
Down to this low world he came,
And life was offered in his name.

Come then, sinners! with your guilt;
Come to Jesus Christ, who died!
'Twas for you his blood was spilt!
For you the Lord was crucified!
Follow, to the liquid grave,
Him who died your souls to save!

SONGS OF INVITATION.

Voy'ger on life's troubled sea!
Sailing to eternity,
Turn from earthly things away—
Vain they are, and brief their stay:
Chaining down to earth the heart
Nothing lasting they impart—
Voy'ger, what are they to thee?
Leave them all and "follow me."

Trav'ler on the road of life!
Seeking pleasure—finding strife—
Know, the world can never give
Aught on which the soul can live:
Grasp not riches—seek not fame—
Shining dust nor sounding name!
Trav'ler, what are they to thee?
Leave them all and "follow me."

Pilgrim through this vale of tears!
Banish all thy doubt and fears;
Lift thine eyes—a heaven's above!
Where there dwells a God of love.
Wouldst thou favor with him find?
Keeps His counsels in thy mind.
Pilgrim, much He's done for thee!
Wilt thou then not "follow me?"

Wand'rer from the Father's throne!
Hasten back—thy errings own;
Turn—thy path leads not to heaven!
Turn—thy faults will be forgiven!
Turn and let thy songs of praise
Mingle with angelic lays.
Wand'rer, have they charms for thee?
Sure they have—then "follow me."

LITERARY NOTICES.

Missionary Map of the World.—We take pleasure in recommending to the attention of the community, and especially the friends of Missions, Mr. J. H. Colton's large Map of the World, just published. It is on cloth, each hemisphere six feet in diameter, so lettered and colored that its minute features may be readily distinguished at a distance, and so finished that it may be easily folded and conveyed from place to place, and suspended in any large room. As a work of art it is highly creditable to the publisher.

As a missionary map it is pre-eminently valuable. It presents to the eye at one view the moral and religious condition of the world, and the efforts that are now making for its evangelization. It is so colored that all the principal religions of the world, with the countries in which they prevail, and their relation, position, and extent, are distinguished at once, together with the principal stations of the various missionary societies, in our own and other countries, accurately laid down.

Hebrew Lexicon: By J. W. Gibbs, M. A., Professor of Sacred Literature in Yale College.

This invaluable work commends itself to every student, since, in condensed form, it presents what is requisite to obtain a good knowledge of the language. The kindred words from the Shemitic languages, as Syriac, Samaritan, Ethiopic, &c., which other Hebraic lexicographers have freely used, are entirely omitted. This removes the forbidding appearance of such lexicons, aids in remembering the meaning of words, and greatly facilitates their use.

On the 5th of April, of apoplexy, sister Catharine Hamilton, sister-in-law of brother John Mateer.

Sister C. H. embraced the Lord in 1830, in Lancaster county, Pa. Like converts of old, she was baptized and added to the church.—Her christian course was consistent and exemplary; and having lived a pious and devoted life, we may rest in the firm and well-grounded hope, that she, with all God's saints, shall be a participant in the "First Resurrection."

J. H. B.

In this borough, on Wednesday the 13th inst., sister Eliza Brown, consort of brother William Brown, in the 31st year of her age.

Sister Brown "obtained mercy, and found grace to help her," in the revival of religion in 1843. She and her husband were both soon after their conversion, baptized and added to the Church. From that time, she lived in newness of life. Her disease was a lingering consumption. She suffered much, but bore it with resignation. On Wednesday last about eleven o'clock A. M. she fell asleep in Jesus. May the Lord sanctify her removal to all her surviving relatives and friends!

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Change of Post Masters.

James Megary is appointed Post Master, at Whitehill, in the place of Thomas Craighead, sen., resigned. That office is very important at present, and will be a great accommodation to that densely populated neighborhood; and as our patrons are now getting our paper free of postage, we hope it may be some inducement to those in moderate circumstances, to subscribe for it; and those that are well off, can have the amount of the postage to apply to some charitable purpose.

To Post Masters.

The Post Masters who may have occasion to send back any numbers of the Advocate, will please not to spoil the papers by writing on them. Do as you would wish to be done by.

The Advocate.

The agents and friends of our little sheet, will please to bear in mind that this is the time—the very best time—to procure new subscribers. The volume is just commenced, and those who subscribe now, can have all the numbers from the beginning, and so have the whole volume complete. After a little while we may not have back numbers to supply them. We still need many more subscribers. Who will send us the best list, and the money within the limited time!

It will be recollected, that all the regular preachers belonging to the several Elderships, and those appointed by us as general agents, are the only accredited and responsible agents for this paper. To these, and to these alone, the subscribers will please to pay their subscriptions, at any time within the first three months. Those who have no access to any regularly authorized agent, will please remit to us, by mail, as per terms.

Agents at a distance, will please to exchange small notes for large ones, and try to send us par funds. Be sure always to state the names of the persons who are to be credited, and the name of the Post Office where the papers are lifted.

Meeting in Ephrata.

We assisted in holding a meeting in Ephrata, Lancaster county, on Saturday and Sabbath, the 16th and 17th of last month. The meeting was appointed by Elder Samuel Bowman, at the earnest solicitation of a few friends, in that neighborhood. Brother Bowman invited us to accompany him, which was cheerfully agreed to. We accordingly started for the meeting on Friday morning the 15th ult. But the day being rainy, we only went as far as Landisville, Lancaster county, and stayed over night with our old friend, J. C. Landis. Next morning we set out for Ephrata, where we arrived about noon, and put up with Mr. W. Konigmacher, who received us very cordially, and treated us kindly till ———.

Saturday evening we commenced meeting in the "Saal," or Chapel, of the convent belonging to the "Sieben Taeger," or Seventh-day Baptists.

This society was founded by one Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany, in 1728. The Kloster buildings were erected, and a monastic society established about the year 1733. For some years it seemed to prosper, but of late years it has dwindled away to a mere handful.

The few remaining members of this society, and a considerable number of the inhabitants of the neighborhood, assembled together on Saturday evening, and paid a respectful attention to the preaching of the word. At the close of the meeting, we appointed three services for the Lord's day. Accordingly, we had English preaching in the morning, and German in the afternoon and evening. After preaching in the evening, brother Bowman invited mourners out. One young man came forward, and meekly knelt at the altar for prayer. This caused great surprise and excitement; and, as it would seem, gave offence to the society and trustees of the convent fraternity. Whilst, therefore, in prayer for the young man, one of the trustees came up and requested brother Bowman to close the meeting, stating, it was contrary to their rules to allow such things in their chapel or house. In the meantime, the father of the young man came forward, took him up from his knees, and went home with him—not forgetting to notify us at the same time, to look out for another lodging—which was accordingly done. So our meeting closed rather uncerimoniously. Next morning we saw the young man alluded to, who thought God had measurably relieved his mind from the burden of sin. Our prayer is, that he may come out a true convert and a sound believer.

But is it true that we violated any known and established rule of the society, by praying with and for a penitent sinner? What rule of God, or the church, prohibits prayer for the sick—either for the bodily or sin-sick? Praying for penitent sinners, is neither unreasonable nor unscriptural. Its propriety and utility may be argued,—

1st. From its beneficial results. It rouses the energies, quickens the zeal, and strengthens the faith of ministers and of the church. It mortifies pride, subdues shame, and overcomes fear, in seeking and weeping penitents. Thousands have sought the Lord in secret for a long time, under the influence of shame and fear, and found Him not; but no sooner than they come out openly to receive the prayers of the church, they obtained "redemption through Immanuel's blood, even the forgiveness of sins." A means, therefore, which God has owned and blessed in all ages, to the saving of unnumbered thousands, no one can make light of, despise and repudiate with impunity. But we argue its propriety,—

2dly. From Bible authority. Here we find both precept and example for it.

First. We have precept. God has made it the duty of penitent sinners to call upon His name; but he has left it optional with them to do it, wherever they see proper, either in private or in public. Ps. 50: 15. Jer. 29: 12. Matt. 7: 11. Rom. 10: 12, 13. 1 Tim. 2: 3.

He has, also, made it the duty of his ministers and people, to pray for "all men;" (meaning penitents as well as others) but he has left it to their own choice to do it, when and where they chose. 1 Ps. 2: 8. Ez. 36: 37. Matt. 18: 19. Ch. 21: 22. John 14: 13, 14. 1 Tim. 2: 1. 1 John 5: 14, 15.

But we have also examples for this practice. Abraham prayed for Abimeleck; Gen. 20: 7. Moses prayed for rebellious Israel; Num. 21: 7. Samuel prayed for guilty and penitent Israel; 1 Sam. 7: 5, 8. Ch. 12: 19. The old prophet of Judah, prayed for the idolatrous Jeroboam, when God withered his hand, as a punishment for his sin; 1 Kings 13: 6. Job prayed for Eliphaz and his two friends, and God accepted his prayer; Job 42: 7, 8. Jeremiah prayed for the hypocritical captains, and the remnant of Judah; Jer. 42: 2, 4. Peter and John prayed for Simon Magus. The centurion prayed for his sick servant; Matt 8: 5, 7. Jairus prayed for his dying daughter; Luke 8:41. The Syrophenician woman prayed for her daughter; Mark 7: 26; &c. &c. Hence, then, we see that this practice is strongly supported, both by precepts and examples.

Another fact may be mentioned here. Most, if not all, the primitive converts, were public converts. If, therefore, the Apostles and first ministers prayed for penitent sinners at all, they must have prayed for them publicly; because there was no time, in many instances, for secret or private prayer. But, moreover, we plead for this practice,—

3dly. Because, of the well-known fact, that the wicked, false professors and hypocrites, oppose it. What is from men, the wicked will usually approve of; whilst that which is from heaven, they will oppose and condemn. Now this is precisely so, with regard to the practice of praying for sinners. The Devil and wicked men have uniformly and universally opposed this, with every other efficient means and measure, for the conversion and salvation of men's souls. Hence, let those who suffer for well-doing, take it patiently, and resolve to persevere, knowing that in due time they shall reap (a harvest of souls, as well as other things) if they faint not. So long, then, as God will deign to bless, and put his broad seal of approbation upon this labor of love, let the sons of Belial and false brethren, rise up and oppose as much as they please; yet, let the saints of the Most High, who know the worth of prayer, "remain steadfast, immoveable, and always abound in this, and every other good work of the Lord, inasmuch as they know that their labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. 15: 58.

Restoration to the Church.

We are requested to state, for the information of those whom it may concern, that the difficulties existing between brother Levi Campbell and the "Church of God," at Lancaster, and which resulted in his expulsion, have been amicably and satisfactorily adjusted, and that he is again restored to membership in said church, as a worthy brother.

Brother Campbell wishes it understood, however, that he still believes the Advent of the Saviour near. At the same time, he wishes to be tolerant. As he was never blamed for believing that doctrine, so he does not feel disposed to separate from his brethren, and unchristianizing those who may chose to differ from him on that subject; but to exercise, as it becometh saints, a spirit of union, toleration and christian charity.

Our esteemed brother CAMPBELL has now taken, in our opinion, the true ground; which he, and all the brethren who grew strong in the faith of MILLER'S system of Adventism, ought to have taken from the beginning.—Had they done so, all controversy and schisms would have been avoided. Or could our erring brethren yet learn to see the error of their way, in separating themselves from the church, and be induced to copy the laudable example of our young brother C., "times and seasons" in their religious latitude and longitude, would soon change for the better. Come back, then, brethren, and take your former position in the "Church of God," where you were born, and nourished, and brought up. The "Church of God" holds the true advent doctrine, as taught in the Holy scriptures; and in addition to that, all the holy counsel of God, or precious truth as it is in Jesus. And where, let me ask, my brethren, where can you find a safer and better place to be, when Jesus comes, than in the Church of God?

War Intelligence.

THE war with Mexico is assuming a serious and thrilling aspect. The war spirit seems to have roused the energies of both nations, so that great and active preparations are being made for carrying on the war.

General GAINES, the commander of the Western Division of the U. S. Army, has made a requisition upon the Governors of the following States, to furnish re-enforcing troops to proceed as soon as they can be got ready, to the Rio Grande, viz:

Tennessee,	4	regs. of	600 men each,	2,400
Kentucky,	4	do.	do. do.	2,400
Missouri,	2	do.	do. do.	1,200
Mississippi,	2	do.	do. do.	1,200
Alabama,	2	do.	do. do.	1,200
Lonisiana,	1	do.	1,000 cavalry
or mouuted gun-men, - - -				1,000
Total of requisition, - - -				9,400

A great number of volunteer companies have offered themselves to the government, to serve in the U. S. Army. Among the many who have tendered their services, are the company of the Harrisburg Rifle, under the command of Captain Dr. SEILER, of this borough.

Letters from the seat of war, since our last issue, bring the news that another battle has been fought on the Rio Grande, in which the Mexicans lost about twelve hundred men, and the Americans about two hundred. What mourning and lamentation this sad intelligence must produce among the kindred and friends of those who have fallen! May the Lord soon deliver us from the fearful calamities of war!

The Pulpit Cyclopedia.

THIS is one of the best works, of the kind, now extant. The dispositions are pithy, short and well arranged. The essays in the latter part of the work, are selected from the writings of the most eminent and pious men of the age, and they embody nearly the whole system of pastoral theology. Every young minister of the Gospel would do well to procure and study this excellent book.

Clark's Ferry Bridge.

THIS noble structure, as we noticed in our last, was destroyed by fire on Thursday the 14th of May.

This bridge was first built in 1827, destroyed by a storm in 1836, and rebuilt in 1837. It was twenty-one hundred feet in length, and the rebuilding cost, including piers and all, about ninety thousand dollars.

About four hundred feet of this bridge, were carried off by the great freshet in March last. Since that time, steamboats have been used to tow the canal boats across the river. The sparks of the steamboats fired the bridge, and as the wind was very high at the time, the bridge fell in twenty-three minutes after it caught on fire.

The piers of the burnt part, it is said, are but slightly injured. The bridge will be rebuilt this summer, at a probable cost of about forty thousand dollars.

The Harrisburg Bridge.

THE stockholders of this bridge will hold a meeting on the 16th of June next, at the toll gate on this side of the river, on the subject of rebuilding the bridge under the new charter.

The company has succeeded, at length, at a cost of several thousand dollars, to complete the Rope Ferry; but it is not yet fully ascertained whether it will answer a good purpose at all stages of water.

Delegates to the World's Convention.

THE Charles Street M. E. Church, of the city of Baltimore, have appointed COMFORT TILLANY to represent them in the London Convention.

The other churches of said connection, in Baltimore, have appointed the Rev. G. M. ROBERTS, M. D., to represent them in the Convention.

The Penn'a State Temperance Society, have appointed Prof. CALDWELL, of Carlisle, and the Rev. ALBERT BARNES, Rev. THOMAS BRAINERD, and Mr. L. JEWELL, of Phil'a., delegates to said World's Convention.

The United Brethren in Christ propose sending Bishop HANBY, as a delegate to the aforesaid Convention. Several ministers and circuits have pledged themselves to stand for various sums, from five to twenty-five dollars, towards defraying his expenses.

Fatal Duel.

A DUEL was fought on the 15th ult., at Carlisle, between General ARMOR and Colonel NOBLE, in which the latter was shot dead instantly, the ball passing through his head.—Col. NOBLE was buried on Saturday morning at 9 o'clock; and Gen. ARMOR has been taken and lodged in jail.

When will the time come that this barbarous, murderous and God-provoking practice, shall be eschewed and repudiated, as an evil not to be named among a civilized and christian people? Such criminal acts and affairs ought to be punished with imprisonment for life; or which, perhaps, would be better with a service in the army for life. Such a penalty might soon check the abomination, and bear some proportion to the heinious nature and magnitude of the crime.

☞ We stop the press to say that this story is now contradicted.

License Question in New York.

THE right of selling ardent spirits, as a beverage, was tested at the polls, by a vote of the people, in the State of New York, on the 22d ult., and resulted, it is said, in favor of temperance and no liquor selling, in not less than nine-tenths of the towns and election districts. We hope this glorious victory (more brilliant than Gen. TAYLOR'S) will be remembered by the friends of temperance, economy and good order, when the time comes for deciding the license law question, by a vote of the people, in those counties who have or may yet obtain a law for it in this State.

Campmeeting Appointments.

THE brethren on the several stations and circuits, within the bounds of the East Pa. Eldership, who intend holding campmeetings this season, are requested to send in their intentions and notices to the Standing Committee, in order that they may duly arrange and publish them. The brethren in the West are advised to do the same.

New Subscribers.

NEW subscribers are beginning to come in, especially from some parts down east from this. We hope they will continue coming from all quarters. Let there be a general and simultaneous effort made, and let us see how many more can be procured and sent in during this month.

We feel thankful to brothers E. H. THOMAS, M. W. MAY, JOHN FUNK and others, for the handsome list of new subscribers which they have sent us.

The Weather, River and Crops.

THE weather, for the last two weeks, has been warm and showery. There have been several very heavy rains, and some hail.

The Susquehanna river has kept up in excellent rafting order, and a great quantity of lumber has floated down to market.

The crops, in general, look fine, and promise an abundant harvest. The grass crop, especially, will be very heavy.

Pulpit Dispositions—No. 3.

Thema*—Daniel's Character and Fortitude.

TEXT—"Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." Dan. 6: 10.

Consider,—

I. The religious character of Daniel.
II. The manner in which it was tested.
III. The issue, or result of that test.

I. The religious character of Daniel.

The knowledge and worship of God, impart to man a religious character.

But as there is a great difference in men's knowledge of God, and also in their manner of worshiping Him, so there is, likewise, a great difference in the religious character of men. It is good or bad, in proportion as their knowledge and worship of God is right or wrong. Hence, Daniel's character was good; because he both knew and worshiped God aright.

1. He knew God right; that is, theoretically and experimentally. Chap. 5: 11 and 14.

2. He worshiped God right; that is, "in spirit and truth." God has not only commanded the duty, but prescribed the manner of worshipping him. This prescribed manner, Daniel observed. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed," &c.

Here observe,—

1. The place where he worshiped God: "His house."

2. The humble posture in which he worshiped: "He bowed his knees."

3. The frequency of his worship: "Three times a day."

4. The parts or matter of his worship: "He prayed and gave thanks."

5. The constancy and regularity of his worship: "As aforetime."

II. The manner in which his religion was tested."

1. By being thrown among strangers in a strange land. Chap. 5: 13.

2. By elevation to civil office. Chap. 2: 48. Chap. 5: 29. Chap. 6: 2.

3. By his official business. Verse 2 and 4.

4. By the envy, opposition and stratagem of his enemies. Verse 4—7.

5. By the King's decree. Verse 9, 12 & 13. This royal statute finished the climax of his trials. This brought the test of his religion to a speedy crisis. Mark, now,—

III. The issue, or result of this severe test.

1. Daniel's heoric firmness and unshaken constancy in religion. "When he knew that the decree was signed, he went," &c.

2. His miraculous preservation and deliverance. Verses 22, 23.

3. The downfall and destruction of his enemies. Verse 24.

4. His own honor and advancement.—Verse 28.

5. The advancement and spread of religion he possessed throughout the Babylonish empire. Verses 25, 26 & 27.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

A word to the Rich.

"BE RICH IN GOOD WORKS." 1 Tim. 6: 18.

To be rich in good works, is the greatest wealth a person can possess. By being rich in good works, the Apostle does not mean that we should be rich in silver, gold, lands, &c., but that our riches should consist in the proper use of these things, if a man have them at his disposal. The man, therefore, who does not make a proper use of his earthly possessions, is far from being rich in good works. A man having "this world's goods," may consider himself rich; but unless it be savored with a determination to "do good" with it, by a readiness to distribute, and a willingness to communicate, he is not truly and substantially rich. Indeed, the man who has in abundance the good things of this world, is poorer than the man who has nothing above a sufficiency of food and raiment, provided he (the rich man) is not a "good stewart" over that which God has given him, or suffered him to obtain. So, then, if a man who is called rich, in a worldly point of view, wishes to be truly rich, he must be a "good stewart"—he must make just appropriations of his possessions—he must, "according to his ability," be "ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Those who do this, are rich, truly rich—"rich in good works;" they are "laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

But we fear there are vastly more who are rich in things pertaining to this life, than there are those who are rich in the sense alluded to. But the grand reason of this is, those that have great possessions, most of them, also, have narrow hearts. By all appearance, riches and a close heart, go hand in hand; there appears to be some affinity between the two, or else riches begets stinginess. But who is in the fault of this?—the money or the heart? We should suppose the heart. Though "the love of money is the root of all evil," yet the heart cherishes that love. And since money bears the same affinity to the heart, whether loved by it or not, evidently the heart must be to blame. Oh, thou wicked, depraved and corrupt heart, to cherish a principle which is the very "root of all evil!" No wonder thou cans't not be rich in good works, Oh, thou vain mortal, so long as thou hast dwelling in thee, this monster evil!

But this monster-head will rise and ask, how will a man get money or riches, unless there be first a love created for it within? and how can he be rich in good works, unless he have money or riches?

To the first question we would answer, that men can become rich, or obtain more or less of this world's goods, without giving way to the inordinate love of money which characterizes some people. To the second question we would answer, that the idea to become rich in good works, should not cause us to cherish those inordinate desires, which frequently prompt men on to make unlawful sales, bargains, &c. This would be doing evil that good might come. And, indeed, the scriptures do not require a christian to have great possessions. Some will be poor—others rich, while the world stands. Let all those whom the good Lord sees fit to prosper, in temporal affairs, take heed that they hang not their hearts upon the world. This approaches the command Paul gave to Timothy. He says: "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." Paul's object here is, to impress upon the mind of Timothy, the great importance of being liberal, so that he (Timothy) may teach others, also, how to avoid the evils consequent upon a course characteristic of the miser. I suppose in the days of Paul, there were not wanting those (even as there are now) whose hearts and hands remained closed against all objects of pity. And nothing is more disgusting to the generous-hearted christian, than to see those around him manifest such a penurious spirit. The open-hearted christian would almost as soon be in the company of the man who swears occasionally, (though this is very unpleasant to him) than to be in the company of the man who makes a profession of religion, but is miserly, stingy and close-fisted—whose bowels of compassion are ever shut, and closed up! Indeed, I think, there is as much chance for the swearer to enter heaven, as there is for the narrow-hearted worldling, however much adieu the latter may make about religion. A man may sing, pray and preach, too, till he be grey-headed, if he have great possessions, and don't give in proportion to his possessions, to every good cause that may come under his notice, it is as impossible for him to enter the kingdom of heaven, as it is for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle. "To distribute"—"to communicate," according to our ability, is a command, and, therefore, a duty. And if we are not dutiful in this respect, we are just as guilty as we would be by not being dutiful in any other command. And the non-adherence, or violation to any command, will evidently exclude a man from heaven. So, then, in plain words, the man who does not do his duty in point of giving, as God has prospered him, is guilty. Guilty of what? Guilty of not doing his duty; therefore, guilty in having a condemned conscience. And can such a man get to heaven?

But, you will ask, what are we to understand by a man giving according to his ability? We are to understand by it, that if the man with one thousand dollars, gives ten dollars to a good cause, then the man with ten thousand dollars, should give one hundred dollars. Not so? This would be giving according to every man's ability. But you may answer, that the interests and demands of people, are not always in proportion to their principles. True, this may sometimes be the case. But it certainly is not, generally speaking, the case. And I am sure the demands and interests of people, do not vary so much in proportion to their principles, that the man who is worth ten thousand dollars, can only afford to give twenty dollars to that man's ten dollars, who has only one thousand dollars. But we very frequently see the man with one thousand dollars, give twenty dollars, whilst the man worth ten thousand dollars, only gives ten dollars. According to this ratio and calculation, the man with one thousand dollars, gives twenty times more than the man with ten thousand dollars. Thus, you perceive, how much more the man with a small capital sometimes contributes, than the man with a large capital. We very frequently see the preceding rule carried out by the rich, when they are called upon to subscribe for the relief of the poor, for the support of the ministry, &c.

How often do we see subscription lists going the rounds, to solicit moneys for the support of some good cause, where we see the name of some rich merchant or farmer with fifty cents, just above or below the name of some poor laborer with one dollar, who has nothing above a sufficiency of food and raiment; yea, we have seen it worse yet than this: the rich sometimes come with their pennies, of which the poorer class are ashamed. This is condescending to notice little things; but these little things are facts; and it does not require a very close observer to notice or discern these little things. We mention this to put scanty givers--and who give grudgingly—to shame!

We do not say this is invariably the case; but it is too often the case. If the rich would subscribe and contribute for the relief of the poor--for the support of the ministry—and for the support of the different christian institutions in the world, which have for their object the general good of society, according to their ability, as the poor generally do, there would be less suffering, less ignorance, less superstition, less misery, and less of every evil afloat in the world. But as long as people would sooner see the dollars rolling into their own hands and pockets, than see them rolling out to carry forward the REDEEMER'S cause, so long the cause of God will suffer. But the day will come, when those who shut up their bowels of compassion against all christian institutions and objects of pity, shall hear the doleful words: "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your wishes are completed, and your garments are moth-eaten; your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire." Why this awful denunciation against the rich? Because they "have heaped treasure together for the last days."

By this, people ought to learn not to lay up treasure on earth, where moth and rust does corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but to lay up treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust does corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." But instead of laying up this never-fading, invaluable treasure in heaven, the resting place, the abiding home of the christian, many lay up treasure on earth, where moth and rust does corrupt, and where the weary "pilgrims and strangers have no continuing city." Seeing, then, riches decay and pass away, let us not fasten our hearts upon them; but let us well consider that "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, and that God has placed us stewarts over the earth and the fulness thereof, that, by being good stewarts, we may "be rich in good works." Paul—1 Tim. 6: 18.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Religion the True Source of Happiness.

THE hopes of men, when stayed upon earthly things, are indeed vain. And although we may sometimes be almost led to think differently, yet the event will prove that all temporal things are "vanity and vexation of spirit." Our fondest hopes and brightest prospects may, in a few fleeting hours, be blighted by the black winds of adversity, or turned into sadness, by disappointment, sickness and death. We have this sight of earthly things hourly brought before our eyes, and yet we look thereon with an indifference almost stoical; and the frequency of their occurrence may account, in part, for this general apathy.

The whole world, in one united body, is seeking after pleasure and enjoyment. Some seek it in the ball-room, in loose revelry, and midnight riot, worshipping at the shrine of fashion, with far less consistency than the Hindoo Pagans, when they dance around the car of Juggernaut. Others seek it at the gambling board, wasting their time, losing their money, and ruining their characters. Others seek it at the tippling house, drinking the poisonous draught offered there, for their speedy and inevitable destruction. But these all see in the end, and often when too late, that they have been upon the wrong path to find true happiness. Thus do the young count upon much pleasure and length of days, but their earthly enjoyment is commonly overbalanced by distress and vexation, and their expected long life is crowned with an early tomb. And by this we learn that we need expect no substantial pleasure here; because disappointment meets us at every step, foes surround us, and the friends we took to be unflinching, turn and forsake us.

In moralizing upon this momentous subject, we are brought to ask, if earth and the things thereof are so deceitful and wavering, where can we look for stability and everlasting pleasure, where our prospects shall be fully realized, and our hopes can be with safety centred! The word of God, the pillar of truth, gives us an answer: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Hence we should always place our affections upon "things above;" and if we trust in this holy counsel, and live devoted to God, we will find in Him a friend who will support and comfort us under every trial, and whose friendship will last when the earth shall be wrapt in the flames of the last day. And though threatening clouds may overhang us, and the fierce blasts of calumny and persecution may assail us and threaten to mar our peace, yet in God we have a true friend and supporter, who will impart to His people a sufficient measure of strength to comfort them through the darkness of affliction; whose friendship will not cease, and whose promises cannot fail, if we love and serve Him, and put our entire trust in Him. As rational beings, we ought to weigh these matters properly, live conformable to God's will, and we will not be disappointed. Let us "lay up for ourselves treasure in heaven;" let our affections be seated there, and we will then enjoy what so many seek, but never find, because "they do not seek aright"—true happiness and the peaceful influence of religion.

Letter from Elder William Hinny.

Mechanicsburg, May 16, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I wish you success in the task and responsibility that you have taken upon yourself as editor. I have just taken a notion to write a few lines in favor of the Church Advocate; for it has been a welcome messenger to me and my family, and others that I heard say so: besides, I doubt not it has been so to many (if not all) the brethren and sisters, preachers and people. Without something of the kind, I cannot see how we could get along. And as we have been without a paper for some length of time, we know the want of it; and I hope we have learned so to appreciate the worth of it, that we will now try to sustain it,—

1st. By paying for it ourselves.

2d. By getting all the subscribers we can.

3d. By collecting its dues; (those whom may be appointed) and,

4th. By sending them in (when collected) to the proper person.

I would further say, let us not wait to the utmost extent of the limited time to pay in, but let those of us who can spare one dollar and twenty-five cents, send it in before the third number comes out; and if we have to send by mail, we can send one dollar without any inconvenience, and pay the balance some other time, and in some other way, or four might unite in sending five dollars. This, perhaps, would be the better way. For let us recollect how the paper is started. There are no special funds to resort to. It must support itself, or some person or persons must support it for us; (I say us, who are the readers of the Advocate) and this, I trust, we are not willing should be done. Let us, then, come up shoulder to shoulder, for there is abundant ability, if there is a willingness to act.

I am well pleased with the title, though I can say, with yourself, that I had no objection to the former one—the Gospel Publisher.

To the subscribers of the 'Gospel Publisher.'

Formerly, the editors would have to dun you, and call until they could call no more; and for some time past, we hope the agents have called on you, and, we trust, they have not called in vain, with some of you at least. But now in addition to all the calls you have had, we, the committee, or some of us, would give you another call, and say, to those of you who have not paid off all arrearages, come, brethren, stir up! You know the affairs of that paper are to be settled up as soon as possible, and all the dues of the office are wanted, and a little more. So we hope there will be no delay in the matter. Try and pay up between this and harvest.

To the Collectors.

Dear Brethren:—We hope you have not neglected your duty in calling on the people; for you are acquainted with the importance of having the accounts of the paper settled up. Let us hear from you, and send in what you have collected to brother Joseph Ross, or myself. Those agents who have left their former field of labor, should have given their successors the list of their circuit. If any have not done so, try and send them back.—The old collectors that are in arrears, will please do their duty, and pay up without delay.

WILLIAM HINNY.

Letter from Brother John Soule.

Perry County, May 18, 1846.

My Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

Permit me to address you for information, upon what I conceive to be rather a critical matter, and one directly derogative to your ministeral character, if reports, such as are circulated in this section, be correct. It is reported with us, by Mr. Hazlett and Mr. Bozers, Second Advent ministers, that you were instrumental in the expulsion of Mr. Adams, of Shiremanstown, from the Eldership of the "Church of God," on purpose to defraud him (Adams) out of his salary, when he had made ready to go to the State of Ohio. Now, for the sake of God's cause in this neighborhood, and to remove the doubts and suspicions of the credulous, please give us information on the above matters; and oblidge

Yours, in christain affection,

JOHN SOULE.

REPLY TO THE FOREGOING.

We state for the information of all whom it may concern, that the reports, as stated in the foregoing letter, are base and slanderous falsehoods; and none but base and malicious persons can make themselves guilty of giving currency to such vile and wilful detraction. I refer you to brother Henry Wingert, of Landisburg, for further information.—Editor.

Letter from Elder M. F. Snavely.

Linglestown, May 22, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

Having noticed in the first number of your welcome guest, the Church Advocate, a solicitation to the "true, firm and unflinching advocates of the church, and the right ways of the Lord," "to take up their pens and favor you with their communications," I now take up mine; for I wish it understood that I claim to be one of that number; and, therefore, I shall venture to offer you a few lines for insertion in your paper, and to which I earnestly solicit the attention of my ministerial brethren in Ohio.

Last fall there was a brother from Ohio, a preacher among the "Evangelical Association," introduced to me, and we had a short interview. Since that time, he has written a letter to his friends in west Hanover, Dauphin county, in which he very earnestly and pressingly invites some of the preachers of the "Church of God," (such, in particular, as could preach English and German) to come out to them, and preach for them—that not only himself, but also others beside him, are ready to receive us. He writes there are seven or more places open for our reception.—His views are, I think, the same as ours, as it respects the things of God. This brother's name is Samuel Measy. His place of residence is three miles north from Baltimore, Fairfield county. Ohio. Brethren, of Ohio, can't some one of you that can preach English and German, visit him or them, and open a mission or circuit there? He very earnestly requests it. I rather promised to visit them, or send some one; but I cannot now make it suit. I heartily wish, however, that some one of the brethren in Ohio would go. Write to him. brethren. His Post Office address is Baltimore, Fairfield county, Ohio. Brother Measy was formerly from Schuylkill county, and, I think, a worthy brother.

In conclusion, I heartily congratulate the Western Pennsylvania Eldership, for their laudable resolution, passed in reference to "secret societies," which, if carried out, must, doubtless, meet the approbation of God, and save them from many evils, which must necessarily arise from the toleration of them. God bless you, brethren, and "keep you unspotted from the world." I think you are keeping in view the fourth chapter of the Epistle of James.

M. F. SNAVELY.

Temperance Societies.

Some professors of religion refuse to sign the temperance pledge, because they fear that the drunkard, after he has become a sober man, will settle down upon the bed af morality, and rest there for his hopes of salvation.—Now suppose this were so; would it not be still a gain to the world to have him live and die a sober man, rather than a drunkard?—Most certainly. Only see what earthly misery is occasioned in families, by the intemperance of a husband and father. Well, this misery is done away by the agency of the temperance reformation. Is this not worthy of our consideration? Certainly it is. And we should give our influence to this cause, if we saw no other good arising from it: for our blessed Saviour stooped to do temporal good to the people, in his sojourn "here below;" and we are to follow in his footsteps. But there are other considerations involved in the matter. The Bible says: "No drunkard shall inherit eternal life." And we know that very few actual drunkards repent, while hundreds of reformed inebriates have turned to God, and died happy during the past few years, of the temperance enterprise. Then we see that eternal, as well as temporal good, results from it; and yet some stand aloof, for fear no eternal good might be done. All who have eyes cannot help seeing, that both can be and is done; and to aid in it, is to do good; and to "know to do good, and do it not, is sin;" and not to do our "Masters will," which is to do all manner of good, subjects us to "be beaten with many stripes." We should not deal out wrath upon the poor drunkard, but pity and use every possible available means to reclaim him. He is a slave to his tyrant master, Spirit Alcohol, and we should break his shackles and help to free him. To stand aloof, is acting like the Priest and Levite, who passed the man who had fallen among thieves; but to act is to do like the good Samaritan! Oh! pity the drunkard, for he has fallen among thieves, who will rob him and his family of their earthly all, and eternity's blessings.

Visit to Orwigsburg.

Brother Winebrenner:—

A few weeks ago, I visited the brethren at Orwigsburg, Schuylkill county. I found them enjoying peace and harmony in the church. I preached for them twice—once at brother J. Moyer's, and once at brother George Kimmel's, and was much pleased with the apparent zeal manifested among them.

I must, however, be permitted to say, that I am sorry to find the misunderstanding between brother Kimmel and brother Dobson, still uncompromised. This seems to be a barrier in the way of the good work. Why does not the Western Penn'a. Eldership urge the settlement? The charges seem to be of such a nature, as to require a settlement.—Brethren, do not suffer these two brothers to go to the judgment while unreconciled. If they cannot meet, why do they not correspond by letter, and settle it in that way? There seems to be culpable neglect in the matter somewhere. The Lord help us to do right!

Filing and Binding Papers.

I have the first four volumes of the quarto-form, "Gospel Publisher," and would not take double their subscription price for them. So you, reader, if you take the "Church Advocate," use it carefully, and at the end of the volume have it bound.

No book is more interesting (the Bible excepted) than a volume of an old newspaper. This hint will, perhaps, lead many to file and bind their paper. Keep them from the flies and clean.

Letter from Shippensburg.

Shippensburg, May 22, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

In the region where I live, we have been much pleased with the arrival and appearance of the Church Advocate; the contents of which seems to give general satisfaction to its numerous readers. This moral organ which has been put in motion for the benefit of the church, and the community generally, can be enlarged and kept in motion by the energies of God's people. Every one who loves the cause of God, and wishes to see the church rise in dignity and usefulness, ought to put to a helping hand. There is room for young and old, rich and poor, to bear some humble part in this good work. Many persons destroy their own usefulness, and embarrass the operations of the church, by an obstinate adherence to their own notions. If things are not managed or done just as they think best, they will stand aloof, or use their influence against those who are trying to do all the good they can, in the best possible way. Such persons can seldom co-operate with their brethren in works of love, mercy and usefulness. They must do every thing in their own way, or not at all. There is a sort of selfish religious feeling, which seems to stop with the cultivation of personal experience. Yet, if our religion stops there, it is good for nothing; so far, at least, as regards the great object of philanthropy, for which the church is sustained. We must look beyond ourselves, and labor to promote the welfare of others as well as our own.—Hence, it is written: "Let every one of us please his neighbor, for his good to edification;" Rom. 15: 2. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man, also, on the things of others;" Phil. 2: 4. The christian religion breathes a spirit of expansive benevolence. So, likewise, will every true christian. Unlike the painted hypocrite, who is a kind of religious hypochondric, continually espying death in every sympton, while he refuses the only remedy which infinite wisdom has found to heal his spiritual madness. He looks away from himself, keeps his eye steadily upon Christ, and goes about his master's business, seeking continually to know what he can do for the glory of God, and the temporal, as well as the spiritual, salvation of men. O! for the spirit of disinterested benevolence! Lord, give it to me, and give it to my brethren.

ANTI-PENULTIMA.

Explanation.

HARRISBURG, May 21, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENER:—

As that part of the report of the Standing Commmittee, published in the CHURCH ADVOCATE, (number one) which refers to my separation from the body to which you are attached, is calculated to make a false impression, and lead the readers thereof to suppose that I desired to withdraw without settling my account with the printing establishment, permit me, through the same medium, to inform the public that my account with said establishment was settled, the books audited, and all things properly adjusted, by the committee appointed by the last Eldership for that special purpose, previous to my resignation.

That this is the fact, the following, which is a copy of the certificate I received from the auditing committee, will abundantly testify:

"The committee appointed to settle with GEO. MCCARTNEY, the editor of the "Gospel Publisher," hereby certify that they have attended to the same, and find a balance of one hundred and-sixty one dollars and seventy-nine cents in his favour.

"JOHN WINEBRENNER,
"JOHN C. OWENS.

"December 27, 1845."

My resignation was not tendered until the 3d of March, 1846; consequently, it is very clear that I settled my account with the printing establishment, some time previous to my withdrawal.

I regret much, that the manner in which the Standing Committee has presented my case to the public, makes it necessary for me to offer this apparent defence; but a just regard for the good opinions and esteem of my fellow-men, and a due respect for my own character, seem to demand it. I sincerely hope, however, that no subsequent act, either on their part or that of others, will call for a repetition of this (to me) unpleasant duty.

Respectfully and fraternally yours,

GEO. McCARTNEY.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

IN explication of the foregoing, (explanation) and in justification of the Standing Committee, in giving the notice refered to, we would merely say that brother MCCARTNEY is in error,—

1st. With regard to the nature of the settlement of his account. The committee appointed by the late Eldership to settle his account, simply cast up the Day-Book accounts of receipts and disbursments, according to his own showing, and struck the balanee; which, as stated in the certificate above given, amounted to one hundred and sixty-one dollars and seventy-nine cents. But as it respects the subscribers' accounts, and his final settlement with the Board, the committee had nothing to do. "The books and accounts of the establishment, therefore, were not audited, and all things properly adjusted, before his resignation," as above asserted. It was not till the subscriber's accounts were made out, and presented for settlement, (during the winter) that inaccuracies and mistakes were discovered. All that the Standing Committee ask, is, that these mistakes, so far as it can be clearly shown and ascertained that they are such, be rectified. Again: brother MCCARTNEY is in error,—

2d. As it regards the effects of the report, in his case, made by the Standing Committee. He is inclined to think, "the manner in which his case is presented to the public," is calculated to make "false impressions" and lead to wrong conclusions. We think otherwise. The committee have simply said that they are not disposed to give him, as he requested, a speedy and honorable dismissal, before his account was finally settled. They have not said, nor do they pretend to say, whether all the complaints, as to errors and mistakes in the subscribers' accounts, are well founded or not. But they hold, and give it as their opinion, that it would be inexpedient, because, contrary to established usages, to give brother MCCARTNEY, or any other person, an honorable dismissal before things are fairly and finally matured for such an act. We hope it may all come right upon a final settlement.

Letter from Elder T. Strohm.

ELIZABETHTOWN, May 22, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I thought I would suggest a plan to you and the brethren, for raising funds to send a delegate to the World's Convention, which is to meet in London in August next. I consider this matter of great importance, and I think it should be unhesitatingly attended to. My plan, then, would be for each preacher to raise as much on his circuit or station, by collections or voluntary donations, as he can. If only sixty preachers would raise, on an average, two dollars each, it would amount to one hundred and twenty dollars; and I think this could be accomplished without any trouble or difficulty. I, for my part, would obligate myself to raise at least five dollars. I hope the brethren will take this matter into timely consideration; and if some one has a better plan to offer than this one, let us hear from them soon. All I want is, that something definitely may be done.

Your brother, &c.,

T. STROHM.

Letter from Brother J. Foreman.

FAYETTEVILLE, May 10, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This is to inform you that I this day received the first number of the CHURCH ADVOCATE, and that I am much pleased with it. I wish you much success in your undertaking the publishing of a paper for the church, which is very much needed.

The terms of the Advocate, I see, are ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, in advance, or within the first three months; otherwise the papers of all non-paying subscribers, will be stopped. This is as it should be. And as I wish to have the paper sent on to me, and to read its contents with a clear conscience, I send you enclosed the pay for it. I hope that others will do the same, and that the paper will be liberally sustained.

Yours, in love,

JOHN FOREMAN.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

A Negro Mathematician.—In New Orleans there is a slave, 20 years old, who has been almost an idiot from his birth, except in making arithmetical calculations. From hearing the children of his master first recite the multiplication table, he gave the first glimpse of a reasoning or calculating mind, and has since displayed a most astonishing knowledge of figures. He can answer any question in the rules of addition, subtraction, division, or multiplication, no matter how complicated the figures may be, and can give the correct result before the questioner can put down the figures of the sum, or its answer is proposed.

The Temple at Nauvoo.—We are gratified to learn that there is a prospect of converting the Temple, recently erected at Nauvoo by the Mormons, to a most useful and charitable purpose. A wealthy gentleman from the South arrived here a few days since, to purchase the Temple, if it can be bought for a reasonable price. His object is to convert it into an asylum for destitute widows and females, and to purchase lands and town lots, and endow it out of the rents of them.—St. Louis Republican.

Pestilence in Ceylon.—At the last accounts the cholera was raging frightfully on this island. Many were dying; and great consternation prevailed among the inhabitants. The natives were about to hold a great festival in honor of the goddess of pestilence, at which a grand offering of fowls and rams was to be presented to the goddess to propitiate her favor. The ceremonies were to be closed by the sending forth of a seape-goat, bearing on his person the dreadful pestilence. By this means they expected to rid themselves of the terrible scourge. Some £300 had already been collected to defray the expenses of this grand sacrifice.—N. Y. Evan.

Emigrants to California.—There were in St. Louis, on the 14th of April, a number of gentlemen on their way to Independence or Weston, to join a company which is going out to California. If the grass was sufficient for their horses and stock, they were to have started on their long journey by the 15th of May. The company consists of about 300 men. The largest number of them go to remain in that country; others only to see it. The companies for California will follow the Oregon route to Fort Hall, when they will diverge in the direction of the Great Salt Lake, and thence to the place of destination.

The Southern Conference of the Methodist Church, contributed during the past year the sum of $68,529 29 for domestic missions. 127 missionaries were employed amongst the colored population, who have under their care 29,430 colored members. 32 missionaries were sustained in the Indian territory, church members 3404. The Texas mission employed 61 missionaries, church members 6817 white 1005 colored. German mission, 5 preachers, church members 139. French mission, one preacher.

Capital Punishment.—The Louisiana House of Representatives on the 8th, discussed a bill to abolish public executions, and passed it by a vote of 38 to 24. A substitute proposing the entire abolition of a strangling to death was discussed and withdrawn, as not consistent with the main proposition. An attempt was made to have slaves hung in the old way, but defeated, 38 to 25.

Famine in Northern Brazil.—A letter received by a gentleman in this city, says the Baltimore American, dated Araeaty, February 20, gives a heart-rendering descrip- of the sufferings of the inhabitants of portions of Northern Brazil. At Aracaty, in consequence of the protracted drought, the trees were withering, and the people were famishing for want of food.

Insanity.—In Italy there is one insane man to 4800; in France, one to 1000; in Whales, one to 800; England, one to 862; Scotland, one to 574; Russia, one to 666; United States, one to 500. Among the Chinese insanity is almost unknown.—There are about 600 idiots in the State of Massachusetts.—Zion's Herald.

The Lead Trade.—The Galena Jefferso- [illegible] opening of the navigation of the Mississippi, the amount of lead corded upon the wharves at Galena, was as large as eight millions of pounds. The lead produet, the coming season, will be enormous, and will somewhat evince the capacity of the great West.

Another lesson from the Gallows.—James M'Cafferty, convicted of murder, was hung on Friday of last week, at Hundingdon, Pa. He warned those around him to avoid bad company and strong drink, by which he had been brought to his present condition. On the first experiment, the rope broke, and he fell to the ground with violence, being a large and robust man.—He then renewed his warning against bad company and liquor, and the second trial succeeded in accomplishing the legal murder.

Southern Methodist Conference.—The proposal of the Trustees of Transylvania University, to place that Institution under the control of the Conference, has been accepted, and Rev. Dr. Bascom unanimously appointed its President.

Locomotion.—The number of railroad trains leaving Boston daily, is about ninety, for some twenty-five different stations. About one in every ten minutes, for sixteen and a-half hours each day.

Want of Churches.—New York city contains a population of 370,000; it was stated recently by a preacher, at the opening of a new church, that 200,000 have no place in the sanctuary.

Terrible Tornado in Mississippi.—Thirty Persons Killed—Great Destruction of Property.—The town of Grenada, Mississippi, has been almost swept away by a terrible tornado, which visited that place on the afternoon of the 7th inst. A letter dated May 8, says :—Between twenty-five and thirty persons are killed, and many others wounded. The sufferers are mostly children. The school house of Mrs. Plummer was blown down, and that lady and several children killed.—The Male Academy was also blown down, killing several children, and wounding Mr. Simple, the teacher. The Baptist Brick church was blown down, with all the houses north of it—the tornada missing the business part of the town, but sweeping with death and devastation the private residences of the place. The whole town is clothed in mourning, and the deepest, distress and confusion is occasioned by this heart-rending occurrence.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, held its anniversary at the First Presbyterian Church, on Sabbath evening May the 17th. From statements of the secretary, it appeared that the Society has now about 40 ordained missionaries, and an equal number of assistants; 13 churches and about the same number of schools among the heathen, and 2 printing establishments; and that the receipts for the last year have exceeded $91,000. The Missionaries of this Society have labored with animating success and brightening prospects in China in Northern India, in Western Africa, in Texas, and among our Indian tribes, in the South and West.

The Oregon Emigrants.—A gentleman from the Indian territory, informs the Louisville Public Ledger, that emigrants for Oregon were collecting in large numbers at Independence, Missouri, and busily engaged making the necessary preparations for their long and toilsome march across the mountains, to the last great El Dorado of the West. The present company, which will probably be the largest that has ever gone out, will take their final departure about the last of this month. Gov. Bogg's California company were also preparing to leave.

The American Seamens' Friend Society, held its anniversary May 11. The receipts for the year have been about $29,000.—The society has Chaplains and Sailor Missionaries at the Sandwich Islands, at Havre, at Stockholm, and Gottenburg, in Sweden, and has just appointed one for Canton. About 50 temperance boarding houses for seamen have been established along our seaboard. The "Sailor's Home" at New York, has accommodated the past year about 13,820 sailor boarders; and it is estimated that three or four times as many sailors attend church in that city, as did five years ago. Other animating facts were reported.

Insurrection in Portugal.—The north of Portugal has been the scene of an insurrectionary movement, originating with the wine growers, who have risen against the exactions of the Government. The country has been put under martial law. The insurgents numbered between 3000 and 4000; they showed some courage, but were imperfectly armed.

We learn that the Tide Water Canal is now in good navigable order.

Matamoras.—Matamoras is situated immediately upon the banks of the river Rio Grande and surrounded by fresh water ponds, all being upon the south side, from 36 to 40 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, in lat. 27°. It is a handsome village—all the buildings are of brick—built by American architects, and much resembles our Southern towns. It is also much esteemed for its salubrity. Since the revolutions of '35 all the merchants have left, and Matamoras has become a mere barracks for soldiers. The town is about the size of Wilmington, Del.

Statistics of Distilleries.—The Albany Knickerboeker says :—

"It is estimated that the present number of distilleries in the U. S. is 10,400; the number of gallons of liquor distilled annually is 41,402,507; which, if sold at 20 cents per gallon, would produce $8,000,000, half a million of assaults and batteries, one hundred thousand thefts, eight hundred suicides, and about one hundred murders."

The Emigration from Germany this year, it is represented, will be immense. Preparations are being made on an extensive scale in parts of the country, where hitherto there has not been much emigration. The emigration spirit prevails, not among the poor, but among persons in good circumstances, and even among the rich and wealthy. People who own large and beautiful estates are selling off their property and getting ready to emigrate with family and friends to America.—Phila. News.

Church Temperance Pledge.—At a meeting of the New England Conference held at Lynn Massachusetts, the following resolution was adopted :—

"Resolved, That it would be of great advantage to the cause of Temperance, and the cause of God, for every Church in N. England, to draw up a pledge of Total Abstinence, called the 'Church Temperance Pledge,' upon which should be placed the name of each present member, and ever after to be presented to all who may wish to join the Church for their signatures, thus making every particular Church a temperance association of itself."

The Crops.—The wheat crops in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, promise an abundant yield, and the Southern papers represent the prospect of the coming crops, both of corn and small grain, as unsurpassed by those of any previous year.—The most abundant harvests are expected in Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, North Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

Russia.—The government has determined on making great reductions in the Custom duties—experience having demonstrated that such a measure is always profitable to the treasury. It intends, also, to negotiate new treatise of commerce with different nations, beginning with Prussia.

Tidewater Canal.—A letter from Havre de Grace says that business operations have been resumed on the Tidewater Canal, and a large number of boats was arriving.

A Veteran Preacher.—The Rev. Benjamin Harvey, a Baptist minister, who served under Washington in the Colonial Army, and is now 111 years of age, is at N. Y., and is to deliver a course of lectures at the Tabernacle next week.

Jews in Palestine.

We make the following extracts from an article in the Princeton Review, on an interesting book lately published in Scotland, being the "Narrative of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland." What we have selected is an abridged report of the answers made to questions furnished by the Scottish Committee.

1. What is the number of Jews in Jerusalem and in the Holy Land?

In Jerulalem, 1000 Jews pay taxes, and all of these are males from thirteen years old and upwards. The Jews marry very young; so that allowing five to a family, there are 5000. Foreign Jews, not taxed, may give 2000 more. This however is more than the real amount. They are increasing in the cities on the east coast. They are now admitted to Tyre. Algerine Jews now emigrate under French protection. At the utmost, the Jewish population of Palestine may be set down at 12,000.

2. Has the number of Jews been increasing of late years?

Their numbers increased from 1832 to 1837, under the Pasha's government, and since the French occupation at Algiers. During the last two years, there has been little or no increase. Their reasons for coming are, 1. The universal belief that every Jew who dies out of the Promised Land, must perform a subterraneous passage back to it, that he may rise in the valley of Jehoshaphat. 2. They believe that to die in this land is certain salvation, though they are not exempted from "beating in the grave, and the eleven months of purgatory." 3. They believe that those who reside here have immediate communication with Heaven, and that the Rabbis are in a manner inspired. 4. They expect the appearing of the Messiah, and think a crisis is approaching.

3. Are the Jews in Palestine supported by their brethren in other parts of the world?

Generally speaking, they are all supported by a contribution made by their brethren in other lands. A few have property, but even these may receive a share. Five ducats, or about seventeen dollars, is thought a good share. Messengers used to go to the chief cities of Europe, to make collections. Of late, money is deposited in Amsterdam, and thence transmitted to Beyrout. The average is about $14,000. The largest collections are from Amsterdam; not much from Great Britain. A small portion is appropriated, by legacy, to those who study here.

4. Is there kept up a constant and rapid communication between the Jews in Palestine, and those in other parts of the world?

The Rabbis of Palestine maintain a constant communication with their brethren all over the world.

5. From what country do the Jews principally come?

The greatest number come from Poland, and the Austrian dominions. Many come from Russia; some from Wallachia and Moldavia; a few from Holland; but scarcely any from Britain.

6. Are there many Rabbis in Palestine?

There is often a great mistake made about the rank of those who get the title of Rabbi. The truth is, all are included in that class, who are not in the class Am Haaretz, that is, the uneducated. Formerly, the Rabbis were a kind of clergy, and were appointed by laying on of hands; but now there is no such distinction.

7. What are the peculiar characteristics of the Jews in Palestine?

Their principal characteristic is, that they are all strict Rabbinists, though in this they can hardly be said to differ from the Polish Jews. They are also superstitious in the extreme. Their real characteristic may be inferred from the fact, that those who come are the elite of the devotional and strictly religious Jews of other countries. They have so little trade that their covetousness and cheating are turned upon one another.

8. What are the feelings of the Jews in Palestine towards Christianity?

9. What success has attended the efforts hitherto made for their conversion?

These two questions involve one another. The first effort of the London Society was made in 1820, by a swiss clergyman named Tschudi. Joseph Wolff then made two visits. Soon after, Mr. Lewis Waye, and Mr. Lewis, an Irish clergyman, came out, and were followed in 1824 by Dr. Dalton, a medical man. It was to aid him that Mr. Nicolayson was sent out in 1825. In 1826, Mr. Dalton died. Mr. N. lived some time at Beyrout and Saphet, making much impression, but awaking the jealousy of the Rabbis. He left the country in 1827, for four years, and travelled on the Barbary coast. In 1832 he returned, and under favor of the Pasha, spent the winter at Sidon. In 1833, he and Mr. Calman, who had recently come, visited the holy cities. In 1833 Mr. N. brought his family to the house on Mount Zion, where he now lives. From the year 1835 the Jewish mission may be regarded as established in the Holy City. In 1836 Mr. N. visited England, and returned the next year. In July 1838, Mr. Pieritz and Mr. Levi, converted Jews, but not in orders, were sent out; and in December, Dr. Gertsmann, and his assistant, Mr. Beigheim, both converted Jews and both physicians, arrived.

The made efforts have been blessed to the conversion of some Jews in Jerusalem, though it is still the day of small things. A Jew named Simeon, was awakened at Bucarest by reading a New Testament, and some tracts which he received from a Jew who did not understand them. In Smyrna he met Mr. N., and accompanied him as a servant to Jerusalem. He and all his family were batized at Jerusalem last Easter. Another case was that of Chaii, or Hymen Paul, an acquaintance of Simeon: In 1838, Rabbi Joseph was awakened at Jerusalem: he is a young man of learning. Three Rabbis have lately become inquirers. When Rabbi Joseph was awakened, a herem or excommunication was pronounced against the missionaries, and all who should have dealings with them. But when Dr. Gertsmann came, the Jews began to break through it.—Another herem was pronounced, but in vain. The Rabbi refused to publish it, saying he would not be the cause of hindering his poor and sick brethren from going to be healed. This shews the value of medical missionaries. The more general fruits of the establishments have been these: 1. The distinction between true and false christianity has been clearly set before the eyes of the Jews. 2. The study of the Old Testament has been forced upon them; so that they cannot avoid it. 3. The word of God has become more and more the only ground of controversy. The support of inquirers and converts is one of the chief difficulties that meets a missionary here.—The institution of a printing press, to afford them both manual and mental labor, has been proposed. An hospital has also been set on foot.

10. What modes of operation have been employed?

Personal intercourse only. The missionaries make tours, and distribute books. Mr. N. has sold about 5000 Hebrew Bibles. The New Testament is given to persons in whom confidence is reposed. At one time fifty copies of the whole Bible were sold; but they afterwards found the New Testament torn out, and its place supplied by Jarchi's commentary in manuscript. The Jews will not take tracts openly. Many of their Old Testaments have been conveyed to Bagdad and to India.

11. How far is the health of the missionaries affected by the climate?

The climate of Jerusalem is decidedly healthy. The sickness and deaths among the missionaries can hardly be attributed to the climate.

12. What kind of house accommodation is there, and what is the expense of living in Palestine?

The house accommodation in Jerusalem is tolerably comfortable. One of the missionaries pays £15, and another £17 a year, as house-rent. In the winter it is hard to keep them dry. Provisions are easily got, but the expense of living is rising, as there is more money in the country. It is necessary to keep a house and servants, and to lay up stores: this would require at least £100 a year.

Making Secret Prayer Pleasant.

1. Be regular in the observance of it.—Arrange your affairs with reference to your daily seasons of retirement; and do it with just as much purpose as with reference to your ordinary meals, and if you are ever irregular in the latter, with more. More depends upon this than most are aware.

2. Watch over your life and conversation. If you suffer yourself to be betrayed into irregularity of conduct, or frivolity in conversation, it will press like lead upon your spirit as you enter your closet. There is meaning in the words of the Apostle—"Watching thereunto with all perseverance."

3. Prepare for it by meditation. The mind that has been engrossed, as it is sometimes necessary that it should be, in secular business, needs time to recall itself, that it may gain a proper attitude to commune with Jehovah. You must labor to secure the conception of a present God. You are alone with a grieved, offended, yet compassionate Friend. That friend is He, before whom the angels veil their faces. There must be preparation, in order to enter suitably into communion with Him.

4. Read, in connexion with your devotions, a few pages in such works as Baxter's Saint's Rest, Kempis' Imitation of Christ, and, above all, devotional portions of the Bible.

5. Let your heart dictate every word uttered in the form of prayer. In other words, do not go to the closet merely to discharge your conscience in relation to the duty; but go there to unburthen your soul of its emotions; and while there, do not utter words significant of desire you do not feel. If you have not the emotion which you ought to have, do not mock God by expressions which signify its possession, but meditate and pray for it till it is awakened; and when it comes, utter it.

6. Pray much to Christ. He can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. He was tempted—tried—in all points as we are, and presents himself before us in a form to meet our sympathies and invite our most confiding approaches.—Why did Stephen in the hour of his trial, pray, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit? There is a volume of instruction in that prayer. It points us to one who, having trod the path of temptation, suffering, death, bears towards us the heart of a brother—that can be touched;—combined with omnipotence to save.

Beautiful.

There is something in beauty, whether it dwells in the human face, in the pencilled leaves of flowers, the sparkling surface of a fountain, or that aspect which genius breathes over its statute, that makes us mourn its ruin. I should not envy that man his feelings, who could see a leaf wither, or a flower fall without some sentiment of regret. This tender interest in the beauty and frailty of things around us, is only a slight tribute of becoming grief and affection, for nature, in our adversities, never deserts us. She even comes more nearly to us in our sorrows, and leading us away from the paths of disappointment and pain into her soothing recesses, allays the anguish of our bleeding hearts, binds up the wounds that have afflicted, whispers the meek pledges of a better hope, and, in harmony with a spirit of still holier birth, points to that home where decay and death can never come.

Lines—By J. Q. Adams.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle, publishes the following verse, by our distinguished countryman, John Quincy Adams. They were written a few weeks ago, while Mr. A. was sitting at his desk in the House of Representatives. and handed by him to Mr. Brinkerhoff, of Ohio.

"Matter and mind, mysterious one,
Is man till three score years and ten!
Where? ere the thread of life was spun;
Where! when reduced to dust again!
Almighty God! the doubt suppress,
The doubt thou only can'st relieve;
Let me, to solace my distress,
Fly to the Gospel! AND BELIEVE!"

Polk, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the same to all whom it may concern; and I do especially enjoin on all persons holding offices, civil or military, under the authority of the United States, that they be vigilant and zealous in discharging the duties respectively incident thereto; and I do moreover exhort all the good people of the United States, as they love their country, as they feel the wrongs which have forced on them the last resort of injured nations, and as they consult the best means, under the blessing of Divine Providence, of abridging its calamities, that they exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, in maintaining the authority and efficacy of the laws, and in supporting and invigorating all the measures which may be adopted by the constituted authorities for obtaining a speedy, a just and an honorable peace.

GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION.

The following proclamation has been issued by the Governor of Pennsylvania, in reference to the above:

Pennsylvania, ss.

{L.S.} In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

By Francis R. Shunk, Governor of the said Commonwealth,

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, The President of the United Stated, in his Proclamation of the 13th instant, has announced, that by the acts of the Republic of Mexico, a state of War exists between that Government and the United States.

And whereas, It is our first duty to acknowledge our dependence upon the Great Ruler of the Universe:—I do, therefore invoke the good people of the Commonwealth, by their religion and their patriotism, to submit as freemen should, to this dispensation of Providence, and humbly ask HIM, who alone can give counsel and strength, to sustain us in the last resort of injured nations.

And whereas, The President has been authorized by Congress, to call for and accept the services of fifty thousand volunteer soldiers, to protect and maintain the honor and security of the Union.

And whereas, All the force that may be required promptly and efficiently to conduct the War, and bring it to a speedy and successful termination, should be in readiness, to meet every contingency that may occur in its progress.

And whereas, The Union of the States binds together the separate sovereignties, and secures one common feeling and interest, in which the people of Pennsylvania largely participate.

The Officers and Soldiers of the Commonwealth will, therefore, with that alacrity and zeal which animate freemen, and for which they are distinguished, hold themselves in readiness promptly to meet and repel the enemies of the Republic, and to preserve the rights and honor, and secure the perpetuity of the Union.

All persons who have charge of public arms, and other munitions of war, are reminded by our existing relations, that it is their imperative duty immediately to prepare them for the Public Service.

And whereas, The power of the Union is made effective for protection and defence, in all emergencies, by the harmony and enercy of the people of each State:

Therefore, All the citizens of the Commonwealth, are exhorted to be united, firm and decided "in preserving order, promoting concord, in maintaining the efficacy of the laws, and in supporting and invigorating all the measures which may be adopted by the constituted authorities, for obtaining a speedy, just and honorable peace."

GIVEN under my hand and the Great Seal of the Commonwealth, at Harrisburg, this sixteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord 1846, and of the Commonwealth the seventieth.

J. MILLER,

SLEEPING IN JESUS.

BY MRS. MACKAY.

1. A sleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wakes to weep:
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.

2. A sleep in Jesus! Oh, how sweet!
To be for such a slumber meet:
With holy confidence to sing,
That death has lost his venom'd sting.

3. A sleep in Jesus! peaceful rest!
Whose waking is supremely bless'd:
No fear—no woe—shall dim that hour,
That manifests a Saviour's power.

4. A sleep in Jesus! Oh, for me!
May such a blissful refuge be:
Securely shall my ashes lie,
Waiting the summons from on high.

5. A sleep in Jesus! time nor space,
Debars this precious hiding place:
On Indian plains—on Lapland's snows,
Believers find the same repose.

6. A sleep in Jesus! far from thee,
Thy kindred and their graves may be;
But thine is still a blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep.

THE WATER OF LIFE.

(John iv. 14.)

Oh, come to the fountain of mercy and grace,
Which Jesus has opened for Adam's lost race;
'Tis pure and translucent, abundant and free,
Come, sinner, partake, it is offered to thee.

It cleanses from moral pollution the heart,
And gives its recipient a glorious part,
In the happiness purchased by Christ for the saints;
Removing forever, all evil complaints.

The thirst of the soul 'twill effectually slake,
Of all who its thrice blessed waters partake;
Give real and lasting enjoyment and peace,
Forever upspringing, it knows no decrease.

Without it, true pleasure can never be found,
The world with its joys is a mere empty sound;
While with it, pure happiness ever shall be,
As certain, and endless, as eternity.

Then come to the fountain, nor longer delay,
For now is the time, the acceptable day;
Oh, lose not a moment, but speedily fly,
And drink of the fountain that never runs dry.

THE SABBATH VERSE.

"A Sabbath well spent
Brings a week of content,
And health for the toils of to-morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whate'er may be gain'd,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

On the 10th of March, by the same, Mr. David Brenneman, to Miss Eliza Brenneman, both of Lancaster county.

On the 18th ult., by the Rev. C. W. Schaeffer, Samuel Alleman Esq., to Miss Ann E. Holman, daughter of Samuel Holman, Esq., all of Harrisburg.

On the 19th inst., by the same, at Cedar Spring, Franklin county, Mr. G. W. Hummel, Merchant, of Harrisburg, to Miss Margaret Isabella Kisecker, of the former place.

On the 20th inst., by the same, at Greensburg, Mr. Peter S. M'Cullough, to Miss Matilda Simmons, both of Greensburg.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DANIEL SEILER HAS DEPARTED THIS LIFE!

He died at his brothers, in this borough, as was stated in our last, on Saturday morning the 16th ult.; in the 74th year of his age.

Brother Seiler was an old disciple. He was converted many years ago, and from the time of his conversion to the day of his peaceful death, he maintained his integrity.

He was long a member and Elder of the "Church of God." He was also a member of the Board of Trustees of the printing establishment.

The best and only encomium we shall bestow upon him at this time, is, that he was a good man—that his praise was in all the churches of the saints—and that he had a good report of them that are without. The Lord sanctify his removal to all his surviving friends and brethren in the church.

Near Elizabethtown, May 20th, Mr. Jacob Gish; in the advanced age of 78 years, 5 months and 16 days.

His remains were followed by a large concourse of people, to the narrow limits of the grave. Father Gish was a man extensively known, and highly esteemed by all that knew him; but he is no more!—we hear his voice no more, to cheer the broken-hearted; nor witness his aid in relieving the poor. May he rest in peace, (for which we have a good hope.)

Thomas Strohm.

On Saturday morning the 25th of April, brother Henry Sunday; aged 26 years, 10 months and 15 days.

Brother Sunday embraced religion in the great revival of 1843, and from that time his christian character has evinced the sincerity of his profession. He died in peace, leaving a small family to deplore his early departure.

On Saturday May the 9th, at 3 o'clock P. M., in peace and triumph, the Rev. C. J. Torry, who had been confined in the Md. Penitentiary for the abduction of slaves; or, at least, for an unlawful interference in the matter.

His funeral sermon was preached in Boston, by the Rev. J. C. Lovejoy, from the text: "Whose feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron."

He was buried at Mt. Auburn. A suitable monument will be erected by his anti-slavery friends, to his memory.

In Hanover township, Dauphin county, on Sunday the 17th inst., Hon. William Simonton, late member of Congress from this district; aged about 50 years.

On the 17th of May, Catharine, daughter of Christian Forney; aged 9 years, 6 months and 6 days.

THE ADVOCATE

Is printed and published in Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge, Harrisburg, Pa.,

By JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M., Editor.

Terms and Regulations.

The Church Advocate will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

All the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and such other persons as shall have regular certificates of their appointment from the Editor, shall be the only authorized agents for this paper.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

A Word to our Subscribers.

Our subscribers will please to bear in mind, that all the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and especially the stationed and travelling ministers, are the regular and authorized agents for the Advocate. To any of them, therefore, payment can be made for the paper, during the first three months. Those who have no opportunity to see any of the preachers, within this time, can remit their dues to us, or to any of our general agents. See list on last page.

In our next two numbers, we shall give alphabetical lists of the names of those subscribers who have made payments. Agents will please to remit, by mail, or otherwise, all moneys paid in on subscriptions, and a list of the names of the payers, and likewise a list of the respective Post Offices where the papers are lifted. In this matter we wish our agents to be very particular, for this obvious reason: that we have many subscribers of the same name, and unless we have both the name and the Post Office, we cannot always identify the person. To prevent mistakes, please be particular.

Our Subscription List.

We are happy to say that our subscription list is still increasing. If our agents and friends, and friends of the cause, will only continue to exert themselves, we have no doubt but what many more names can be added to our list; and if so, the General Eldership will soon have a fund in hand to aid and sustain our missionaries in new and destitute places, and, perhaps, also, for some other benevolent and needful purposes. It would, doubtless, be gratifying to us all, if we could once succeed in procuring a sufficient patronage for our paper, to make it not only pay its way, but to yield a profit or revenue for general and benevolent purposes. Brethren, with the blessing of God, this can be done. Only do not depend on one another for doing that which belongs to all, and in which each one should vie with his brethren. Let it once come to this pass, and the end we have long aimed at, will soon be accomplished. Who, then, will send us in the best list for the next number?

Letter from Elder Calton Price.

Brother Price informs us that the brethern in Baltimore do not receive their papers. This must be owing to some neglect in the Post Office department. We hope it may be ferretted out and corrected. We shall hereafter send the most of the papers in one pack, directed to Elder C. Price who will be kind enough to distribute them.

He further states that they worship at present in the Howard Street Chapel, formerly occupied by the M. E. Church; but that they are under a very heavy rent, fifteen dollars per month, and will, perhaps, be obliged to give it up. They have in contemplation to build a meeting-house for themselves, if, by any means, they can raise the funds necessary for that purpose. He wishes to know what can be done for them in the country.—There are many generous and noble-minded brethren, who would, no doubt, be willing to assist them; but there are so many calls of this kind, and some other heavy claims to be paid off shortly, that no considerable aid, out of the city, ought to be relied on at the present time. At some future day, the brethren in the country may be in a situation to do something handsome, by aiding them, in building a house for the Lord. In the meantime, we hope the little church in Baltimore will not be discouraged, but keep up the meetings in the best way they can. The Lord will provide.

Meeting at Uniontown.

On Whitsuntide, a special meeting was held in Uniontown, Carroll county, Md. Ministers present, J. Keller, T. Bean, S. Fleole, S. Bowman and ourself. On Friday morning, brother Bowman and I started for the meeting, arrived at Gettysburg in the evening, and were kindly received and entertained by cousin John Winebrenner and his amiable wife.—Next morning we resumed our journey, and arrived at Uniontown in the afternoon. We stopped with brother J. Gore, but stayed most of the time of our sojourn, with brother Christ's family, who treated us very kindly—brother C. being from home on a journey to Indiana and Ohio.

On Saturday the congregations were good, and the people attentive, but nothing special. On Sabbath and on Monday, the congregations were large, serious and attentive throughout, with the exception of a few, who seemed to be strongly beset and overcome by Somnus.

This may be a frailty in some, but we are inclined to think it is rather a fault than an infirmity in most people; and a practice, to say the least, so unseemly and sinful, that all persons, and especially professors of religion, ought carefully and strenuously to guard against it.

The meeting, on the whole, was a pretty good one: two were out to be prayed for and professed hope: one was baptized, a promising young man, formerly a student of the Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg; and prospects, on the whole, tolerably good.

The brethren, on the Uniontown circuit, contemplate holding a campmeeting some time in August next. We hope they will try to get it into a new neighborhood, if they can, as that generally works best.

There are a goodly number of young men in that section of country; some just beginning business for themselves, and others about preparing for it, who we should like to have on our subscription list for the Church Advocate. The paper is now cheap, so that the young and the poor, as well as the old and opulent, can afford to patronize us, if they will. Who will send us their names?

Meeting in Shippensburg.

On Saturday the 6th inst. we left home, took the cars and proceeded to Shippensburg, to assist in holding a protracted meeting. On arriving there, we stopped with our old friend and host, brother John Carey, who, as usual, received and entertained us with much kindness and christian urbanity.

Brother John Booth, from Newburg, preached to a large and attentive congregation on Saturday night.

Brother J. C. Owens, pastor loci, preached on Sabbath morning, on the subject of christian baptism. His sermon was excellent, and seemed to be well received.

In the afternoon, brother Wm. McElroy preached a feeling and practical sermon, after which we proceeded to the water, where three brethren were baptized in the presence of a large and well behaved congregation.

On Sabbath evening we sought to edify the people. Two young men came out to be prayed for, one of whom professed hope in Jesus. On Monday evening the ordinances of Feet Washing and the Lord's Supper were administered; preparatory to which, we delivered a short discourse. On Tuesday morning we left, but the meeting was continued, and, we hope, will result in the conversion of many souls, and the revival of pure religion.

Things at Shippensburg seem to be looking up. The congregations are large, and the prospects, we think, quite cheering and favorable. May the Lord soon send them a gracious rain!

News from Mexico.

No further battles have been fought in the Mexican war since the 8th and 9th ult., as reported in our last. But great preparations are still being made, on both the Mexican and American sides, to carry on the war with great vigor. On the 17th ult., Gen. Arista, the commander of the Mexican army, sent a flag of truce to Gen. Taylor, and requested an armistice of six weeks. Gen. Taylor replied that he would give him till 8 o'clock next morning, to leave the city of Matamoras. On the 18th, the American army crossed the Rio Grande, and took possession of Matamoras without opposition, the Mexican army having fled, leaving a large amount of amunition, which is said to be a valuable acquisition to Gen. Taylor's supplies.—Twenty-two Mexicans were made prisoners soon after the capture of the city. The regular business of the city is allowed to go on as usual. The American forces, now in actual service, number about seventeen thousand. Orders have been issued for the enrolment of an additional force (if not supplied by volunteers) of twenty-eight full regiments of infantry, seven hundred and seventy-seven men each, and seven half regiments of two hundred and ninety men each. If these are added to the regular force established by law, (eighty-one hundred) and the volunteers already called into service by the government, there will be an aggregate force of nearly fifty-three thousand men under arms. What an oppressive burden will the supplies for such an army impose upon the country! not to say any thing of the loss of time, the stagnation of business, the sheding of blood, the destruction of life, and the ruin of souls. May kind Heaven save us from the awful calamities of war!

Mansion House.

This house has lately been fitted up and opened anew, as a public Hotel and boarding-house, upon strictly moral and temperance prineiples, by our young and enterprising citizen, DAVID LINGLE, Jr.

The Mansion House is elegantly filled up with new furniture, and is very conveniently and pleasantly situated on the corner of Second and Mulberry streets, one square from the east end of the railroad bridge.—Our friends from the eountry and the traveling public, who may have occasion to visit Harrisburg, will find very good and ample aecommodations by stoping at the Mansion House.

A Gag-Law Reversed.

A MINISTER, in the Presbyterian chureh, by the name of WILLIAM GRAHAM, and a member of the Synod of Cincinnati, was suspended by that body for holding and teaching the opinion, "that the Bible sanctions the relations of master and slave."

Mr. GRAHAM took an appeal from this gag-decision of the Synod, to the General Assembly reeently held in Philadelphia. The Assembly, after a full day's discussion of this case, passed the following resolution, to-wit:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Synod of Cincinnati, in the institution and prosecution of judicial process against William Graham subjecting him, first to censure, and afterwards to suspension, under which he now labors, are unconstitutional and irregular, and, therefore, null and void; and that said Synod be, and is hereby, enjoined and required to take constitutional action in the case, and to review and correct its proceedings accordingly. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 60 to 29—silent, 7, and absent, 42.

Romish Baptism.

THE following resolution embodies the opinion of the Carlisle Presbytery, touching the character of the R. C. C. and of her baptism:

Resolved, That it is the deliberate and decided judgment of this Presbytery, that the Popish church has essentially apostatized from the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and, therefore, cannot be recognized as a Christian church, and that, by consequence, her baptism is not to be deemed Christian baptism.

Chorasin—(This Secret:)

A TOWN of note on the north-western shore of the Sea of Galilee, about two miles from Capernaum, in the land of Galilee. This is said to be one of the cities in which our Lord performed most of his "mighty works," and which he severely upbraided, because of the people's impenitence and infidelity. Matt. 11: 21. Luke 10: 23.

Bethsaida—(The House of Fishers.)

THERE were two ancient cities by this name. The first was a city of Galilee, belonging to the tribe of Naphtali, situated at the north-eastern end of the Sea of Galilee, otherwise called the Lake of Gennesaret, and Lake of Tiberias: the other was a city of Galilee, and lay somewhere in the vicinity of Capernaum, on the north-western side of the aforenamed Sea or Lake.

This latter city was the birth-place of Philip, and at one time the residence of Peter and Andrew, who were fisherman by trade.

Against the guilty inhabitants of this devoted city, Christ pronounced a fearful woe, because of their disregard of the Gospel. This doom has long since been executed. A few half desolate and miserable cottages, are all that now remain of this ancient and once flourishing city. It is now called Batsida. See Matt. 9: 21. Mark 6: 45. Luke 5: 1. John 1: 44. Chap. 12: 21.

Capernaum—(City of Comfort:)

A CITY of Galilee, on the north-eastern coast of the Sea of Galilee, "in the borders of Zabulem and Nephthalim." Matt. 4: 13. Here Jesus, after his baptism, and during the time of His public ministry, usually resided: hence, called "his own city." Matt. 9: 1. Here, also, He preached and done many "mighty works," on account of which, and in point of signal privileges, Capernaum, as our Lord himself said, was "exalted to Heaven;" but in consequence of remaining impenitent, amidst all this halo of mercies, He pronounced a fearful malediction on here, saying: "Thou shalt be brought down to hell!" Matt. 11: 23, 24.

This horrific denunciation was duly executed. "Yet probably its desolation was gradual, and by natural means." The Divine threatenings, though sometimes slow in their execution, are, nevertheless, unavoidably certain. Capernaum, long since, is no more!—Its modern name is Tahlhewn.

Meeting in York County.

ON Saturday last, we went to York county to assist brother ABRAHAM SWARTZ in holding a special meeting at CROLL's school-house, opposite Middletown. Although the weather, during the first part of the meeting, was rainy; yet the congregations were large and the people solemn and feeling, especially on Sabbath morning. We left the meeting on Sabbath afternoon, and preached in Middletown in the evening. This morning we returned home, and are now busy in reading proof and getting out our paper.

PULPIT DISPOSITIONS---No. 4.

Thema--LOVE TO GOD.

TEXT—"And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment." Mark 12: 30.

Consider,—

I. The nature and properties;
II. The signs and evidences; and,
III. The motives of love to God.

I. The nature and properties of love to God.

Love is an exercise of the heart, and lies in an affectionate regard for any given object.—When God is the object of our love, it must be,—

1. Sincere. Rom. 12: 9. James 3: 17.
2. Universal. John 17: 26.

5. Supreme. Luke 14: 26. Col. 3: 2.

II. The signs or evidences of love to God.

1. A consciousness that we once hated Him; or, at least, that we did not love Him. 2 Cor. 5: 17.
2. A delight to think of Him. Ps. 94: 19. Ps. 10: 4.
3. A pleasure to speak of Him. Ps. 145: 7, 11, 12.
4. A desire to please Him. 1 John 3: 22.
5. A love for His people. John 13: 34, 35.
6. A relish for His word and worship. 1 Pet. 2: 2.
7. A regard for His cause. Is. 62: 1.
8. A hatred to sin. Ps. 97: 10.
9. A compassion for sinners. Rom. 10: 1. Phil. 2: 5.
10. A patient submission to His will. John 13: 9. 1 Pet. 2: 19, 20. Heb. 10. 36.
11. A longing for His presence and everlasting enjoyment. Phil. 1: 23.
12. A constant and universal obedience to His commandments. John 14: 15, 21. 1 John 5: 3.

III. The motives of love to God.

1. The fact that He first loved us. 1 John 4: 19.
2. The requirements of his law. See text, &c. Prov. 23: 26. Rom. 13: 10.
3. The excellency and glory of His character. Ex. 34: 6, 7.
4. His fearful threatenings against His enemies. Deut. 32: 41. 1 Sam. 2: 10. Luke 19: 27. 1 Cor. 16: 22.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Missionary Societies.

May 30, 1846.

THE cause of missions demands the serious and zealous attention of every true lover of the cause of Christ. There are many parts, even of our own beloved land, in which the inhabitants are almost or entirely destitute of the preached Gospel. These are rapidly passing from earth into an eternal world, uninvited to flee to Christ for salvation, unconverted and unsaved. To such the Gospel must be preached, but the means to do it, must first be furnished; and the funds necessary for this purpose, can, perhaps, be better raised on the plan proposed by the GENERAL ELDERSHIP, viz: by missionary societies, than on any other.

But it behooves us to push this matter forward, not slothfully, but with zeal and energy, lest nothing in a manner be done. In the present state of affairs, we hold it to be a duty binding upon all, to take an active part therein, and give liberally. And if the ministers of the Word of God, having charge of the several circuits and stations, take this thing in hand, as it is their duty to do, and urge upon the people the extreme need of engageing in it, surely the cause must and will prosper. But if each one folds his arms in carelessness, and expects others to do all, then the project will sink. And we set it down as a conclusive argument, that those who are truly anxious for the promotion of God's work, among the children of men, will show it by their zeal and liberality in this good cause, and vice versa.

Knowing full well that human calculations often fail, when put into practice, yet allowing each member of the church to give the trifling sum of fifty cents, as recommended by the General Eldership, which is less than a cent per week, we would have the handsome sum of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS per year, to devote to missionary purposes. And there are but few, if any, brethren and sisters in the church, who cannot give this small amount; many will give much more; so that if rightly managed, a sum exceeding the above, can be raised the current year, and an incalculable amount of good may be done therewith. The means is in the church. Is the WILL, to furnish it, there? We will see. Religion carries generosity with it.

Let no one say he can do nothing to aid this noble cause. God can see all our motives, and knows what is in man's heart, whether it be a spirit to give, or to withhold what rightly belongs to the Lord. Men are placed here to promote the glory of God, and woe betide those who do it not! Consequently, we are bound to lend our support to sustain domestic and foreign missions, which have been, and are doing, so much good throughout the world. Reflect! there is a day of final accounts and unbending trial near; yes, very near at hand, where our abilities to aid God's cause, will be contrasted with our neglect to do it, and the result may be woeful to many! More anon.

RUFUS.

Universalist Props Broken.

BALTIMORE, May, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

It seems our Universalist friends endeavor to use every passage they can, to support or prove their heterodox notions. I shall here notice three of them.

In Romans, 11th chap. and 36th verse, we read: "For the gifts and calling of God are WITHOUT REPENTANCE." This passage is wrested to prove that God will save all men, not on condition of their repentance, but without it. I will here add to the common version, quoted above, the German translation by Luther: "The gifts and calling of God may (or will) not repent him." ("Die Gaben und Berufung Gottes moegen ihn nicht gereuen.") In this version the sense is quite the reverse of that which they draw from the text. Another German translator of the New Testament, whose name is not given, renders it: "For the grace-gifts and the call of God cannot repent him." ("Denn die Gnaden-Gaben und der Beruf Gottes koennen ihn nicht gereuen.") VAN ESS, whose translation was approved by kings and priests of Germany, to a great number, has it: "For God can never repent his testimony (or affirmations) of grace and the invitation." (Denn Gott koennen seine Gnaden bezeugungen und die Einladung nie gereuen.")

Now, here are four different versions of the passage, and the last three bear the absolute meaning that the repentance applies to God, and not to man, i. e. that God does not repent that he gave gifts and calls man to eternal life; and the first, though not as clear as the rest, can as readily (if not more so) be construed in the same light as the other way. I hope this may have a tendency to open the eyes of some to the true meaning of the text. For this purpose I send you this communication.

In Isaiah, chap. 45, verse 7, we read: "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and create EVIL. I, the Lord, do all these things." This passage is quoted, by some, as proof that God is the author of wickedness, and, therefore, cannot justly inflict punishment, in the world to come, for our wicked deeds. This is, however, a forced and false construction. The evil, spoken of in the passage, is not sin, but distress, such as befel Job in the days of his visitation of misfortune, and as is adverted to in Amos 3: 6, and other cases.

Everlasting punishment, you know, is the great objectionable point of doctrine held by us orthodox people. The Universalists cannot endure the idea of such enduring endurement of punishment. But that does not alter the doctrine any. I will here give the different versions of the above quoted translators, on Matt. 25: 46: "These [the wicked] shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." Dr. LUTHER renders it: "And they [the wicked] will go into everlasting (or eternal) torment; but the righteous into everlasting (or eternal) life." ("Und sie [die Gottlosen] werden in die ewige Pein gehen; aber die Gerechten in das ewige Leben." In this version the term everlasting, or eternal, which are both the meaning of the German word ewig, are alike applied to the duration of the punishment and the life, one of which is to be the portion of each of us after the Judgment. And, therefore, it follows, that if the threatened punishment is not to be of unending duration, then is the promised life not of unending duration. What then comes of our hopes of a blessed immortality beyond the grave? The anonymous translation renders it: "Then will (or shall) these [the wicked] go away into the everlasting (or eternal) torment; (punishment) but the righteous into the everlasting (or eternal) life." ("Da werden diese [die Gottlosen] hingehen in die ewige Pein, (STRAFE) die Gerechten abar in das ewige Leben.") Here, again, is the word ewig (eternal and everlasting) applied alike to both classes. Dr. VAN ESS renders it: "So these [the wicked] will go to everlasting (or eternal) punishment; but the righteous in the everlasting (or eternal) life." "So werden diese [die Gottlosen] zur ewigen Strafe, die Gerechten aber in das ewige Leben eingehen.") In this the meaning is the same as in the other translations of the passage.

Now, if "everlasting punishment" and "eternal life" are terms signifying the same duration—and that they are, these three German translations fully and most clearly prove—then, I ask, what becomes of our hope of future salvation, if it be not "worked out with fear and trembling" this side of the grave? Will not the deceived knock at the door and say: "Lord! Lord! open unto us?" But hear him answer: "Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; I never knew you!" If the believers in eternal punishment are in error, and the Universalists are correct, then are we still safe, IF we do make that preparation which we believe God requires, and which the Universalists deny; and in that case we would only "have our labor for our pains," but get to Heaven as well as they, only after a greater effort. But if they are wrong, and, persisting in their error, refuse to repent of their past sins, to lead a holy life and to abstain from all evil, keeping all the commandments of God, then sad will be their mistake, indeed! May the Lord in mercy save us all from false doctrine!

June 1, 1846.

LIVING in the nineteenth century, with every facility for acquiring serviceable and salutary knowledge, with every variety of books, on religion, science and general intelligence, we are highly astonished at the perverted taste of the mass of the reading world. Their selections are often in very bad keeping, with their pretensions to respectability. Whether we enter the drawing-room of the opulent and fashionable, or the hut of the outcast from society, we can generally find a range of books, teaching nearly the same thing in substance, although clothed in more refined language. Fictitious tales of crime and heroic licentiousness, murder, suicide, and every kind of loose conduct, are greedily sought after and perused, always with serious detriment to a virtuous mind, and too frequently the remote cause of loathsome disease and premature death: while works of truth and useful knowledge, that would improve the mind, and make men more happy and intelligent, and fit them for a better world, are, in a measure, neglected. And a just estimate may always be formed of an individual's character and principle, by the books he peruses.—For as good and useful books will tend to lead men forward on the path of rectitude, so bad ones will lead men astray, and into sin. Shun them, then, as you would the most deadly poison!—Shun them, if you would avoid the path that leads to disgrace in this world, and endless torment in the world to come!

And inasmuch as we can judge of an individual's reputation so well, by the character of the books he reads, we would advise all to avoid NOVELS, and other light reading, and employ that time in reading the BIBLE, and other works of solidity and sense, wherein they can gain salutary instructions that will "make wise to salvation," if carefully regarded and pursued. And should any be in want of a volume, teaching refinement and etiquette, we would say, read the Bible; it is the best book on that subject: it points out the way to Christ, who will purify the heart from all uncleanness, after which, all the actions will be pure, or refined. And in regard to good manners, the golden rule, given us, is, of itself, a sufficient guide for every sensible person: "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Luke vi. 31.

RUFUS.

Letter from Elder Jacob Myers.

ALLEGHENY CITY, PA., May 26, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I herewith transmit to you, for publication, a short communication, and the doings of the Standing Committee of the West Pa. Eldership for the present year.

Since I have been to home, I have somewhat assisted brother HAHN here and in Pittsburg, though not much in the way of preaching. The cause here is not so much on the advance, as one could expect; yet there is no doubt, if certain obstacles were once removed, matters would go on better. Brother H. is very industrious, and I am sure nothing is wanting on his side, so far as finite beings are able to judge.

The church in Irwin township, (my charge) has hitherto still held its own, and in some things, I think, has improved. I succeeded, during last winter, to organize a tetotal society; into which many of the brethren and sisters entered truly whole-souled, and have since endeavored, by precept and example, to discourage the unnecessary use of intoxicating drink. This spring I succeeded, likewise, in commencing a Sabbath school among them, which was likely to become prosperous when I left in last month. I do hope and pray, that these two institutions will be attended with God's blessing; if so, that part of Venango county will no little feel the good effects thereof. The people here have, hitherto, almost been perishing for lack of knowledge.—Many, for want of better knowledge, will resort to the intoxicating cup—some to drown sorrow, others to get happy; and the ruinous effects of "King Alcohol" are often exhibited in the bleeding noses, broken heads, and mutilated profiles, of otherwise rational creatures; and in broken windows and doors of houses, and the ragged habiliments, and haggard and woe-stricken faces of the wives and children of those inebriates. I hope the brethren in Irwin township, will do all in their power, to forever annihilate the effects and influence which jugs, taverns, and doggerels have exercised over their poor actions in this section. God grant it! Amen.

I have visited the church at Rockland, occasionally, last winter and this spring. They are doing well there, considering that they have no regular ministry; for brother SETH RICHMOND does not, for certain reasons, attend there. He has moved to Athens county, Ohio. But the fact is, they ought to have a preacher—one that could reside among them.

We are bad off for preachers here in West Pa.; that is, for actual laborers. Out of something like twenty licensed preachers, only five are in active service; and should I now be laid up, there would still be one less in the small number. What shall be done? "The harvest is truly great, but the laborers are few: pray ye the Lord of the harvest, to send us more laborers."

In my first and short letter, I promised to give the result of our last campmeetings; but as it is now so long since, I am affraid a long report respecting them, would taste rather stale to the readers of the ADVOCATE. Suffice it to say, then, that at all the campmeetings I attended, some good was done, even to occular demonstration, and much more, I trust, which we shall only and fully know in the church triumphant.

I attended the Slippery Rock, Irwin township, and Rockland campmeetings. At the first, there were about fifteen tents, and a large concourse of people attended: some few conversions and baptizings were the result. At the second, quite a refreshing season came to us in the last, which resulted in the conversion of more than a score, and the baptism of half a score. Here were twenty-five tents. At the last named place, the times were not so propitious as they could have been: rainy weather was a great drawback on the laboring class.

If I shall be necessitated to stay at home for the present, but yet able to wield the pen, I will send you some more communications on different subjects, connected with religion, which lie near my heart, and concerning which, all should have correct views. Nothing more, but remain

Your brother and fellow-laborer,

In the Kingdom and patience of Jesus,

J. MYERS.

The World's Convention.

June 6, 1846.

WHAT is done in regard to raising money to send a delegate to the great "WORLD'S CONVENTION," to be held in London, in August next, must be done soon. Time flies swiftly by, and I know that if the brethren neglect to send a representative from the "Church of God," they will be sorry for it in future. The money is what is wanted. Now, I do believe that there are few of the rich brethren, but that would give from five to ten dollars each, for this great purpose. All they want is asking. And I would suggest, (and ask) that a trial may be made of the suggestion, that some one visit the brethren to this end, immediately. One person can collect the required sum in less than a week. For my part, I hereby pledge myself to give five dollars for that purpose. And I will send it to you, by letter, as soon as required. Others with whom I have spoken on this subject, will likewise do their share. BRETHREN! awake to the importance of this matter, and victory will perch upon our united efforts.—Let there be no delay—no backwardness.—Who will take this matter upon himself, to collect the money?

LONDON.

Letter from Brother J. Miller, Ill.

CHERRY GROVE, CARROLL COUNTY, ILLINOIS, May 15, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take up my pen to inform you where we are—how we are—and how we are pleased with this country. In the first place, I am happy to inform you, that we are all well; for which blessing we thank the good Lord. We got to this State on the 21st of September last. We were five weeks on the road; but we only travelled thirty days. We did not travel on Sundays; therefore, we were one week longer on the road. I stopped in Oregon city last winter, in Ogle county; and this spring I moved to Cherry Grove, where brother ISAAC and I have rented a large farm, and are farming. We are seven miles from Mt. Carroll, seventeen miles from Savana, and forty miles from Galena, the lead mines.

This is a fine country, and well watered, and as good water as ever I drank. The land is rich, and like a garden to work, and is very productive. The only objection is, the timber is too scarce. But that difficulty, however will be overcome soon, as the timber grows very fast here. On the whole, therefore, I am glad to inform you, that we are all well pleased with the country, and never regretted that we come out here.

But I am sorry to say, that there are but few of the brethren and sisters out here, as yet; still I feel very much encouraged to think that there will be a goodly number coming this summer, from the Fording, Md. Brothers REINECKER, M'CORMICK, JAMES MILLER, the two SHEAFFERS, and some others, are expected to be on here soon.

The people here are very friendly, and turn out well to meetings. They are also very orderly, and are not filled with prejudice like the sectarians in the East. Just around us, the Disciples and Dunkards are most numerous. We are not settled yet. Perhaps we may go to Iowa after awhile, as some of the brethren who are coming out, wish to go there. We have but a short distance there, and there appears to be a better chance of getting timber in that country.

I think when some more of the brethren come out to this country, we ought to have a preacher or two out here. I think that the preachers might be very useful in this country. I am in hopes, also, one day or other, to see you out here. Isaac and I want the Advocate sent to us. Address to Cherry Grove Post Office. I would like to see the Journal of the last Eldership: please send me one.

I still feel a strong desire to serve the Lord, and to make my way to Heaven. I beg an interest in your prayers. God bless you and all the brethren.

Yours, in christian love,

JACOB MILLER.

Camp Meetings.

June 8, 1846.

Many souls were converted to God last year at the campmeetings. This summer there may be even a more abundant ingathering of precious souls. The seed of most of the first churches was sown at campmeetings. Many persons who would think themselves defiled, if they entered a Bethel, will visit the campmeetings merely to see, but the preached word often operates upon their hearts, convictions of guilt seize them, that they cannot readily shake off, and the result is, the vilest persecutors of the religion of Christ, become its strongest defenders. Most of the aged brethren and sisters tell us, that there the Lord first awakened them to see their danger, and coming forward to the altar of prayer, became the happy recipents of redeeming love. Now, we earnestly hope the brethren will think of this matter in time, and not do as some churches did last year—not tent at all! If we are rightly informed, some of these brethren, when they heard how many were converted at the campmeetings, were extremely sorry that they had not made arrangements for having one; but it was too late to appoint one then. Let us bear these things in mind in future. Brethren! attend to this matter in time. Don't listen to the luke-warm, who are negligent about tenting on account of the little trouble and expense. Go to work, brethren, in due time you shall reap your everlasting reward. Heaven will smile upon your praiseworthy efforts. God will bless your fervid zeal for the spreading of His blessed word among the people, to the benefit of their undying souls.

A Communication on Watchfulness.

Lancaster county.
June 6, 1846.

Our Divine Master inculcates a spirit of watchfulness in all who profess to be his servants. Hence, he says: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." Now, the the question naturally arises, what our Lord meant in saying this, or giving this charge? We may form various opinions of this passage, but we are fully aware that the adversary of souls is always busily engaged in laying snares, or tempting those who have avowed obedience to Christ; therefore, we should be on our guard at all times, to stand in awe and sin not. We read that he does not only come to us as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, but he comes, also, in sheep's clothing; and we are warned to beware of them. Frequently, it is the case, that those who have been regenerated or born again, have been drawn away. By these means, they have left these things slip, that they have heard, and have not given earnest heed to their steps. In fact, all those who have ever backsliden from God, have been led into temptation through their own carelessness, and when lust had conceived, it brought forth sin. The Apostle says: "We are not ignorant of his devices;" that is, as long as we are striving against sin. But as soon as we leave ourselves be lulled asleep on the lap of carnal security, then soon symptoms of luke-warmness develope themselves, and before they are aware of the consequence, they find themselves away off from the track or path of duty; and it is to be feared that few ever return again. We have many things to guard against, while sojourning through this vast howling wilderness. Therefore, it becomes us to pray without ceasing, knowing that we are in an enemy's land, surrounded by those who are trying to impeed our progress in the Divine Life. But God has promised that no weapon formed against us shall prosper, while we are fighting the good fight of faith. Now we are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil, and to cleave to that which is good, and die daily to these vain and perishing things of time and sense, and to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. And it requires a great deal of caution, prayer and watchfulness, in order that we may overcome the world, the flesh and the devil. Nothing is more dangerous and ensnaring to the soul, than worldly riches.—How many, who have been enabled to stand unshaken against all the blasts of adversity, have visibly lost ground, when the tide of prosperity has flowed in upon them. It is an undeniable fact, that it is difficult to have riches and not set our hearts upon them. It is not wrong to have wealth, if we apply it to good and proper purposes; but the vain and transitory things of this world are so enticing, that we are more prone to serve the god of this world, than the God who made us, and to learn to possess the things of this world, as though we possess them not, and live and walk according to the requirements of the Bible. "Unless a man forsake all and follow me," says Christ, "he cannot be my disciple." How ready are our hearts on hearing this, to cry out: "This is a hard saying; who can bear it?" It is an easy thing to say: "We have left all for Christ;" but very few are found in the practice of self-denial, and patiently bearing the cross of Christ. Yet this is the test of a true disciple. Under these considerations, we should ever confide in the Lord for grace to serve Him with an eye single to His glory, and then all will be right.—How often do we see, in times of revivals of religion, that many who, we have reason to believe, have been brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, are very ready to say, "that their feet have been established, and are now firmly built upon the rock;" yea, and at this important crisis, they will also claim: "I fear no danger; I am certain I shall not fall, or ever backslide again." But, alas! little do they think that the devil is so near ready to quench the sparks of grace, which have been sown in the heart, and rob them of the pearl of great price. And it is at this point that many make shipwreck of faith, and the cause assigned for this is, they have not resisted to blood, striving against sin. They began to build before they counted the cost.

The path to Heaven, as described in the scriptures of divine truth, is very narrow, and it requires us to give heed to our feet that our steps slip not, because there are so many ways leading away from the straight path. And while we are looking forward to the day when all these things will be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all manner of holy conversation? Seeing that the day is fast approaching; yes, we have reason to believe it is near at hand, therefore, we should be always on the watch, for fear that that day should overtake us unawares, and we should be found wanting before the Lord. In view of all these things, it becomes us to watch and pray, and to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that we may be found ready, and then we shall have part in the first resurrection, and hear that joyful approbation: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

W. H. WAGNER.

Letter from Brother J. H. Hurley.

Lisburn, June 4, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I lift my pen to drop a few lines for the Advocate, and to let the friends of Zion know, that I have just returned from a recent visit to Maryland, and saw much to encourage me, and every other lover of the cause of God. I commenced a meeting on the 23d of May, at brother Young's; and like in the days of Job, when the sons of God met together, Satan also met with us, in order to molest us. But we tried, in our weak manner, to hold forth the Word of Life to the people, but with little success until Sunday, when the truth of God "began to run and be glorified," and many were seen to weep on account of their sins. During the meeting, five persons presented themselves as subjects of prayer, and three were happily converted to God, and one buried with Christ in baptism. May the Lord bless the converts, and make them strong in the Lord. On Wednesday I left for York county, and left sinners crying for mercy. May the Lord have mercy upon them! The prospects are now better than I ever knew them to be. I trust the day is not far distant, when the Lord will get for himself many witnesses in that place. Could not some of the brethren visit them occasionally? I conclude by sending you seven more new subscribers for the Advocate.

JOSIAH H. HURLEY.

Letter from Brother George Diltz.

Woodbury, May 29, 1846.

Brother J. Winebrenner:—

I have been requested to write to you, by several brethren, and request you to send their papers to this office. For my own part, I am well pleased with the new paper. It appears to me that it is altogether a better paper, than what it has been under the old name. The title, also, of the new paper, pleases me much better than the old one. I think it is more suitable than the other.

I was also highly pleased when I got the paper, and found accounts therein of revivals in different parts of the country. God knows it revives my soul to hear of some poor rebellious sinners having turned to God. I love to see and hear of people getting religion, and then living consistent. The world is full of ungodly professors, who walk not at all in accordance with the Bible, and who, in my opinion, are ten times more the enemies of the Cross of Christ, than those who make no profession at all.

I shall close with these few remarks for the present. If God spares me, I intend to write, perhaps, a few letters this year for the Church Advocate. I like to find articles of your own writing in it. Please give us more of them. Oh! that the "Church of God" may multiply, and alway be governed by pure motives and true principles.

Yours, &c.,

GEORGE DILTZ.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

The News by the Hibernia.—The most interesting characteristic of this news is the evidence it affords of a desire on the part of Great Britain to settle the Oregon question in an amiable manner. This desire, we are sure, is reciprocated by every reasonable person in this country. It is thought that positive instructions have been communicated to Mr. Pakenham to settle the matter at once, and that negotiations will immediately be renewed at Washington.

Presbyterian General Assembly—Afternoon Session.—The devotional exercise having been concluded, and before entering upon business the following useful hint was thrown out applicable in more places than one. The venerable Moderator, Doctor Cox. who, it appears, eschews tobacco, said that a petition, signed by a number of pew holders, and the sexton of the church, had been handed to him, which loudly complained that some of the members had disgraced the pews by a shower of saliva from that accursed weed, tobacco. (Sensation.) The effusions and monuments of this detestable weed were plainly to be seen. (Considerable laughter.) He did not wish to hurt the feelings of any of the members, but he would like his remarks to go through them like an electric steam. (Great sensation.) He thought chewing tobacco a great sin. The use of that weed certainly hurts their bodies and souls.

Public vs Secret Associations.—A sharp discussion recently took place in Foxboro' Mass., on the subject of secret societies, occasioned by the organization in that place of an Odd Fellows' Lodge. The discussion resulted in the formation of a new order called the "Foxboro' Pro Bono Publico Family." This association has no secrets, and admits ladies and gentlemen to membership, (provided they do not belong to any secret society,) on their paying, the former 75 cents, and the latter $1,50 per year. They already number 300 members. — Article second of their constitution says:

"The object of this association shall be the relief of the destitute, attention and kindness to the sick, the friendless, and the suffering poor, residents in the town of Foxboro', except such as are already provided for by their connection with those societies whose affairs are conducted with secrecy, and, whose internal organization and policy are not open to the inspection of the public."

The rivalry of these two associations, says a letter writer from Foxboro', will afford, for a while, relief to the poor, the sick, and the afflicted.—Am. Express.

The Citizens of St. Louis have subscribed nearly $10,000 for fitting out volunteers for the war. The St. Louis Insurance Co. have loaned $10,000 for the purpose at nominal interest.

The National Fair.—The Great National Exhibition of the Manufactures and skill of the citizens of our country, at Washington city, closed on Wednesday the 3d instant.

Congress.—On Thursday, May 28, the House of Representatives of U. S. unanimously passed the following:

"Resolved, That the thanks of Congress are due and are hereby tendered, to Brevet Major Gen. Zachary Taylor, commanding the army of occupation, his officers and men, for the fortitude, skill, enterprise, and courage which have distinguished the recent brilliant operations on the Rio Grande.

"Resolved, That Congress sincerely sympathize with all the relatives and friends of the officers and soldiers of the army of the United States who so bravely fell in the service of their country on the Rio Grande."

Slavery in the M. P. Church.—The General Conference, assembled in Cincinnati, adopted the following:

1. Resolved, That in the judgment of the General Conference, the holding of slaves is in many circumstances a sin against God; (2) and in such cases should be condemned by the M. P. Church; (3) nevertheless it is our opinion that under some circumstances it is not sinful. (4) This General Conference does not feel authorized by the constitution to legislate on the subject of slavery, and by a solemn vote we present to the Church our judgment that the different Annual Conferences, respectively, should make their own regulations on the subject, so far as authorized by the Constitution.

Fort Wilkins, Copper Harbor, May 14, 1846.

The news from Eagle river, the Cliff mines, and the Pittsburgh Company, is so favorable as to be scarcely believed. They have ore out, in large quantities, estimated as worth one million of dollars. Masses of native copper, so far uncovered as to show from ten to twenty tons, have been showing themselves in several mines. Native silver is found in some veins in masses weighing from one ounce to five pounds. You will have heard ere this of the arrival of 60 tons of silver ore from the Pittsburgh Company. They have several hundreds of tons (308) selected specimens, ready to barrel, as soon as they get the barrels.

American Temperance Union.—The Evangelist gives the following summary of the report read at the recent anniversary:

"The report then discussed at some length the question whether licenses were for the good of the people? The State of Massachusetts had decided that they were not and had abolished them. In Connecticut, 200 out of 220 towns had given their virdict against the law.—Maine, Vermont, Michigan and other States had submitted the question of license to the people, and thus far the decision had been on the right side.

Crutchet's Solar Gass.—This new light, with which the National Fair at Washington was lighted, is said to be the most brilliant, safe and economical light ever introduced, being made from common oil or any kind of grease at about one third the cost of common gas. The apparatus for making this gas is so simple that it can be used by any one, and is exceedingly cheap. It is intended for hotels, manufactories, steamboats, private houses, churches, &c, it is perfectly inoffensive, and occupies but little room The principal hotels through out the country are about adopting the invention.

The General Assembly.—It will be seen that the Assembly have appointed Richmond, Va., as the place of meeting in 1847, and that they have refused to appoint delegates to the World's Convention for the promotion of Christian Union. The report of the proceedings will be found pretty full and accurate.

Jamaica—Improvement of the Negroes.—The moral improvement recently brought about in this island, is truly cheering to the Philanthropist. In the different congregations, formed by the Scotch missionaries, there are now 2,400 communicants and 1,600 scholars. A due regard to the marriage relation is observed, where a few years since concubinage was almost universal.—Jour. of Com.

More Heresy!—Our Sovereign Lord, the Pope, has discovered another "damnable heresy," in addition to that ancient one, "the diurnal motion of the earth on its axis," and those modern ones, viz. Railroads and Galvanism!! By the last Steamer we are informed that an edict has been issued at Rome, "denouncing the modern innovation of Gaslight, and requiring that all private gasworks should be suppressed!" Bravo, Pope Gregory XVI!!

Harrisburg Volunteers.—We learn that the Dauphin Guards have made up their compliment of men, 77, and have tendered their services to the Governor to fill up the requisition of the President.

We understand that the Harrisburg Rifle have also their compliment of men. and have made known to the Governor their rediness to march in defence of their country.

New School Assembly.—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 27, 28 and 29, were consumed chiefly in discussing the subject of Slavery, though without final action. On Friday the committee on that subject reported the answer of our General Assembly on the subject of a united celebration of the Lord's Supper. They express regret that the Old Aassembly did not accede to the proposition.

Terrible Fire in Warren, Ohio.—The Cleveland papers announce the destruction of the greater portion of the business part of the flourishing village of Warren, by fire, last Monday night a week. The fire borke out about 11 o'clock, and spread with fearful rapidity. One whole square, in which were the Post Office, two Printing Offices, the Democrat and Herald, a large row of dry goods and business establishments, some 20 in number, was entirely consumed, together with a number of barns, out-houses, &c.

The Mormons.—A Mormon settlement, under the influence of Sidney Rigdon, has been commenced in the vicinity of Greencastle, in the adjoining county of Franklin, Penn'a. and some eight or nine miles distant from this place. They have purchased a large tract of land from Mr. McLanahan, for which they paid some fifteen thousand dollars. Upon the tract, is a very valuable water power, and we are told they propose erecting extensive manufactories—among the rest a cotton factory. A considerable number of the faithful have commenced locating upon their new premises, Sidney Rigdon being present and directing their movements. —Hag. (Md.) News.

Army Items.—The President has appointed two Roman Catholic Clergymen, viz: Rev. J. McElroy, late of Frederick, and Rev. Mr. Rea. of Georgetown, D. C. chaplains to the army.

Constitution of Iowa.—The Convention which recently assembled to form another Constitution for Iowa, have completed their work and adjourned. The present Constitution is the same in its most essential features as the one which was adopted by the former Convention. It prevents the General Assembly from contracting any debts exceeding $100,000, and prohibits any corporate body from exercising banking privileges.

Conviction of a Postmaster.—Eben H. Clark, Postmaster at Cherry Ridge, Wayne county, Pa., was convicted in the U. S. Circuit Court at Phil'a. on the 2d inst., of purloining money from letters.—He was sentenced by Judge Randall on Saturday, to ten years imprisonment in the Eastern penitentiary.

Gen. Taylor raised to the rank of a Major General.—The U. S. Senate, in consideration of the distinguished services this gallant officer has rendered his country, unanimously confirmed the nomination made by the President, raising him to the brevet rank of Major General.

Colonizing Palestine.—A book is circulating in Europe called 'Hibbath Jerusalem,' written from the Ribbi's in Jerusalem to their countrymen thoughout the world. It is a call to all the Jews to come up to the Holy Land, showing the facilities and the removal of all obstructions to their doing so.

Lake Superior Copper.—The developments of the copper mines on Lake Superior are most extriordinary, and bid fair to excel anything the world ever saw. They are not only rich in copper but in Silver also, and will hereafter doubtless supply a large quantity of that precious metal.

Great Load.—The Empire, the most magnificent boat now running on the Lakes, lately came into Cleveland with a load of thirteen hundred passengers. She is reported to have taken in six thousand dollars before leaving the Buffalo wharf.

Abolitionism.—At the recent anniversary of the American Anti-Slavery Society, "a letter was read from Dr. B. Child, Esq., of Northampton, denouncing the American Union, declaring that he should hail rebellion as a blessing, and look forward to its desolution as a glorious consummation."

Popish Intolerance.—The Spanish Government has expelled the Baptist Missionaries who were stationed on the island of Fernando Po., near the African coast.

"Their property, which they had regularly purchased, and for which they had paid about $15,000, has been taken from them without compensation."

Sons of Temperance.—The Sons of Temperance held a grand national celebration at New York, on the 9th of June. There are now six hundred Divisions in operation in twenty-four of the States, embracing nearly 40,000 members. The Order commenced a little over three years ago.

The License Question.—In the State of N. Y. 399 townships or districts have voted, "No License," and 73 "License:" leaving a majority of 326 against licenses for the sale of ardent spirits. Nobly done, New York!

Locusts.—The Washing Pa., Reporter, May 29th, says the locusts are here. The woods are vocal with their muisc. Untold millions cluster upon the boughs of the forest trees, and the orchards are literally black with them. Whether or not our fruit trees are to fall a prey to their voracity, or only their foliage is to suffer, future observation must decide.

The War on the Rio Grande.—The mails, yesterday, brought three days later intiligence from Gen. Taylor's army. The enemy has not ventured again on the east side of the river. If there are 7000 fresh troops at Matamoras, they seem to be content to remain there. Gen. Taylor had returned to his camp opposite the town. He was preparing to secure himself from future attack by occupying the small towns on the Rio Grande. An expidition had departed for the town of Barreta, and it is probable that he will also occupy Matamoras.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Excellent Advice in Brief.

"Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his thread twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again.—Make up your mind to do a thing, and you will surely do it. Fear not if trouble comes upon you: keep up your spirits, though the day be a dark one.

Troubles never stop forever—
The darkest day will pass away.

If the sun is going down, look up at the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven! With God's presence and God's promises, a man or a child may be cheerful.

Never despair when fog's in the air!
A sun-shining morning will come without warning.

Mind what you run after! Never be content with a bubble that will burst, or a firework that will end in smoke and darkness. Get that which you can keep, and which is worth keeping.

Something sterling that will stay,
When gold and silver fly away.

Fight hard against a hasty temper!!—Anger will come, but resist it stoutly. A spark may set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury.

He that revenges knows no rest;
The meek possess a peaceful breast.

If you have an enemy, act kindly to him, and make him your friend. You may not win him at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, till you have compassed your end. By little and little, great things are completed.

Water falling day by day,
Wears the hardest rock away.

And so repeated kindness will wear away a heart of stone.

Whatever you do, do it willingly. A man that is compelled to work, cares not how badly it is performed!

A cheerful spring gets on quick,
A grumbler in the mud will stick!

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers; for we can keep out of the way of wild beasts, but bad thoughts win their way every where. The cup that is full will hold no more; keep your heads and hearts full of good thoughts, that bad thoughts may find no room to enter.

Be on your guard, and strive and pray,
To drive all evil thoughts away."

A Tremendous Scene.

The hour of man's departure from the present world, often reveals to the neglector of the great salvation most affecting and tremendous scenes, when the veil of eternity is suddenly rent asunder.

Some men die (said a faithful preacher) as stupid and as ignorant of their awful sinfulness in the sight of God as they have lived. O, what a tremendous scene opens upon them in eternity! Others continue to keep their eyes closed, till they lie stretched on a dying bed, and then the truth flashes in upon them in a moment.

A few years since a case of this kind was related to me by a friend, under whose own eyes it happened: One who had lived so as to gain the general esteem of his neighbors, and who had reached a good old age, was at length laid on the bed of death. The thought of going into the unveiled presence of God, to be tried for his soul, awoke him from his spiritual slumbers. He sent for his pastor, and upon his arrival, said to him:—"Why have you not plainly told me of my guilt, and laid before me my danger?" The pastor replied: "I have repeatedly in the pulpit, yea, constantly proclaimed the guilt and danger of all unconverted men." "But," said this awakened and dying sinner, "I always thought that you were speaking to others. Now I feel that I am the man: and now it is too late! O, what a load of guilt is now on my soul! Threescore years and ten I have lived, and neglected God all the time! I used to think I was ready and prepared to meet him; but I did not then see the exceeding wickedness of my heart, and now it is too late. O, if I could live only one week—only one week—how would I work to save my soul. But I cannot do it—I cannot do it—I am lost, for I feel that even now I am dying!" It was indeed so. The ghastly hue of death sat upon his countenance, and though his pastor earnestly sought to direct him to Christ, no comfort dawned upon this aged sinner. In the midst of his distracting fears and bitter anguish, the string of life broke asunder, and his soul was hurried away to the judgment bar to hear the sentence that sealed its everlasting doom.

New Machine.

I have been examining a new machine for sewing, which has recently been invented and constructed by an ingenuous mechanic of Cambridge. So far as I am informed on the subject, this is the first attempt to construct a machine of the kind, and it appears to me to be an eminently sucsessful one. The machine is very compact, not occupying a space of more than about six inches each way. It runs with so much ease, that I should suppose one person might easily operate twenty or thirty of them, and the work is done in a most thorough and perfect manner. Both sides of the seam look alike, appearing to be beautifully stitched, and the seam is closer and more uniform than when sewed by hand.

It will sew straight or curved seams with equal facility, and so rapidly, that it takes but two minutes to sew the whole length of the outside seam of a pair of men's pantaloons. It sets 400 stitches a minute with perfect ease, and the proprietor thinks there is no difficulty in setting 700 in a minute. The thread is less worn by this process than by hand sewing, and consequently retains more of its strength. The simplicity of the construction of this machine, and the accuracy, rapidity, and perfection of its operation, will place it in the same rank with the eard machine, the straw braider, the pin machine and the coach lace loom—machines which never fail to command the admiration of every intelligent beholder.—Bos. Cor. of Worcester Spy.

Methodist Protestant General Conference.

The General Conference of this church closed its session in Cincinnati on the 20th ult.

The Home Mission controversy was so decided, by a vote of 59 to 12, that hereafter mission churches may be established in any unoccupied territory, in city, town or country, and remain free from the restrictive rule, limiting the term of ministerial service, as long as the annual Conferences shall deem proper. This change wisely admits the doctrine of accommodation to circumstances. A new district was set off also, to be called the "Philadelphia District."

On the subject of slavery, the Conference adopted the following resolution:

"That in the judgment of the General Conference, the holding of slaves is, in many circumstances, a sin against God, and in such cases should be condemned by the Methodist Protestant Church; nevertheless, it is our opinion that, under some circumstances, it is not sinful. This General Conference does not feel authorized by the Constitution to legislate on the subject of slavery, and by a solemn vote we present to the church our judgment, that the different annual Conferences, respectively, should make their own regulations on the subject, so far as authorized by the Constitution."

There are now thirty-one Annual Conferences in this confederacy.

The following delegates were elected by the General Conference, to represent the Methodist Protestant Church in the World's Convention on Christian Union, to be held in London in August next:

From the South—Rev. Dr. S. K. Jennings and W. W. Hill.

From the West—Rev. G. Brown and C. Springer.

From the East—Rev. Dr. Waters, T. H. Stockton, and W. Starr.

The next General Conference is to be held in Baltimore, May, 1850.

A Father's Advice to his Daughters.

Remember that in whatever station it shall please an All-wise Providence to place you in life, you will be linked by many and strong ties to your fellow-men, and that you have it in your power to make many hearts blessed and joyous, or to pour into many a cup the bitterness of anguish or sorrow. the strings of a thousand hearts, more delicate than the strings of the Eolian harp, are all around you. A look, a word, a breath, may cause them to vibrate in the most delightful harmony; a hand rudely drawn over them will produce the wildest discord and jarring.

How much you may do for yourselves, your parents and your friends, by making it a law of your minds and conduct, to use at all times and under every provocation, only kind words. "A soft answer" will appease the wrath of an angry man; a kind look, a silent tear, without the utterance of a word, may melt the stoutest heart. And these are the mighty weapons which God has given to you in your weakness for beauty and defence. Use them well. Let words of kindness dwell on your lips, the smile of cheerfulness sit ever upon your countenance, and an easy, benevolent courtesy mark your intercourse with all; then will you be truly daughters of grace, household jewels, and be the cherished treasures of homes made sacred and happy by kindness, contentment and happiness.—N. Protestant.

Newspapers.

A newspaper, says a contemporary, is a school in a family worth ten dollars a year. Even the most barren paper brings some thing new. Children read or hear the contents, gain inteligence of the affairs of the world, and acquire useful knowledge of more importance to them than a present of fifteen acres of land.—Parents are not aware of the vast importance of newspapers in a family of children. We have made the remark before, and we repeat it, that of two families of children equally smart and going to the same school—let one of them have the free use of a newspaper, and it would excite astonishment to mark the difference between them. Full one-half and an important half of education, as it respects the buiness of the world and the ability to rise and make one's self respectable in it, is derived from newspapers.—What parent would not wish his children respectable and inteligent.

An Honest Man.

James Read, of Boston, is an honest man—the "noblest work of God." In 1842 he failed in business and his liabilities amounted to $850,000. His assetts reached $800,000. He received from his creditors a full and honorable discharge, yet in two years and a half afterwards he paid them the remaing $50,000, and now "owes no man anything." His creditors have presented him with a rich service of plate in testimonial of their appreciation of his worth as an honest man. We note this fact with pleasure, and advise some whom we know who are now flourishing and "faring sumptuously every day," to "go and do likewise," and ease their consciences so that they may "wax fat," and become as men again. We are a little selfish in this to be sure, for well we know that if they were to follow this advice there, would be fine times for the printer.

A. Clarke, L. L. D. on Slavery.

I send you three quotations from his Commentary for your paper.

The first is from Isa. lviii. 6: "How can any nation pretend to fast or worship God at all, or dare to profess that they believe in the existence of such a Being, while they carry on the slave trade, and traffic in the souls, blood, and bodies of men! O ye most flagitious of knaves, and worst of hypocrites, cast off at once the mask of religion, and deepen not your endless perdition by professing the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ while ye continue in this traffic."

The 2d is from his remarks at the close of the 7th chap. of 1 Cor. "And to conclude, I here register my testamony against the unprincipled, inhuman, antichristian, and diabolical slave trade, with all its authors, promoters, abetters, and sacrilegious gains; as well as against the great Devil the father of it and them."

The 3d is from his Com.—on the Eph. vi. 5: "In heathen countries, slavery was in some sort excusable; but among Christians it is an enormity, and a crime for which perdition has scarcely an adequate state of punishment."

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publisher may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices where they are directed, they are held responsible till they have settled their bill and ordered their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Beautiful.—There is something in beauty, whether it dwells in the human face, in the pencilled leaves of flowers, the sparkling surface of a fountain, or that aspect which genius breathes over its statute, that makes us mourn its ruin. I should not envy that man his feelings, who could see a leaf wither, or a flower fall without some sentiment of regret.—This tender interest in the beauty and fragility of things around us, is only a slight tribute of becoming grief and affection, for nature, in our adversities, never deserts us. She even comes more nearly to us in our sorrows, and leading us away from the paths of disappointment and pain into her soothing recesses, allays the anguish of our bleeding hearts, binds up the wounds that have afflicted, whispers the meek pledges of a better hope, and, in harmony with a spirit of still holier birth, points to that home where decay and death can never come.

The responsibilities of an individual are always proportioned to his privileges.

Dr. Franklin's Moral Code.

Our great American philosopher and statesman, Benjamin Franklin, drew up the following list of moral virtues, to which he paid constant and earnest attention, and thereby made himself a better and happier man:

Temperance - - Eat not to fulness; drink not to elevation.

Silence - - - Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversation.

Order - - - Let all things have their places; let each part of your business have its time.

Resolution - - - Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.

Frugality - - - Make no expense but to do good to others or yourself; that is, waste nothing.

Industry - - Lose no time; be always employed in something useful; cut off all unnecessary actions.

Sincerity - - Use no hurtful deceit; think innocently and justly; and if you speak speak accordingly.

Justice - - - Wrong none by doing injuries, or omiting the benefits that are your duty.

Moderation - Avoid extremes; forbear resenting injuries.

Cleanliness - - Suffer no uncleanliness in body, clothes, or habitation.

Tranquility - - Be not disturbed about trifles, or at accidents common and unavoidable.

Humility - - - Imitate Jesus Christ.

The Cost of War.

During the fifty-six years' existence of our federal government, the entire expenditures of that government, excluding the principal of the public debt, have been a little under one thousand millions of dollars, which have been appropriated as follows:

For the military service,	$286,998,357
For the naval do.	179,933,124
Pensions,	54,012,485
Interest of public debt,	42,494,853
Total,	$663,438,821
The balance has been expended as follows:
Principal of revolutionary debts and claims, (estimated) nearly,	$100,000,000
Civil list,	63,855,525
Foreign intercourse,	36,166,868
*Indian department,	42,893,488
†Miscellaneous,	64,107,721
Total, very nearly,	$306,033,602

*Including payments for Indian lands.

†Including, we presume, the purchase of Louisiana.

Thus we see that this most Christian nation, in something less than a lifetime, has paid nearly seven hundred millions of dollars directly for the cost of war, or more than twice the cost of all its public service beside. The expenses of foreign intercourse, and much else, are indirectly created or exaggerated by the spirit of war. The real expenses of war, including the destruction of property, the stoppage of industry and improvement, and the blocking up of our coasts and harbors, have been not less than two millions of dollars during these fifty-six years of almost unbroken peace. What would be the cost of a seven years' war at this rate? What comparison do all our expenditures for religious, benevolent and philanthropic purposes bear to those resulting from this infernal scourge?—N. Y. Tribune.

A Useful Hint for Every Day Intercourse.

It was Goldsmith, we think, who said that nine-tenths of the petty livings and small difficulties springing from every day intercourse with our fellow-men, originate with ourselves. "Few of us," said he, "possess such well balanced minds, that we are not opperated upon by a spirit of envy or dislike. I have seen one act of a former companion and associate, so disturb the feelings of a friend that it converted him into a bitter enemy. It is an indication of a great mind to see and acknowledge the merits of a former associate, and to be justly proud of them. But it is the sure indication of a paltry, little, and envious mind, to take every occasion to detract and deteriorate from the talents or attainments of one who has given his days and nights to the most persevering industry, that he might do some good to the age in which he lived. It is a capital mistake, (very often fallen into) when we act upon the principle, that, by awarding the due meed of praise to others we thereby detract from the consideration which our fellow men may entertain for us.—The history of all true distinction will show, that the very reverse of this proposition is strictly true. Truly great minds are never envious, but small ones always are.

Santa Anna.—The Baltimore Clipper says: "It is now almost certain that this General will be recalled and again placed at the head of the Mexican Government; but how long to remain in power is uncertain, so frequent and sudden are the revolutions in that country. What effect his elevation to the presidency of Mexico will have upon the relations between that Government and the United States, it is impossible to say; but we incline to the opinion that it will be favorable to the preservation of peace. He is a man of ability and of experience, and of great ambition—and will therefore be more likely to employ his time and resources in endeavoring to secure himself in power, than in a hopeless contest with the United States."

A Prediction and its Fulfilment.

"In Mr. Clay's Raleigh letter, on the question of the Annexation of Texas, he used the following words:

"Under these circumstances, if the Government of the United States were to acquire Texas, it would acquire along with it all the incumbrances which Texas is under, and among them the actual of suspended war between Mexico and Texas. Of that consequence there cannot be a doubt. Annexation and war with Mexico are identical. Now for one I am certainly not willing to involve this country in a foreign war for the object of acquiring Texas. I regard all wars as great calamities, to be avoided, if possible, and honorable peace as the wisest and truest policy of this country."

Who Would!

Who would entrust an important law suit in the hands of a drunken Attorney?

Who would employ a drunken clerk to transact his business?

Who would vote to place a drunkard in an important office of trust?

Who would trust his life in the hands of a drunken physician?

Who would employ a drunkard in any capacity?

Not even the drunkard himself.

War and the Lord's-day.

Observation has taught us that war has respect for the Lord's-day, by making it the greatest day of war-movements. More than double the number of battles, I think have been fought on Sunday than an any other day of the week, among the nations who are called Christian nations!

The first important battle between the Americans and Mexicans, it appears, was on the Lord's-day. The Lousiana legion volunteered for war, on the Lord's-day. The city of Mobile called a public meeting at the Theatre on the Lord's-day, to adopt measures to further the Texas war.

Napoleon said that a handsome woman pleases the eye, but a good woman pleases the heart. The one is a jewell, the other a treasure.

POETRY.

'SLEEPEST THOU.'

BY MISS H. C. H.

Watchmen! are ye weary—sleeping
At your posts on Zion's towers?
Are ye tired, your vigils keeping?
Wake! the fearful tempest lowers!,
See! the cause of Zion languish,
Enemies her borders waste;
Hear her children's cry of anguish,
'Give us bread!' Oh, wake thee—haste!

Sleepest thou, Christian, near the altar
Where thy gifts are newly laid!
In thy warfare dost thou falter?
Rouse thee! seize the battle blade;
Thou must fight—the war cry soundeth,
Foes without and foes within;
Fierce temptations thee surroundeth,
Wake thee—wake; the strife begins.

Sleep'st thou, Sinner! dangers thicken
Round thy guilty head; oh, wake!
Lest perchance from mercy stricken,
Storms of wrath may o'er thee break;
Sleeping! tender mercy calling,
Falls unconcious on thine ear;
Wake thee! thou art stumbling—falling,
Where no voice of love thou'lt hear.

Father! by thy spirit waken,
Give us each thy voice to hear;
Onward—firm—our steps unshaken.
May we press;—and be thou near;
We are weak; Oh, wilt thou strengthen;
Teach us in thy strenght to fight;
Absent shadows 'round us lengthen,
With THY PRESENCE all is bright.

Elliot, Maine.

SPIRITUAL SONG.

1. There is a happy land,
Far, far away,
Where saints in glory stand,
Bright, bright as day.
O, how they sweetly sing,
Worthy is our Saviour king,
Loud let his praises ring,
For evermore.

2. Come to that happy land,
Come, come away.
Why will ye doubting stand?
Why still delay?
O! we shall happy be,
When from sin and sorrow free,
Lord, we shall live with thee,
Blest evermore.

3. Bright in the happy land,
Beams every eye;
Kept by a father's hand,
Love cannot die.
O! then to glory run,
Be a crown, and kingdom won,
And bright above the sun,
Reign evermore.

Here is this body pent,
I live and strive and roam;
And nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home.

Time and Eternity.

A lady had written on a card and placed in her garden-house on the top of an hour-glass, the following beautiful stanza. It was at a season when the flowers were in their highest beauty:

"To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see;
To think a weed is yet to bloom
From dust that I shall be!"

The next morning she found penciled on the back of the same card:

"To think when Heaven and Earth are fled,
And times and seasons o'er,
When all that can die, shall be dead,
That I must die no more!
Ah! where will then my portion be?
How shall I spend Eternity?"

Our Subscribers Again.

It will be seen, from the foregoing acknowledgements, that but few, comparatively, of our subscribers have, as yet, paid for their papers, although two-thirds of the time is already up. There is, however, one month more time left for the residue, to come forward and make payment. If this is done within the month of July, of course all will be right. But let no one delay payment beyond the month of July, for the terms require that payment for the paper, in all cases, be made within the first three months.

We have understood that many of the subscribers for the Advocate, are ready to make payment,and all they want and are waiting for, is that a call be made for the money, by some one of our regular agents. If this be so, we hope our agents will not hesitate to give them a call; yet, we think, it is more properly the business of the subscribers to call on the agents. It will be recollected, that all the preachers belonging to the several Elderships, are our regularly authorized and accredited agents; and besides them, we have appointed some general agents; to any of these, therefore, we say again, as we have said before, we wish our subscribers to make payment, within the limited time. Should they have no opportunity of seeing any of them within the time specified, then we advise them to remit to us, or any one of our general agents, the amount of their subscriptions, by mail. In our next, we hope to be able to give a longer list of credits. If any mistakes should occur in our lists of acknowledgements, we should take it as a favour to be apprized thereof, and have the same rectified.

Brothers T. Strohm, W. McFannen, L. Slingluff and others, have our hearty thanks for exerting themselves to promote the interests of the Anvocate.

BIOGRAPHY

JOSEPH HEISTER BAMBERGER.

The subject of this brief memoir, was the youngest son of Jacob and Sophia Bamberger, and was born near Middletown, Dauphin county, Pa., on the 15th of February, 1818. He received, in early life, a good English education, and was always a very active and promising youth. When quite young, he was often the subject of awakening grace, and felt the workings of a preaching spirit. He was known, at times, to try to preach to his comrades, and to imitate preachers. He was brought up in the (so-called) Lutheran faith, and according to the usages of that denomination, he was catechised and confirmed at the age of about seventeen years. Yet, notwithstanding, he still remained ignorant of the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins, till about eighteen years of age. He then become powerfully and savingly awakened, and soon afterwards experienced salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. This happy conversion of his soul he realized, at the altar, in the Bethel at Middletown, during the great revival of religion there, in the winter of 1836, and was one of the first converts of that glorious work of grace. From that on he evinced the sincerity of his religion, by an humble and holy life. Two years afterwards, at the Eldership, held in the same place, he obtained license to preach the Gospel, and received an appointment to travel, the ensuing Eldership year, on the Perry county circuit. The following year, he was appointed to travel on the Morrison's Cove Mission, the identical place, where, at last, he ended his ministerial labors: but, on account of ill health, he was excused from taking the appointment. He then taught school a little while, and afterwards went to Uniontown, Md., where he assisted brother William McFannen, and also preached a part of his time to a small infant church in the city of Baltimore. At the Eldership, held in Fayetteville, in the fall of 1842, he was appointed to Baltimore during the balance of the year, and to the Mount Joy and Elizabethtown station for the next Eldership year. The following year, at the Eldership held in Shippensburg, he was re-appointed to the Baltimore station; but owing to a failure of his health, he was released by the Standing Committee, after laboring there several months, and brother T. H. Deshirl appointed to take his place. He then came on to Harrisburg and assisted brother George McCartney in editing the paper, and preaching occasionally during the balance of that year. At the Eldership, held in Linglestown in 1844, he was appointed to the Martinsburg station, where he preached and labored with great acceptance among the people for one year. He next received an appointment to Harrisburg, at the late Eldership held in the city of Lancaster. But in consequence of the vacancy which occurred on the Martinsburg station, through the derilictions of George McCartney, the Standing Committee, at the earnest solicitation of the brethren on that station, re-appointed him to that charge; giving him, at the same time, all the appointments in the Cove. Accordingly, he left Harrisburg, returned to the people of his charge in Martinsburg, apparently in good health and fine spirits, resuming his labors among them with new and fresh delight. But, Oh, alas! what a change soon occurred! In the course of a few short weeks, after his return to his circuit, he fell sick of a congestive typhus fever. This disease, it is supposed, he contracted about two weeks prior to his confinement, in consequence of a long and fatigueing walk to one of his country appointments, on the second and third of May. The roads being muddy and the weather warm, he returned home, after preaching on Sabbath afternoon, the 3d of May, much fatigued, and his clothes perfectly saturated with a profuse perspiration. Towards evening, of said day, he complained of feeling unwell; yet, he made out to go to the Bethel that evening and preach. But on his return home, after meeting, he felt so much indisposed, that he was scarcely able to stand on his feet. He soon retired, but rested little or none that night. Next day he was a little better, and gradually recruited, so as to be able to be up, and to go in and out apparently as usual. In hopes that the indisposition would wear off, he let it run on without taking any medicine. But on Saturday, the 16th, about the middle of the day, he got worse, and towards evening took his bed. On the ensuing Sabbath morning, he still thought of filling his appointment, but was induced by his friends to give it up, and have a physician called. After the doctor had seen him, he told brother Slingluff that he was apprehensive Mr. Bamberger would have a very severe illness; and more especially so, as he was a man of studious habits—that such, with his disease, were usually the most difficult cases. However, the physician prescribed for him, and after taking an emetic, he felt much relieved, and sat up an hour or two that afternoon. About four o'clock he laid down again, and soon after aberrations of mind, or flightiness made its appearance, and continued so during that night, and by spells afterwards. But by mild and skilful treatment, his physician so far succeeded in arresting the disease, that by the following Sabbath, the fever seemed to have entirely abated.

During his calm and sane period that week, he spoke freely to his intimate friends of his situation and prospects. He seemed to be calm, meek and submissive, and apparently looked upon death with composure. He had a presentiment or impression that he would not recover, and accordingly arranged his temporal affairs.

On Monday evening, the 25th, he grew worse again, and the excitement in his head got worse than ever. For about thirty hours he was very sick and suffered much, throwing himself about in bed, and uttering frequent and loud groans. After this, he fell into a comparatively calm state, rested better and slept a good deal. But the serenity of his mind, after this, never fully returned. In this situation he continued until Saturday, the 30th, about noon. From that time on he again got worse, and continued gradually sinking till on Sabbath afternoon, at a quarter past four o'clock, when calmly and silently, he expired, falling asleep in the Lord, without a struggle or a groan.

Thus, then, has a beloved minister of Jesus Christ fallen a victim to disease and death, in the prime of manhood, and in the midst of his usefulness. How marvellous and mysterious are the ways and dispensations of God! What admonitory notes and commentaries, do such dispensations of Divine Providence, write out on the vanity of earthly things, and the uncertainty of human calculations! What a school-master is here, to bring sinners to Christ, and to admonish christians to be always ready.

Tyre—(A Rock.)

Tyre was a very ancient and strong city in Phenicia, situated about ninety miles north-west of Jerusalem, and eighteen south-west of Sidon, on the coast of the Mediteranean. It was first built by the Sidonians; and hence called by Isaiah, "the daughter of Zidon." Isa. 23: 12. In the division of the land of Canaan, this city was allotted to the tribe of Asher. Isa. 19: 29.

Ancient Tyre was a place of great wealth and immense traffic. Ezek. 27. Accordingly, the prophet Isaiah further says: "Her merchants were princes and her traffickers the honorable of the earth." Isa. 23: 8.

She was once the "crowning city"—she was, in the view of the nations that then existed, what the city of London is now—the commercial metropolis of the world.

But on account of the enormous sins of the people, and while she was yet basking in her greatest splendor and glory, the prophets of God foretold her fatal doom. Isa. 23: 5—18. Ezek. 26. These predictions of her ruin, were pronounced one hundred and twenty-five years before their accomplishment; yet, her subsequent history exhibits their literal fulfillment. God gave her into the hands of Nebuchadnezar, king of Babylon, who took her afier a siege of thirteen years, about the year 571, B. C. Ezek. chap. 27, 28, & 29.

Old Tyre having been destroyed, the people built a new city on an Island, within a mile or less of the main land. This new city soon rose to greater splendor than the former one. Zech. 9: 2, 3.

In the year 332, B. C., Tyre was taken by Alexander the Great, after a hard siege of seven months. Subsequently she belonged to Syria, and to the Romans, under whom she regained much (if not all) her former prosperity. Matt. 11: 21. Acts 12: 20.

Tyre was taken by the Saracens, A. D. 639; retaken by the crusaders, A. D. 1124, and razed to the ground, A. D. 1289, by the Mamelukes of Egypt, lest she should afford a refuge for the christians.

Tyre, at this time, contains about seven or eight hundred stone houses, and from six to eight thousand inhabitants; the greater part of whom are Arab Catholics, and the rest are Arab and Turkish Mohammedans.

Sidon—(Hunting.)

Sidon, or Zidon, was a famous commercial city, and the capital of the country of Phenicia. This city was founded soon after the deluge, by Sidon, the eldest son of Canaan, and is one of the most ancient cities in the world. Gen. 10: 15, 19. Chap. 49: 13. It is situated at the extreme north-west of Canaan, on the shores of the Mediterranean, about fifty miles from Damascus, and eighteen from Tyre. Sidon led to the founding of Tyre.

This great city was assigned by Joshua, to the tribe of Asher; but the natives, or original inhabitants, were never expelled. Joshua 19: 28. Judges 1: 31.

For many years the Sidonians enjoyed an immense maratime commerce, and were deservedly celebrated for their mechanical arts. They were the most famous ship-builders in that age of the world. To them is attributed the honor of discovering the art of making crystal glass, linen, &c.

It was once strongly fortified; but its iniquity was great; in consequence of which, its ruin was predicted by the prophets of God. See Isa. 23. Jer. 25: 22. Chap. 47: 4. Ezek. 28: 21, 22, 23. Joel 3: 4. Zech. 9: 2. These prophesies concerning Sidon on Zidon, were strictly verefied in the time of Ochus, king of Persia. This monarch beseiged Sidon, with a great army, in the year 351, B. C: and when her own king betrayed her, the inhabitants were seized with dispair, set fire to their own houses, and forty thousand with their wives and children, perished in the flames. Thus, "Sidon the Great," was brought to desolation. It was, however, afterwards rebuilt, and still exists, and is called Zaide. Its present population is about fifteen thousand, of whom about two thousand are nominal christians. Copin says: "The Turks have fourteen mosques here: the Greeks, the Latins, and Maronites, have each a church."

Sodom—(Their Secret.)

Sodom was the capital of a district on the south-east of Canaan, situated in the vale or plain of Siddim. This city, with three neighboring cities, Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, God snddenly destroyed with devouring fire from Heaven, on account of their egregious wickedness. Gen. 13: 10, 13. Chap. 18: 20. Chap. 19: 24, 25.

Sodom was once the dwelling place of Lot, the nephew of Abraham. Gen. 13: 12, 13.

The place where Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim once stood, now forms what is usually called the Dead Sea, or Sea of Asphaltus, and sometimes the Salt Sea. Gen. 14: 3.

Harrisburg Bridge Company.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, held at the Eastern toll-house of said company, in the borough of Harrisburg, on the 16th ult., the following resolutions were passed, viz:

The stockholders having voted upon the question, in accordance with the foregoing resolution, the result was as follows:

Resolved, That a certificate of acceptance and approval of the Act of the 7th of April, 1846, be signed by the officers of this meeting and presented by them to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, to be filed in his office, according to the 6th section of the said Act, and that a full minute of the proceedings of this meeting be made out and signed by the officers of the same, and the same shall be presented to the Board of Directors of the Company, with a request that they will order the same to be entered on the books of the Company at their next meeting.

Resolved, That the foregoing proceedings be signed by the officers, and published in all the newspapers of the borough of Harisburg.

Railroad Bridge.

The new Railroad bridge now in the conrse of re-construction at this place, has met with another serious disaster. During the storm on Friday the 19th ult., one span of the bridge was blown down, with all the scaffolding, into the river, and another span was moved several feet from its position on the piers and false-works. The two remaining spans that are up escaped uninjured.

This ill-fated bridge has now had to grapple, in the course of a short period, with three powerful elements—wind, water and fire.—"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain."

Central Railroad.

The books of subscription for the stock of the Pennsylvania Railroad was opened here, and in several other places, on Monday the 22d ult.

In Philadelphia, 6160 shares were subscribed for the first day the books were opened. These shares, at $50 each, is equivalent to $309,000.

In this place, there has been as yet no shares subscribed for since the books were opened.

The Oregon Question Settled.

The treaty for the settlement of the Oregon question, has been signed by the President, and ratified by the Senate of the United States, sometime last week. The precise terms of the treaty are yet not fully known, but will no doubt soon be published. We are glad that this question is amicably settled, without an appeal to arms. Would to God, the controversy with Mexico could be settled in like manner. May the Lord help our rulers to follow peace, and to rule in the fear of God!

Eternity Unchangeable

"He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; he that is filthy, let him be filthy still."

This surely is an awful idea for the sinner—the character unchanged—man still unjust, with the desire of sin remaining—the poor paltry pleasure gone—the enjoyment past—the punishment abiding—the mutual reproaches continuing, and all this for eternity. Lord preserve us from that awful state.

PULPIT DISPOSITIONS---No. 5.

Theme*—The Happiness of departed Saints.

TEXT—"And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope unto the end: That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who thro' faith and patience inherit the promises. Heb. 6: 11, 12.

I. The promises here spoken of;

II. The inheritors of these promises;

III. The means by which they are inherited; and,

IV. The exhortation: "Follow them," &c., will severally, and in order, claim our attention.

I. The promises spoken of. What are they?

What are we to understand by these promises? We are to understand by them, the blessings promised to the people of God. These are many; they pertain both to this world, and that which is to come. We shall,—

1. Notice a few pertaining to this life.

2. Notice some pertaining to the world to come. As,

1. Heavenly and perfect rest. Heb. 4: 9. Rev. 14: 13.

2. Eternal life. Luke 18: 29, 30. John 10: 27, 28. Rom. 6: 23.

3. Angelic likeness and beatitude. Luke 20: 35, 36.

4. The fruition of God. Rom. 8: 17.

II. The inheritors of the promises. Who are they?

The children or saints of God; and these are,—

1. Those who have repented.
2. Those who have believed on Christ.
3. Those who have heen born of God; and,
4. Those who obey Him.

Some of these are on earth, and some in Heaven. Those on earth are in the body—those in Heaven are out of the body. The embodied saints are prospective heirs—the disembodied are actual inheritors. Bnt all that receive the promises, do so,—

1. By right of inheritance, or because they are legal heirs. If children, then heirs. Rom. 8: 17.

2. Immediately after death. Eccl. 12: 7. Lnke 16: 22. Chap. 23: 43. Acts 7: 59. 2 Cor. 5: 6—9. Phil. 1: 23. Rev. 7: 9—13.

3. They receive them as an eternal inheritance. 1 Pet. 1: 4.

III. The means by which the promises are inherited.

These are,—

1. By faith. 1 Pet. 1: 9.
2. By patience. Heb. 10: 36.
3. By obedience. Matt. 7: 21.

IV. The exhortation: "Be ye followers of them," &c.

1. Imitate them in their faith.
2. Imitate them in their patience.
3. Imitate them in their diligence and steadfastness, in obeying God.

APPLICATION.

1. Let us study the promises. They are great and precious.

2. Let us follow the pious and worthy examples given us.

God be praised for the many strippings I have met with. It is good for me that I have been supplanted, despised, censured, maligned, judged by and separated from my nearest and dearest friends. By this I have found the faithfulness of Him who is the best of friends. —Whitefield.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Thoughts for Sabbath School Teachers.

The institution of the Sabbath School, is one among the many institutions in our land, which was divinely conceived and gotten up by good and pious men. And ever since the system has been matured, and placed on fair footing, it has been a grand auxillary in carrying forward the great and glorious work of reformation. Numbers, now happy in our holy religion, and bidding fair for Heaven, must partly, at least, if not wholly, attribute their conversion to some Sabbath school as a means. Through this holy institution, many have been saved from desecrating the Sabbath—many have been taught to read—and not a few have been happily converted to God. Blessed be the name of the Lord, that he has ever put it into the heart of man, to conceive and carry into effect this medium, which has always proved itself to be fraught with the best of consequences! This, then, must be a cause upon which the great God of Heaven can smile, and upon which His blessings rest. Therefore, seeing it was divinely gotten up—seeing it is a medium through which much good has been effected, and seeing it claims the smiles and blessings of God, all that fell interested in the prosperity of other like institutions, which have in view the good of society, should likewise feel themselves interested in the one under consideration. And if any, especially professors of religion, do not naturally feel interested, in the advancement of this great cause, they should try to stir themselves up and make themselves interested; for, when duty is at stake, feelings should not always be consulted. It is the duty, as well as the privilege, of every possessor of Christianity, to do all that lies in his power to assist in carrying forward every institution that tends to the well-being of our fellow men. Christains ought to be prompt, active, energetic, "in every good work and word." Amen; so be it!

In order that a Sabbath school may prosper, several things are altogether indispensible. And if these particulars be not attended to, it is impossible to keep a school on good footing.

First: A sufficient number of teachers are indispensible. Unless there is a sufficent number of teachers, there is generally a dragging. This is very unpleasant to those few who interest themselves in the school, and who are always ready and willing to do their part. And it is not only unpleasant, but it is also grieving to them, especially when they know their is no occasion for such a scarcity of teachers. There is no occasion, whatever, in most places I have been, for a lack of competent teachers. What, then, is the reason why there is in most places a lack of Sunday school teachers? Why, I will tell you, in plain words: some are too lazy; they will sooner lounge about at home, and, perhaps, sleep the greater part of the Sabbath. They don't consider what good they might do by exercising their limbs and minds, in going to Sabbath school and imparting wholesome instructions to the youthful minds. But those that thus willfully persist in burying their talents, and refusing to cultivate and improve them, shall, in the final day of retribution, be "bound up, hands and feet, as so many slothful servants, and be cast out into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth!"

Another reason why there is such a lack of Sunday school teachers, generally, is this: Many are afraid that they will be called upon to aid a little in purchasing a few books. The idea of paying a few shilllings in the course of a year, prevents them from engaging in a good cause. Oh shame, where is thy blush! Wonder some people don't quit eating to save their pennies!

But another grand reason why there is generally a lack of Sunday school teachers, is, because people like to go visiting on the Sabbath. If you ask some of those who are fully capable of teaching, to lend their service, they will answer: "Ho, I don't want to bind myself up." And why don't they want to bind themselves up, or rather volunteer to spend a few hours in Sunday school? Why, as before said, they like to go visiting on this holy day. This abominable practice has got into a great many professors of religion now-a-days. Instead of minding their business at home—instead of reading the Bible and visiting their closets—instead of going to hear the word preached and attending Sabbath school; I say, instead of doing this, they go about visiting. And what is the subject of their talk? Why, it is about their neighbors, houses, barns, fields, grains, the price thereof—their silver, gold, and a parcel of other nonsense. Now, I do say, if this sinful spirit and practice of visiting on the Sabbath day had not got into the people, to such a great extent, the Bible would not only be read more—our meeting houses would not only be better filled at the hour of preaching—but there would not be such a scarcity of teachers in the different places where Sunday schools are in operation. Now, let rational and intelligent people, especially those who profess the religion of Jesus Christ, act rationally and intelligently, by abhoring and avoiding laziness on God's holy day, by cultivating a spirit of liberality, and by learning to attend to the various duties our holy religion may demand of us to perform on the Sabbath day. When these things are strictly observed, we shall have no more occasion to lament the scarcity of teachers in the different Sunday schools scatered abroad through our happy land.

Secondly: Certain efforts are indispensible. When we have the requisite number of teachers, then efforts should be made to increase the number of scholars. Our Sabbath schools would be much larger if the teachers would exert themselves more in getting in those that are running to and fro on the Sabbath. It will not do to be teachers only; we must otherwise be active. It answers very well to be active in Sabbath school; but it answers far better if we are active out of school, as well as in school. During the week we should seek every opportunity to talk with children, trying to pursuade them to come to Sunday school. The best way to get them to come out is, to impress upon their tender minds, in plain words, the salutary consequences resulting from attending Sunday schools; also, by telling them that sometimes the scholars get presents in the form of books, &c. The latter is generally a great inducement. When kind words will not answer the end, do not scold them; for this will make the matter worse. And sometimes children would willingly come, but their parents are not willing to let them go. What now? Why the teachers ought to go to their parents and convince them of the propriety of suffering their children to come to Sunday school; especially when their children are desirous to come. Parents very frequently offer the following excuses for not permitting their children to attend Sabbath school. They will say: "It is too far," (they live perhaps a mile off,) some will say "They havn't time," and some will say "It will do them no good!" But let not these trivial exeuses dishearten you. By perseverance you may likely get every little boy and girl in the neighborhood. So, then, if you would have your school to increase and prosper, you must make strong efforts to get as many children in school as possible.

"Thy Kingdom Come."

All will perceive that this is a sentence taken from the "Lord's Prayer," as suitable to the above important topic. The expression: "Thy Kingdom come," is very comprehensive, and means more than thousands think it does, who pray it daily. It is petitioning God to hasten His reign on earth, that the inhabitants thereof might "worship Him in spirit and in truth," from the rising to the setting of the sun. And as God reigns in the hearts of all those who follow and serve Him rightly, it manifestly shows that the petitioner desires sincerely that his fellow-creatures should enjoy the same happy influence of the religion of Jesus in the heart. The person who truly feels what he prays, will always act in a corresponding manner. Therefore, we put the pointed question: Do all, who pray thus, feel to help to do it? But since we cannot see into the heart of man, we will leave each one to answer it for himself, and be content with judging the tree by its fruit; which will be an unerring index to the intentions of the heart.

God always works through means. "The Gospel is the power of God to salvation, to every one that believeth." But the Gospel must be made known to the people, before they can be saved by Divine grace. "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard! and how shall they hear without a preacher?" Yes, and how can a preacher leave his friends, and his home, and his former calling, and preach without a support! Men that preach must not be starved. To whom are we to look for the fund necessary to send forth missionaries, into destitute regions, to preach repentance and forgiveness of sins to all men who will believe in Christ, and come up to the requirements of his holy law! Why, to those who sincerely pray "Thy kingdom come." To such, and to such only do we look for aid. And depending on true disciples, we fondly hope we shall not be disappointed. Those who are true to God, will be true to his glorious cause on earth, while the enemies of the cross of Christ, and pretended friends—hypocrites—will not assist in pressing the work of God onward.

The organization of "Missionary Societies," and the energy with which they are carried forward, will be an omen of a spirit of religious zeal in the churches. Those who are rich in the grace of God, will show it by giving liberally as the Lord has prospered them; and those who care nothing about the advancement of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, will be known by a miserly refusal to give. This great work must and will go on, despite of wicked men and devils, earth and hell combined. Action, and speedy action too, is all that is requisite. The preaching bretheren and elders of the several local churches should take this matter into timely consideration, and bring it before the churches. And because it is the will of God that sinners should be warned to fly from the ruin that will befall them, if they die, without the internal evidences of religion; so also, it is his will that such as He calls should go forth to do the same. This is the will of God. "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Let "Thy kingdom come" into the hearts of men, and then they will aid in this great, good, and noble cause. Genuine christians, would you have been saved, had not some one furnished the means to send the preached word to you? Think of this. Ponder this question in your hearts. And whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. More anon.

Letter from Brother Levi Slingluff.

MARTINSBURG, June 15, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Having noticed in the columns of the "CHURCH ADVOCATE," various plans sugested to raise money to send a delegate, or delegates, to the World's Convention to be held in London, in August next, the church in this place have thought the better plan would be, as the time is drawing near, to forward at once the amount they can give, and have accordingly desired me to enclose ten dollars and twenty-five cents. Should no delegate be sent to London, you will pleasc forward it, with other funds, that may be intended for Brother E. LOGUE, Iowa.

The "CHURCH ADVOCATE" is a welcome visiter to us here, and it is looked for and read with much interest by the brethren and sisters, and we shall do all we can to sustain it.

As to the London Convention, the church here is desirous that you should go, if any person is sent, and are well aware of the difficulties that might be in your way, in consequence of the paper, &c., but they are willing to put up with the paper, though it may not be so intercsting in your absence, with the expectation of its being more so after your return. We are far from expeeting a union on the Bible platform. Such a thing, in the nature of things under present circumstances, cannot be. But we should like the world to know that there is but one way in which such a union can be affected.

Yours, in love,

LEVI SLINGLUFF.

Letter from Brother Reuben Walters.

TILGHMANTON, June 16, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER JOHN WINEBRENNER:—

I am glad to see that the people of God are up, and trying to protect and advocate the cause of the Gospel, as the title of your paper now intimates; and as an advocate of truth, I do hope that it will be managed better than the Gospel Publisher was, so far, at least, as it regards the agents appointed for collecting subscriptions. Let them be careful not to fail to take notice of the terms and regulations of the CHURCH ADVOCATE, that all persons, failing to comply with the terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter from the time the paper is sent. Now I hope that the same errors will not be made that were made by those concerned in conducting the Gospel Publisher. The Executive Committee gave notice that they had engaged the services of sundry brethren, to call on the subscribers, personally, to discharge their accounts; and when I was called upon, I discharged the same, and ordered the paper to be stopped at the end of the volume. But through the neglect of the agent or the editor, or the members of the Executive Committee, (I know not which) my request was not complied with, and credit given me for the year. Now if the committee and editor are clear, on account of the agent not paying over the same when collected, and they will not hold me bound to pay for that which I once did discharge, I shall be satisfied, and you may then continue the ADVOCATE; but if they make me pay that over again, then I want you to stop it.

No more at present, but

Remain your brother, &c.,

REUBEN WALTERS.

REMARKS.

OUR good brother W—— need not be uneasy about having to pay for his paper again, if he has done so once. The committee, however, can have no share in the blame of him not receiving credit for his paper. It must lie between the agent and the editor. If a mistake has occurred, as it sometimes happens in all business transactions, we hope it can and will be rectified. But even in the event that it cannot, we hope our brother will not make the innocent ADVOCATE the sufferer, by withdrawing his support from it. We will guarantee that he shall not be asked to pay for it more than once.—EDITOR.

Letter from Brother Isaac Neidig.

SHIREMANSTOWN, June 12, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I wish you success in the task and responsibility that you have taken upon yourself, as editor of the CHURCH ADVOCATE. I have now received the third number, and I find it to be a handsome and interesting sheet. I hope that the good pensmen of the church will not forget the request of the editor, to take up their pens and favor him with their communications; so that it may still be more interesting and profitable to its numerous readers.

A word to the subscribers: All should, without fail, comply with the terms. It is cheap; only one dollar and twenty-five cents, in advance, or within three months. Every one, therefore, ought to pay in before the three months are up.

In looking over your paper, I saw a letter written by brother HINNY, in which he states that we should not wait to the last of our limited time to pay in our subscriptions; and if we have to send by mail, we might send one dollar, and pay the balance some other time. I wish to take brother HINNY's advice, and accordingly send you enclosed one dollar; the balance I will pay as soon as possible. I hope that others will do the same, so that your paper may be sustained, and your undertaking be prosperous.

Yours, in love,

ISAAC NEIDIG.

Letter from Brother Simon Diehl.

ORRSTOWN, June 21, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I felt very sorry in reading over a communication, sent to you by brother SOULE, in which information is wanted on certain reports that are in circulation in his neighborhood, in Perry county. These reports, he says, are circulated by two certain men mentioned in his letter, in reference to the expulsion of Mr. ADAMS. I was present myself on the occasion of his expulsion, and was one of his warmest friends. When, therefore, certain charges were brought against him, if I mistake not, from the Uniontown church, I sat at his back and told him to get up and plead his own cause like a man, not thinking or believing that any of these charges were true. But, alas! when all things were brought to light concerning those charges, the church at Newburg, of which he was pastor, and which was wonderfully attached to him, had to look with astonishment at those things brought to light. But this was not all. Another charge was brought forward, or inquired into, of a different character, in which you, brother WINEBRENNER, was particularly interested; and this, without any other charges, the Eldership thought furnished a sufficient ground to expel him from that body; and accordingly it was done. These are the facts and circumstances, as near as I can come at, without making too large a letter, and which I deem useless on the present occasion.

Now, if these two men have circulated those things which brother SOULE has stated in his letter, brother WINEBRENNER, I feel it my duty, in defence of your character, and for the information of the inhabitants of Perry county, to say that those things are false from beginning to end. And I think if those two men would see what was right in the sight of God, they would get down at the altar of prayer, and pray to God to have mercy on them.

Dear brethren, let us all hold those men up by prayer to Almighty God, and perhaps the wickedness of their hearts may be forgiven them. And, as the Bible teaches, let us pray for one another, that we may still grow stronger and stronger in the faith of the gospel, and at last meet each other with all God's people, on the other side of Jordan, to sing with the ancient Israelites the song of Moses and the Lamb—which is my sincere prayer. Amen.

Yours, &c.,

SIMON DIEHL.

A Request.

WILL some one of the brethren in the West Pennsylvania Eldership, furnish the readers of the ADVOCATE with a biographical account of Elder EDWARD WOOD, deceased? Sketches of departed worth and usefulness are often highly instructive, and of untold interest to all. They unfold the glory of a christian's race, and his triumphant departure to his "Father's house." Who will be kind enough to comply with this request? G.

Singers and Singing.

IT is natural for all who can at all "turn a tune," to delight in singing; but we should all learn what kind of a voice we have, and what kind of harmony it makes, when exercised in company with others. I say, we should learn this, and learn it from others; for we cannot, perhaps, always tell by hearing ourselves sing. When we find, then, that our voice is defective—either too sharp or too flat for the choir, or company we mix with, we should, prudently, either be silent altogether, or if we must be indulged in accompanying the rest, sing half-tune, or quite soft, so as not to throw discord in the concordant vibrations of the voices of the others. Some persons are so very imprudent, that they drown all music in a meeting with their false voices. How mortifying this is to those who enjoy vocal harmony! And some of those very persons strive ever to be in the lead. I hope this hint will be taken, and cause the necessary improvement to be made.

CONCORD.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Appalling Calamity in Quebec—Fifty Lives Lost.—It has again pleased the Almighty to afflict our already chastened city.

Last night, at 10 o'clock, a fire broke out in the Theatre Royal, St. Lewis street, (formerly the Riding School) at the close of Mr. Harrison's exhibition of his Chemical Dioramas. From the information we have been able to glean, a Camphene Lamp was overset, from some cause or other, and the stage at once became enveloped in flames.

The house had been densely crowded, but some had fortunately left before the accident.

A rush was at once made to the staircase leading from the boxes, by those who, in the excitement of the moment, forgot the other passages of egress.

In an incredibly short space of time the whole of the interior of the building was enveloped in one sheet of flame—the newly erected platform covering the pit, and communicating at each end with the stage and boxes, favored the progress of the flames.

The writer of this article was one of the earliest on the spot, and present at the closing moments of the hapless beings who perished from their over exertions to escape. The staircase communicating with the boxes was a steep one, and we are of the opinion it had fallen from the weight of those who crowded upon it.—At least such was our opinion at the moment.

One foot was interposed between the hapless crowd and eternity! and on that space we, with five or six others stood, the fierce flames playing around us, and the dense smoke repelling all efforts to extricate. As far back as we could see, there were a sea of heads of writhing bodies and outstretched arms. Noise there was none—but few moans escaped the doomed. At the extreme end in view there were faces calm and resigned; persons, who, from the funeral vail of smoke which gradually enshrouded them, appeared calmly to drop into eternal sleep.

By our side was one brother striving to extricate another, but abandonment was unavoidable. One poor creature at our feet offered his entire worldly wealth for his rescue; the agonizing expressions of the faces before us can never be effaced from our memory.

The flames at the time were above and around us:—but human aid was of no avail—in five minutes from the time of which we make mention, the mass of human beings who had but a short interval previous been in the enjoyment of a full and active life, were exposed to our view a mass of calcined bones.

Up to this hour 46 bodies have been recovered from the ruins. Most of them recognized; a greater loss of life than in the two dread conflagrations of last summer. Sad wailing pervades the city.—Scarcely a street can be traversed in which the closed shutter or the hanging crape do not betoken a sudden bereavment. Fathers, sisters, children of both sexes, indulge in the deepest lamentation. Woe has fallen upon many, for those who were thus suddenly and awefully summoned into the presence of their Creator. —From the Quebec Mercury of June 13.

Cholera.—This destructive scourge of humanity seems once more on its way to ravage the continent of Europe, originating, as before, in the heart of Asia, northern Persia being the first quarter in which it was noticed; it is gradually approaching the confines of Europe. The chief cities of Persia already count by thousands the number of their dead who have fallen victims to the Asiatic cholera.—The line of rout taken by it appears to be almost due west, for it attacked in regular succession the cities of Bokhara, Herat, Meshed, Teheran and Ispahan, while recent accounts from Odessa state two or three cases of Asiatic cholera had occurred at Tiflis. Should it continue to advance at its present rate, it may be looked for in eastern Europe in a very short time. —N. Y. Evangelist.

The Bills extending our Jurisdiction over Oregon.—This bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, extends the laws of the Iowa Territory over he Territory of Oregon, so as to be applicable to our own citizens, provided that British subject shall continue to be subject to British laws.—It authorizes the appointment of the necessary officers of justice to administer the laws. It makes provision for securing to settlers 320 acres of land each, when they have resided in the teritory five years. The President is authorized to provide for the erection of block houses, stockades, &c., for the protection of emigrants and settlers. A post-rout is to be established, and the mail to be carried once a month. These are some of the provisions of the bill; as they are in strict accordance with the recommendations of the President.—Nashville Union.

Generous Donaton.—The London Recorder announces the recent bequest of $108,000 to six different benevolent societies in England, by John Scott, deceased.

Observance of the Sabbath.—The Post Office Department, it is stated, has saved in one year, by discontinuing certain mail routs on the Sabbath, the sum of $60,000.

The Press.—The appearance of the flag of our country in any given place, is a proof, says the New Orleans Picayune, that the Yankees are there; and where they are, look out for the printing press. It is the oxygen which secures to them their social and political respiration.—Already have our countrymen in Matamoras started a press. We have received No 1, of Vol. 1, of the Republic of Rio Grande, and Friend of the People, published in Matamoras, on the 1st inst. It is printed in English and Spanish, and edited by F. McLeod, whose motto is:—"Fear not—the brave and generons soldier is only to be dreaded in the field of battle." In this first number there is an earnest appeal to the people of that Department, to withdraw their connexion from a government from which they have received, and never expect but oppression.

What we are.—This country has a frontier line of more than 10,000 miles. We have a line of sea-coast of nearly 4,000 miles, and a lake coast of 1,200. One of our rivers is twice the size of the Danube, the largest river in Europe. The Ohio is 600 miles longer than the Rhine, and the Hudson has a navigation 120 miles longer than the Thames. The single state of Virginia is one-third larger than England. Ohio contains 5,120,000 acres more than Scotland—from Maine to Ohio is farther than from London to Constantinople, and as we might go on and fill pages, enumerating distances, rivers, lakes, capes, and bays with comparative estimates of size, power, and population.

The Cost of War.—The expense of this country, in specie, of the revolutionary war, was estimated at about $135,000,000. Between the years 1776 and 1781, Congress issued $357,476,541 of continental or paper money, which, during that time, depreciated to a very low standard. In addition to this issue, Congress obtained a loan from Holland of over $4,000,000, and from France of nearly $4,000,000. The war of 1812 cost this country between 100 and 150 millions of dollars.

The Rail Road.—The proposal for the city of Philapelphia to subscribe $2,500,000 toward the capital stock of the Central Railroad, is before the councils, and from appearances there seems but little disposition to act upon it. Strong petitions against the measure have been presented.

From Pittsburg we learn that 6,325 shares of stock had been subscribed to the Pittsburg and Connelsville Railroad on the first day. There was a perfect rush for it.

National Temperance Festival.—At the recent meeting and festival of the Sons of Tempemance in the city of New York, arrangements were made for a grand national celebration to be held in Philadelphia, in June, 1847. Large delegations will be in attendance from most of the States of the Union; and the affair will probably be one of the most magnificent ever witnessed in this country.

The Army in Mexico.—The following appears to be a just estimate of the force now upon the Rio Grande, under command of Maj. Gen. Taylor:—U. S. Regulars, 3,500; Louisiana Volunteers, 4,500; Texas, 750; Alabama, 750; Kentucky, 750; Missouri, 750. Total, 11,000.

The Pay of Officers.—The following table shows the compensation to officers and men from a colonel down:

Snow Storm.—The N. York Commercial Advertiser of yesterday, says:—'This morning, June 22, the city was visited by a storm, or more properly a squall, from the northwest, and on the north side of the city, the inhabitants were refreshed by a fall of snow for some minutes. Over-coats were not uncomfortable last evening, and early this morning.

A Cotton Factory is about to be erected at Reading, Pa., with a capital of 200,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Boy that Loved Prayer.

A fine little boy whose parents were unconverted, once happened to go into the family of a pious neighbor before morning prayers. He was invited by the neighbor's children to stay during the family worship. A chapter was read from the family Bible, a hymn was sung in praise to God, and the domestic circle knelt down to implore the divine blessing. The little boy, not being accustomed to such scenes, looked around with astonishment, but observing the example of the other children, he soon knelt down with them.

After the devotions were ended, he approached a little boy of his own age, and said, "Does your father pray every day?"

"Certainly," said the other, "every morning and evening."

"O!" said he, "I wish my father would pray."

Going home he related what he had witnessed, and said to his father, "O, I wish you would pray!" How much the father was affected by this simple-hearted but timely exortation, we cannot say; but it was not long before a revival of religion occurred in the village, and that father was one of its subjects.

His change of heart was immediately manifest by his change of life, and the family altar was at once erected. On the very morning when the first sacrifice was offered upon it, the little boy first mentioned in this narration, was seen running down the street to salute his playfellow of the praying household; clapping his little hands, he said, "My father prays now, how glad I am!"—S. S. Advocate.

Example better than Precept.

'Example is better than precept,' is an old saying, and perhaps a truer one was never uttered, for most certainly 'actions speak louder than words,' the truth of this is discoverable in almost every situation in life. However good the precept may be, and however much we may agree that it is true, yet if it is not accompanied with a corresponding example in those who teach it, it has very little influence upon our minds. If Christ himself had delivered his holy precepts without example, and without his life being a living comment upon the things he taught, they would have had no effect. If when he taught us to be merciful, humble, forgiving and patient, he had been cruel, proud, unforgiving, and impatient, we should decide at once that he was not what he professed to be. And there is something in man that despises hypocrisy in others, however much he may practice it himself.

'The precepts delivered by God and the prophets, Christ and the apostles, are accompanied with a corresponding example. If God has said we should be merciful to one another, he has been so to us. If Christ has said we should be humble, he was meek and lowly in mind. If the prophets have said we should trust in God, they have cast their care upon him. If the apostles have said we should follow Christ, they have walked in his footsteps; and they have presented their conduct for us to imitate. Hence it is said, 'be ye therefore merciful as your Father also is merciful.' 'Be ye holy, for I am holy.' 'If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love.' 'For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.' He 'hath left us an example that we should follow his steps.' 'Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord for an example of suffering, affliction, and of patience.' 'Brethren, be followers together of me and mark them which walk so, as ye have us for an ensample.' 'For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us, for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you.'

Ministers should be 'examples to the flock,' and believers are required to be the same to the world. 'Let your light to shine,' and not only by bearing testimony to the truth in word, or by telling what the Lord has done or will do for you and others, but let others see 'your WORKS that they may glorify your Father which is in heaven.' Precept without example, not only does no good, but it does a great deal of hurt; it brings 'the holy commandment' into disrepute, and causes many to 'stumble at the word.' How careful then ought we to be, with what holy jealousy we should watch over our steps that we may be bright shining lights, sons of God without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation: giving strength to our precept by a corresponding example. May we be guiding stars to many, to the Kingdom of eternal life. J. SUTTON.

Drunkenness is a tattler that reveals to others a man's secrets, which, when sober, he would hardly trust himself with.

Ecclesiastical.

There are now sitting in this city not less than three Conventions or General Assemblies; one of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the other two of the Presbyterian Church, of the Old and New Schools, ALL OF THEM WITH DOORS WIDE OPEN. Last week there was a Roman Catholic Council sat in Baltimore WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Why do the Protestant meetings sit with doors open? Because their proceedings are for the benefit of the people, and they are willing, nay, even desirous, that the public may witness the exertions of their ministry for the common good.

Why did the Catholic Council sit with closed doors? Bishop Kenrick, who was one of the number, can perhaps answer that question.

Is it not surprising that they, who are so averse to secret meetings, that they deny a man a Christian burial if he is a Mason or an Odd Fellow, should themselves sit with their doors closed?

All the proceedings of the secret conclave we have not learned, but one thing that they did, (as it appears) was to concoct a Pastoral Letter from the Archbishop and Bishops of the United States to the [simple] faithful.

They commence by saying, that after consultation with their brethren of the second order of clergy, they have adopted some regulations which (they state,) have to be submitted to the Pope for correction and approval, when they will be promulgated. So that the acts of one archbishop and twenty-two bishops of the United States, done after consulting with a host of priests, is of no validity until it has been corrected and confirmed by a foreign prince, who has not one feeling nor one interest in common with the people of this Republic. To what these proceedings relate, we know not with precision; but as some other foreing princes have pretended to interfere with our rights upon this continent, it is very probable that they regard the course that the faithful are to pursue at this critical state of our political affairs. The pastoral letter proceeds to say, that after these secret measures shall have had the Pope's sanction, they must be received by the faithful with "DOCILITY and REVERENCE." Mark these words,—the faithful must not presume to think, much less to act for themselves, but with humble awe. We have not so learned Christ.

Value of Hops in Diseases of the Skin.—One of the best external applications for many eruptive diseases of the skin, is a strong decoction of hops in which the limbs or other affected parts are to be bathed several times a day.—The decoction should not be used until it has become perfectly cold. In bad ulcers of the leg, the satisfactory results have been repeatedly realized from this simple preparation.

The Indian Treaty.

The New Orleans Delta of the 14th inst., gives the following as the principal features of the Treaty recently concluded by Governor Butler with the tribes of Indians who met in council on the borders of Texas:

The Indians acknowledge themselves under the protection of the United States, and recognize no other authority, pledging themselves to perpetual amity and friendship to the people of the United States, and all friendly Indians.

They agree not to form alliances with the enemies of the country, and to give notice of any contemplated invasion or impending danger.

Each tribe is to give notice of any violation of the treaty on the part of the other.

They are to give up all prisoners, and aid the authorities of the United States in obtaining them.

They pledge themselves to desist from all murder and depredation, and to surrender all offenders to be tried by the laws of the United States.

The United States have the right to establish agencies and trading houses among them, and to establish military posts, &c.,

They concede to the United States the right of control over all trade and intercourse, and will in no instance seek personal redress for injuries, either to person or property, but will in such cases apply to the U. S. Agent.

They concede the right to introduce among them ministers of the gospel and school teachers.

They agree to prohibit the introduction of spirituous liquors among them, and to give notice of the violation of this provision.

The United States, in consideration of these stipulations on the part of the several Indian tribes represented at the treaty, agree to make peace for them, with all their enemies, to give them presents every fall, &c., as usual in similar treaties.

The E-se-qua-i-as and Mescaleros, numbering together about 5000 souls, who are branches of the Lipans and allies of the Camanches, and came recently from the Mexican prairies, are included among the tribes represented by the treaty. The Camanches are anxious to conciliate them.

Important to Housekeepers.

A simple and never-failing yeast at such a trifling cost as to be within the rack of every housekeeper. Take one penny's worth of brewer's yeast, two boiled potatoes left from dinner the previous day, grate in them a teaspoonful of brown sugar, one coffee cup of boilling water, and pour on the grated potatoe and sugar, then take one-fourth of the yeast and mix altogether; sit it in the kitchen aside to rise, at bed time take two large cups of water, stir flour in it till it is so stiff you can hardly need it, in the morning you will find your bread ready for the oven, and the whole expense not more than one penny. This is truly the age of improvement. M.—Ledger.

The use of Money.

At a meeting of the Bible Society lately, the following letter was read:

BOSTON, April 24, 1846.

MY DEAR SIR:—The extraordinary increase of population in the U. States, has deeply impressed me with the necessity of diffusing throughout our whole Union moral teachings, founded on religious truth. I believed our Holy Bible contains every thing required for the moral government of man, and that every family in this great country should possesss a copy of this invaluable book. I am sensible of having too long delayed becoming a member of the American Bible Society—which I deem among all our voluntary associations the best. I will therefore thank you to draw on me for the sum of six hundred dollars, at sight, for the purpose of constituting my three sons Life Directors, as well as myself. The names I give you below. Please send the usual certificates, and oblige, dear sir, your faithful and obedient servant,

ABBOTT LAWRENCE.

To Joseph Hyde, Esq., General Agent of American Bible Society, New York.

Imagination.—Men of lively imagination reverse the old proverb, and to them two birds in the bush are worth a great deal more than one in the hand.—And, after all, what are the few square yards of the present compared to the boundless extent of the future, over which the imagination is sole ruler?

Parental Example.

A MOTHER related the following seemingly trifling incident, which forcibly illustrates the importance and power of parental example:

As I was about to enter my nursery to look after my little ones, I observed the youngest, a boy three years of age, over a book which he had taken from the shelf, resembling a family Bible used before morning and evening prayer.

Struck with the unusual solemnity of his manner, I watched, unobserved, his movements.

With great precision, and apparent devotion, he went through the exercise of reading, singing, and then kneeling for prayer, in imitation of his father's daily example. And never was manner, voice or gesture, more perfectly copied. Trifling as was this circumstance, so deep and solemn was the impressisn made upon my mind, that to this time I find myself mentally exclaiming, "What manner of persons ought parents to be, in all holy conversation and godliness!" Never till this occurrence, had my mind dwelt upon the momentous fact, though so often repeated, that the future characters, and the eternal destinies or children, are usually at a very early period, stamped by parental example: and now I felt what an amazing influence must be exerted upon young children by the manner of performing family prayer.

If this be true, what filial confidence, what holy obedience to the commands of God, should mark the conduct of parents in all family transactions! that there may be a holy consistency between their conduct and conversation, and their morning and evening devotions. A parent who feels and humbly acknowledges his dependence for daily bread, his own teaching and divine forgiveness, may hope to see his children, one after another, become "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord." Some of our children may need much pruning, much correction, yet God will never disannul his covenant promise to faithful, praying parents—"I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee."—Mother's Magazine.

Prayer from a Burdened Heart.

If a person has a real burden on his heart to lay before God, his prayer will almost always be very short. Any subject exciting strong feeling, fills the attention to the exclusion of all irrelevant matter. This is frequently seen in our intercourse with the world. Who has not seen a person so full of a subject that he will speak of nothing else? If the conversation be changed, he will bring it back, if silence reigns, he will break it with this subject. A person in such a state of mind, never plays with the subject which occupies his thoughts. He uses no preface, expletives, or circumlocution, to get to a point, but goes directly to it.

Poverty has, in large cities, different appearances. It is often concealed in splendor, and often in extravagance. It is the care of a very great part of mankind, to conceal their indigence from the rest. They support themselves by temporary expedients, and every day is lost contriving for to-morrow.—Dr. Johnson.

The Consistent Negro.

The leaven is still at work among all classes of people. In proof of this, permit me to record an occurrence that took place not long since. A gentleman cooper called upon a Negro, who owns a fine farm in this neighborhood, and wished to purchase some stave timber. Our 'colored' friend inquired for what purpose he wanted it. He received for an answer, 'I have a contract for so many whisky barrels.'

'Well sir,' was the prompt reply, "I have the timber to sell, and want the money, but no man can purchase a single stave or hoop-pole, or a particle of grain of me, for that purpose."

Of course, Mr. Cooper was not a little up in the back, to meet with such a stern reproof—got mad, and called him a Nigger. (Smart!)

'That is very true,' mildly replied the other. 'It is my misfortune to be a Negro; I can't help that; but I can help selling my timber to make whisky barrels, and I mean to do it.

Aint that too good to be lost? Pass it round from pole to pole. 'Do you hear that, boys?' Mr. Editor, I have no temptation to exaggerate; but have simply recorded the facts as given me from an unquestionable source. I know the colored man well. The Ethiopian shall rise up in the day of judgment against some of the men of this generation, in reference to this great moral and benevolent enterprise.—Ohio Temperance Organ.

Short Sermons.

Jerome admonished Augustine, that his sermons should not be too long, lest they should not be well comprehended. Gregory Naz. said that satiety in a sermon was no less an enemy, than too much meat to the body. Basil would end his morning sermon the sooner, lest he should make his hearers dull against the evening. Chrysostom compared the people to infants, who must have their meat given them by little and little, for which cause, he says, "care was taken that teachers should neither weary themselves nor their hearers, with a multitude of words."—The fathers general limited the length of their sermons to about an hour. We find Basil and Augustus refusing to speak what they could not finish in an hour.—Chrysos. reproved those who grudged to give to the Lord two hours for two sermons in a week, implying that an hour was the usual length of a sermon.

Mosquitoes.—The following preventive against these annoying insects, we find in an exchange paper. We hope, for the sake of the ladies, it may be found effectual:

"Attach a piece of flannel or sponge to a thread made fast to the top of the bed-stead; wet the flannel or sponge with camphorated spirits, and the mosquitoes will leave the room."

A Good Wife.—A pleasant and cheerful wife is as a rainbow set in the sky, when her husband's mind is tossed with storms and tempests—but a dissatisfied and fretful wife in the hour of trouble, is like one of those fiends which are appointed to torture lost spirits."

And What Next.

A gentleman riding near the city, overtook a well dressed young man and invited him to a seat in his carriage. And what, said the gentleman to the younger, are your plans for the future? I am a clerk, replied the young man, and my hope is to succeed and get into business for myself. 'And what next?' said the gentleman. Why, I intend to marry, and set up an establishment of my own, said the youth. 'And what next?' continued the interrogator. Why, to continue in business and accumulate wealth. 'And what next?' To retire from business and enjoy the fruit of my labors. 'And what next?' It is the lot of all to die. and I of course cannot escape, replied the young man. 'And what next?' once more asked the gentleman; but the young man had no answer to make, he had no purposes that reached beyond the present life.

This was a thought that had probably never entered his mind. How many young men are there in the community, who have all their plans laid for this life and none for the life to come! The tho't that after death is the judgment, and after the judgment eternity, has not entered their minds, and for these scenes they have made no provision. Reader, just pause long enough to ask, "what shall it profit you to gain the whole world, and lose your own soul?"—Bost. Recorder.

Aurora Borealis.

The reader will not need to be informed that no satisfactory cause has yet been assigned for the remarkable as well as most beautiful phenomenon, known as the aurora borealis, or northren lights. There is one peculiarity relating to these celestial visitants, however, which does not seem to be generally known, viz: its intermittant appearance. For a series of years, perhaps for a centuary or two, it is very common, and then again for a long time—for a period sufficient for it to be entirely forgotten, were it not for scientific records—it does not seem to appear at all.

The first time the aurora borealis was ever discovered in this country—at least in New England—of which we know any account, was on the night of the 17th of December, 1719. It suddenly illuminated the northern heavens—now rolling up in waves, as if from an ocean of light beneath the horizon, and then shooting towards the zenith, in broad columns, like pillars of fire from the frosty wilderness. From the accounts, it would appear that it had a much more red, fiery appearance than it now has; and it is asserted that the corruscations produced a crackling noise, which was distinctly heard. It is necessary to observe that the people were exceedingly alarmed.—Most of the time since that period, it has been as frequent as it now is. Some seasons, however, it has hardly shown itself; and often from year to year, varies in color, intensity of light, and location. —Noah's Messenger.

A Truth.—It is painful to observe how soon the dead are forgotten. The tide of fashion, or business, or pleasure, rolls on, rapidly obliterates the memory of the departed and sweeps away with it the attention of the mourner to the ruling folly of the hour.

Entire Consecration to God.

He who has not devoted himself entirely to his God, to do ALL that he requires and live only for his glory, is only, at best, in the outer court of the tabernacle. His mind is dark, his faith is wavering, his comforts are few, and he is a stranger to true rest in Christ. He struggles with unconquered foes, falls and rises, and has a tiresome path to eternity. Easily overcome by temptation, he is tormented by a consciousness of guilt, and the foreboding of ill. But he who is indeed dead unto sin, and lives only to the will of his God, has an increasing fullness of holy delight, and a perfect assurance of immortal life.

An Infidel's Poser.—"Give me," said an infidel to a distinguished French Divine, "your principles, and I will be a better man than yourself." "Begin," replied the believer, "with being a better man, and you will soon have my principles."

The Bible.

A single book has saved me; but that book is not of human origin. Long had I despised it, long had I deemed it a class book for the credulous and ignorant; until having investigated the gospel of Christ, with an ardent desire to ascertain its truth or falsity, its pages offered to my inquiries the sublimest knowledge of man and nature, and the simplest at the same time, the most exalted system of moral ethics. Faith, hope and charity were enkindled in my bosom; and every advancing step stregthened me in the conviction, that the morals of this book are as superior to human morals, as its oracles are superior to human opinions.—M. L. Mautain.

To Cure a Burn.

A LADY, preacher of the society of Friends, in New York, was so successful in curing burns, that many supposed her possessed of the power of working miracles. The following is the receipt for the medicine: Take one ounce of beeswax, with four ounces burgundy pitch, simered in an earthen vessel, together with as much sweet oil as will soften them into the consistency of a salve when cool—stir the liquid after taking from the fire until quite cool. Keep it from the air in a tight box or jar. When used, spread it thinly on a cloth and apply it to the part injured. Open the burn with a needle and let the water out till it heals.—Ex.

The Human Voice.

God has made the whole earth vocal with sweet sounds. The untravelled forest echoes the notes of the wild bird, and the habitations of men are made glad by the song of the feathered minstrel. But, above all, the human voice that combines the highest charm of sweet sound, with the inspiration of thought, is given for no ordinary purpose of earthly pleasure. In its expression of religious devotion, how exalted! For its solace in trouble, how dear! For its participation in joy, how unspeakable!

Envy chooses the fairest victim, and SLANDER loves a shining mark. It is astonishing with what facility the world at large grasps at the vaguest calumny against those who have appeared superior, and how instantly a whisper against an innocent woman is hatched into a tale of guilt, or a hint of evil is caught and bandied about when directed againts an obvious honest man.

The Sailor's Chart.

The following lines are supposed to have been written by a Sailor on the blank leaf of his Bible:

While down the stream of life I sail,
Christ be my ship, and grace my gale,
Hope be my anchor, while I ride,
This book my compass, o'er the tide.

That man hath no more religion in him than there is in a beast, who doth not in the ordinary course of his life, design and aim at the glory of God, as the supreme and ultimate end of his actions.

SHOW US THE FATHER.

BY MISS ANN D. W. SWEET.

Wouldst thou behold Him?
Go, and with untiring effort clime the mountain's
Rugged brow, the structure of whose dizzy
Height the farthest depths of human skill bath
Never framed. See red Vesuvius when
With awful rupture and unearthly flash, in colors
Brighter than the sun, he paints his power far o'er Italia's
Sky. Or burning Hecla, who for years
Unnumbered has vainly strove with meteor glare
And fervent heat, to melt the stern and frigid
Empire of the North's eternal snows. Or, listen to the War of elements, and mark the halls of either, uplighted
With the bright mysterious fires of lightning's flash,
While through their vast and vaulted conceaves rolls with Deaf'ning sound the thunder-drum of Heaven.

Then, turn and gaze upon the never-quiet breast
Of Ocean, the murmur of whose waves can Never lull to rest—whose rock-girt shores are Ever sending back with battling fury, all the angry
Surges which old Neptune's wrath can ever dash
Upon their firm and strongly fortress'd walls. Look,
Thou unbeliever in eternal good, and be convinced—
For mountain, storm, and Ocean, all combined, in Awful grandeur, bear the stamp and fiat of a God.

Or, turn from scenes sublimed to those of beauty, and Upward gaze upon the bright and beaming alphabet of Heaven, when night to sister night her knowledge tells,
And mark the countless stars that round the king of Orbs in stated splendor wheel. Can ought more plainly
Speak than Orion's beaming bands; or still not far
Removed the soft and sweeter influence of the Pleiades!
Or bold Arcturus who with tireless hounds will never cease,
While graceful harmony prevades grand Nature's relm, to Chase the grim and surely bear around the northorn pole!

Not these alone demand thy sight. The refracted bow in Heaven,
The bright wing'd bird, and even the simple flower, are Worth of thy gaze. There shalt thou see the image stamp'd,
Of Him, the pillars of whose throne are Justice;
And in whose sceptre truth and mercy sweetly
Blend; whose breath all nature fills; pervades
All matter, and spreads thoughout the boundless
Space of all eternity.

POETRY.

[From the Colonization Herald.]

THOUGHTS OF HEAVEN.

No sickness there—
No WEARY wasting of the frame away;
No fearful shrinking from the midnight air;
No dread of summer's bright and fervid ray!

No hidden grief,
No wild and cheerless vision of despair;
No vain petition for a swift relief—
No tearful eyes, no broken hearts are there.

Care has no home
Within the realm of ceaseless praise and song;
Its billows break away and melt in foam,
Far from the mansions of the spirit throng!

The storms black wing
Is never spread athwart celestial skies!
Its wailings blend not with the voice of spring,
As some too tender flowret fades and dies!

No light distils
Its chilling dews upon the tender frame;
No moon is needed there! The light which fills
That land of glory, from its maker came!

No parted friends
O'er mournful recollections have to weep!
No bed of death enduring love attends,
To watch the coming of a pulseless sleep!

No blasted flower
Or withered bud, celestial gardens know!
No scorching blast or fast descending shower
Scatters destruction, like a ruthless foe!

No battle word
Startles the sacred host with fear and dread!
The song of peace Creation's morning heard,
Is wrung wherever angel minstrels tread!

Let us depart,
If home like this await the weary soul!
Look up, thou stricken one! Thy wounded heart
Shall bleed no more at sorrow's stern control.

With faith our guide,
White-robed and innocent, to lead the way,
Why fear to plunge in Jordan's rolling tide,
And find the ocean of eternal day!

THE DRUNKARD.

AN ACROSTIC.

T REMENDOUS truth these words unfold:
H ow can the tale of woe be told—
E 'en health and life for rum is sold—

D elusion's in the drunkard's cup—
R eflects not, thinks not, drinks it up!
U ntimely in his grave he lies:
N ow where's that part which never dies?
K now ye not the Bible saith
A drunkard's doom's eternal death.
R eason! conscience all were nought;
D estroyed by rum, O dreadful thought.

LIFE the temple's outer pale,
For priestly service trod;
Death will soon uplift the veil,
And let us in to God.

SCENE IN GETHSEMANE.

BY N. P. WILLIS.

The moon was shining yet. The Orient's brow
Set with the morning star, was not yet mid;
And the deep silence which subdues the breath
Like a strong feeling, hung upon the world
As sleep upon the pulse of a child.
'Twas the last watch of night. Gethsemane,
With its bath'd leaves of silver, seemed dissolv'd
In visible stillnes; and, as Jesus' voice,
With its bewildering sweetness, met the ear
Of his disciples, it vibrated on
Like the first whisper in a silent world.
They came on slowly. Heaviness oppress'd
The Saviour's heart, and when the kindnesses
Of his deep love were pour'd, he felt the need
Of near communion, for his gift of strength
Was wasted by the spirit's weariness.
He left them there, and went a little on,
And in the depth of that hush'd silentness,
Alone with God, he fell upon his face.
And as his heart was broken with the rush
Of his surpassing agony, and death,
Wrung from him to a dying universe,
Was mightier than the son of man could bear,
He gave his sorrows way—and in the deep
Prostration of his soul breathed out the prayer,
"Father, if it be possible with thee,
Let this cup pass from me." Oh, how a word,
Like the forc'd drop before the fountain breaks,
Stilleth the press of human agony!
The Savior felt its quiet to his soul;
And, though his strength was weakness, and the Light which led him on till now was sorely dim,
He breathed a new submission—"Not my will,
But thine be done, oh Father!" As he spoke,
Voices were heard in heaven, and music stole
Out from the chambers of the vaulted sky,
As if the stars were swept like instruments.
No cloud was visible, but the radiant wings
Were coming with a silvery rush to earth,
And as the Saviour rose, a glorious one,
With an illumin'd forehead, and the light,
Whose fountain is the mystery of God,
Encalm'd within his eye, bowed down to him,
And nerved him with a ministry of strength.
It was enough—and with his God-like brow
Re-written on his Fathers messenger,
With meekness, whose divinity is more
Than power and glory, he returned again
To his disciples, and awak'd their sleep,
For he that should betray him was at hand!"

DIED—At Mount Joy, Lancaster co., Pa., NANCY MCFADDEN; aged 35 years and 4 months.

Sister MCFADDEN was a worthy and highly esteemed member of the "Church of God" at Mount Joy, since its first formation, some 16 or 17 years ago.

She experienced religion when quite young, at a campmeeting in Dauphin county, about five miles from Harrisburg, and sometime afterwards she was baptised and added to the church. Her humble and exemplary life, gave full evidence of the sincerity of her profession. Her loss will be sensibly felt by her friends and the church; but their loss is, doubtless, her unspeakable gain.

Her disease was Pulmonary consumption. She had a long and painful illness, but endured it all with exemplary patience and submission. Her faith was strong—her evidence bright—and her final triumph glorious. She died shouting and praising God. Reader! if you wish to die the death of the righteous, then mark and imitate the perfect man, and behold the upright. Live right, and you will die right.

ON Saturday evening the 14th inst., in this borough, GEORGE LAIRD, son of Samuel and Sarah Bigler, aged 4 months.

Two Weeks More!

The subscribers to the Advocate will please to take notice, that there are only about two weeks more till the time runs out, in which they have bound themselves, by solemn contract, in law and honor, to pay for the same. This, of course, will be expected on the part of the publisher, and, we hope, he will have no cause to complain of any covenant-breakers among his patrons. Remember, you have every opportunity of paying for your paper; the preachers and our agents are among you daily; besides, you can, any day you please, remit the amount by mail. One dollar and a quarter can be very conveniently enclosed in a letter and forwarded by mail. We have, in many instances, received such remittances, and in some cases a two dollar note wrapped round a half dollar, paying for two papers. We hope, then, our present fine list will not be diminished by a non-compliance with our terms, but that all will come up to duty like conscientious men and Christians. However, should any of our subscribers, after all, treat this matter lightly and neglect their duty, we hope none of them will be offended if they find their papers discontinued.

Apology.

It is due to a disappointed people to know the cause of their disappointment. The readers of the Advocate will, doubtless, find themselves disappointed in looking over the editorial department of this number of our paper, and perhaps, also, in some respects, at least, in reading the other departments. The cause of this, is owing to the editor having had a spell of sickness. We were taken ill on the 6th of July, by an attack of Dihærea, which run into some symptoms of dysentery, and continued pretty bad for some days. The weather being very warm, and the medical treatment rigid, we had a pretty hard time of it for about eight or nine days. We have been convalesent for the last few days; but even now we are hardly able to write this short apology.

How our contributor's department will come out, we know not. We had no time to prepare more than a few of the communications for the hands of the compositors, and we shall not even now be able to assist much in reading the proof. However, our Printer is careful, and will do the best he can.

Fire!

Our citizens were alarmed yesterday morning about six o'clock with the cry of fire, which cry was immediately enhanced by the ringing of several bells, when it was soon ascertained that Mr. George W. Felix's house, situated in Market square, of this borough, was on fire, and the flames making rapid progress. But through the activity of our hardy and prompt firemen and Hose companies, the fire was speedily arrested and extinguished.

The fire broke out at the roof, and destroyed a great part of the upper story and garret of the building.

Mr. Felix and family deserve the sympathies and aid of our citizens in restoring their loss, and we hope they may soon realize the fact, that they live among a generous-hearted and sympathizing people.

Our Uniontown Contributor.

We bid him welcome to our colums. His long silence had almost wearied us. But we feel refreshed by his most welcome and excellent communication. We greatly admire his subject, his style and his spirit. The readers of the Advocate will, doubtless, feel a pleasure and zest in its perusal, not always met with, in young writers, on kindred subjects. We hope to have not only an interest in his prayers, but the renewed pleasure and gratification of hearing from him again, soon and often.

Elder Newton's Essay on Union.

This essay treats on an important subject, and will, no doubt, be read with considerable interest. We shall endeavor to give our opinion, in relation to the subject discussed in this essay, in our next.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Religious Periodicals.

The improvement of the human race, and the general diffusion of useful knowledge, among all classes and conditions of society, is the grand focus to which are directed all the exertions, both of the moral philosopher and the Christian. For the accomplishment of this sublime and exalted object, men of God, of past and present ages, have labored with unwearied patience: to it they devoted their time, energy and talents. To us this subject addresses itself with double force, and claims nothing less than our whole attention, as we live in an age more peculiarly adapted to the diffusion of religious knowledge, because we possess the means by which the glories of the cross and the mysteries of redemption, may be communicated to almost every nation and tongue under Heaven. As a means of diffusing virtuous principles and Bible doctrine, religious periodicals hold a prominent place, and should be duly appreciated and supported by every Christian community. Scarcely any means are more efficient in removing from the minds of the people the unhallowed principles of bigotry and superstition, of raising them from the depths of ignorance and moral depravity, and of diffusing over our land the immortal and glorious doctrines of virtue and religion. The influence of periodical publications is tremendous. They are the absolute lever which moves the moral and political world. They have, no doubt, controlled the destinies of thousands by urging them on, either to the performance of great and noble actions, or the perpetration of the most horrid crimes.—View, for a single moment, the mighty influence of party papers. How long would the factions of parties be held together and united in a body, were it not for the all-controlling influence of partisan papers. It is by this means that the crafty politician seeks to disseminate his principles, and palm off upon the unthinking multitude doctrines which he himself does not believe. If, then, these publications have such an influence among the irreligious world, most assuredly they will, if rightly conducted, exercise the same powerful influence, only to a much better purpose, when employed to support the cause of truth. By means of the press may the soul-cheering doctrines of religion, the joys of present deliverance from sin, and the glories of final redemption from its influence, be widely diffused among all classes of people. Let, then, the Advocate be ably supported, as one above many of the publications of the present day, eminently calculated to defend religion alike from the cruel mockings of infidelity, and the bitter cavils of sectarians. By this means, may we, as a church, be kept together, firmly united in the bonds of Christian love and affection. It comes as a welcome visiter, bringing comfort and solace to many afflicted souls.—It exercises its salutary influence, in many instances, where we cannot perceive it, and the good it may accomplish, eternity alone can reveal. In the secret chamber, removed from the noise and bustle of the world, its readers may find encouragement and pleasure, have their minds improved and their souls strengthed and built up in the faith of the Gospel. Let it, then, be ably and efficiently supported: let every brother, who is able, subscribe to it, and pray to Heaven for its success. May the Lord of Heaven, who rules the destinies of nations, bless the Advocate: may it, through Divine assistance, be the means of reclaiming many from the folly of sin, of building up believers in the Lord, and uniting the church in a bond of love inseparable by any power on earth. May Heaven smile upon this effort of our brother, assist him in his undertaking, and enable him boldly to defend the doctrine of the Bible. May he be able to shield the church from the arrows of calumny and misrepresentation, and ward off the blows which may be hurled by her enemies with deadly aim. May he stand as a faithful sentinel, sounding loud the trumpet of alarm when danger threatens the church, or enemies invade her peaceful territories. And as an incentive to his exertions, may he have the ardent and sincere prayers of hundreds of believers in the Lord, who receive comfort and encouragement from the pages of the Advocate.

The Missionary Cause.

At the present day men are always very ready, and very willing, too, to invest their money in any project that they conceive will yield them some gain. But when they think profit is not to be realized, then there is a slothful negligence to be seen. But we hold that man, at best, is but a short-sighted creature, and his pecuniary schemes are frequently foiled. This, to many, is sometimes a source of sore distress. Hence, we desire to bring before the minds of all the truth, that what is given for the spread of the Gospel is not misspent, but well spent. Indeed, we are of the opinion that money, given in aid of the missionary cause, does not make a man a bit poorer in the end. What! says one, if I give five dollars this year for the afore-mentioned purpose, will I not have that much less of money at the year's end. We think not, although it would seem so at first sight. The "Lord will provide" for his people, both temporally and spiritually. Blessings are in store for the faithful of God on earth and in Heaven. The Lord may increase your earthly possessions one hundred fold, if you give liberally to advance His kingdom; or He may decrease your wealth an hundred fold, if you persist in an unchristian, miserly withholding thereof. Lovers of riches, more than God, ponder over this matter! It is optional with man to act, or not to act; he is free to do as he likes; but God will reward the giver, and punish the withholder in a coming day.

The more religion we have, the more willingly and liberally will we seek to promote this glorious cause. Hence some, whose religious zeal has scarce the faint glimmer of a flickering taper, are always pleading poverty when asked to assist in the Heavenly undertaking of evangelizing the world; whereas, they have often enough, and a good deal to spare, to lend to the Lord, if they were only willing to do so. Nevertheless, we rejoice to know that most of the brethren and sisters of the "Church of God," feel a lively interest in this matter, and will do nobly for it. But there may be some who feel careless, and make sundry excuses. If we excuse ourselves here unlawfully, we may sometimes escape with impunity; but at the bar of God all things shall be made manifest. There will be no covering up of sin and neglect of duty then. And we would merely suggest that many, who seem pinched in circumstances, might ameliorate their condition, and be able to give something, if not much, by economy in clothing, by denying themselves of tobacco, and other unnecessary excesses, and not a few, by being more industrious.

Come to the rescue, brethren and sisters; get at this laudable enterprise with your whole heart. We are in earnest, and want others to feel similarly. And we repeat again, that the preachers, having charge of the several churches, ought to take this matter in hand, and organize missionary societies in every church without delay. For we are fondly impressed, that if this subject is fairly and rightly brought before the people, it must and will succeed, and a handsome sum be realized to spread the word of God into many destitute parts. Which church will lay before the next annual Eldership the largest missionary fund, proportionate to its membership? And as the faith of the church at Rome was spoken of throughout the world, so may the missionary zeal of that church be. But we must conclude this essay, hoping that these appeals, to a Christian community, shall not be in vain. Praying that the Lord would enable the people to view it rightly, and each give in proportion to their abilities. Then shall we be able to say and sing with truth:

> "With my substance I will honor
> My Redeemer and my Lord;
> Were ten thousand worlds my manor,
> All were nothing to this Word."

The Devices of Satan.

Satan, the arch-enemy of mankind, has many snares laid to destroy the Christian religion, and prevent the growth of piety on earth. Should one device fail, another is speedily set on foot. Untiring in his evil purposes, the devil is ever on the alert to break the union between Christ and the Christian. If he cannot get people to sin openly, he will open a new campaign, and try to excite secret family quarrels; and if unsuccessful in this plot, he turns his deep laid plans against the minister of the sanctuary, and tries to weaken the confidence existing between the church and their pastor. Because the soul of the man of God is vexed at the evil doings of the world, and consequently lets the terrors of the law fall with its full weight upon them, denounces their extreme sinfulness, tells them openly and plainly the danger of their wicked course, and invites them to come to Jesus; and because he rebukes sin whenever and wherever it needs a rebuke, without respect to persons, he is first anathematized by the wicked as a rude preacher; and a horde of false brethren and hypocrites soon bear a similar testimony against him. This union of the devil, false professors, and wicked men and women, too often succeed in their satanic efforts to ruin the usefulness of the servant of the ministry. Let the minister of Christ preach the truth as he pleases, it will not suit; they will oppose. One is too harsh for them, another is too eloquent, and still another is not eloquent enough. In fine, cavillers cannot be pleased; their hearts are fixed upon being enemies of the cross of Christ, servants of hell, and foes to every good work.

Now, we claim the privilege of warning all true Christians to beware of their characters. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Despite of a great parade of piety, when they show an obstinate resistance to the truth, we may safely conclude they are yet aliens to Israel. Let them know that you disapprove of such mean demeanor, and satan-like endeavors to weaken the efforts of God's people, to spread the tidings of salvation throughout the world. Traitors to God's cause should be dealt with in positive terms. And of all treachery, that of professing to be friendly to the minister of Christ, and promising to sustain him, and yet being his secret foe, is the worst. Beware of wolves in sheep's clothing. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven." And the will of the Father is not to oppose the "little flock" and their pastor; but to serve God, and love one another.

Spiritual Declension.

When Jesus Christ was yet with his disciples on the earth, and shortly before leaving them, he asked the solemn and no less important question; that when he came the second time, "whether he should find faith on the earth or not?" How the Apostles answered this question, or whether they answered it at all, we are not informed. But, judging from past and present circumstances, the question, at this time, could hardly be answered in the affirmative, by beings such as we, without a certain degree of doubt. I have no hesitation, however, in affirming, that there will always be those whom Christ will acknowledge as His children; and who, in consequence, must be in possession of faith. But how many such there are, and what amount of faith they possess, I know not. God knoweth all things.—But we have abundant reason to believe and to fear, too, that the number is few and the amount small. Had Christ made His advent to this world in '43. perhaps He would have found much more faith then, than what He would were He to come now. Then there was a universal excitement—an apparent anxiety for the salvation of sinners. Ministers of the Gospel, elders, deacons, laymen, and many sinners, too, had their minds operated upon, to a greater or less extent, on hearing the report of Christ's speedy coming to judge the world. But, perhaps, this excitement was not genuine; or if it was, why do we not see more good fruits from it? Where are the hundreds, aye, and the thousands, too, who professed to have obtained pardon for their sins, and considered themselves prepared for the event which was, yes, and which they themselves proclaimed shortly to take place? Have they rejected God and gone back to the devil, or are they in the church? Many of them have, doubtless, gone back; yet many more have been admitted into church membership, (and some good members, I confess; but we speak of the mass.) And not like the sinner, who counts the cost before he commences to build; and who, after he has commenced, "endures hardship as a good soldier;" but to the reverse. They commence not from pure motives; perhaps alone from the fear of being speedily overwhelmed in a deluge of God's wrath. Hence, when they find that things do not happen in the manner, and when they expect that they either again become openly profane sinners, or settle down into a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. An individual once said that such a state was, at least, better than that of the sinners; but in the sight of God, I trow not; for He has emphatically declared, that all such He will "spew out of His mouth."

The question now arises: Do men, after they have taken upon themselves a profession of religion, willingly and designingly retrograde? Many do, but many more, we hope, do not. "Be not high-minded, but fear," is a wise exhortation given by the Apostle. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." Many are all zeal and all earnestness when they commence, ready to reprove all around, who do not manifest the same amount of zeal that they do. But, alas! how soon a strange forgetfulness, a neglect of prayer and prayer-meeting, and a slothfulness, steals upon them. God's people they now shun as much as they neglect God's extended privileges of grace. And, Oh! what an innumerable host of such characters are at present in the world and in the church.—The situation of such persons is awfully dangerous, beyond all description, and their condition deeply to be deplored. How replete with misery is such a state! In the world they can have no real enjoyment, and in the church languor becomes a hindrance both to improvement and felicity. God is long-suffering, merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin; but he has no asylum for the luke-warm. Had I the learning of a Selden, I might be able to pursue this subject to a much greater extent; but as I merely wished to stir up those of a pure mind, by way of remembrance, I shall close, praying God that it may accomplish, at least in part, what I desire.

THOUGHTS FOR SABBATH SCHOOL TEACHERS.

Thirdly: Regular attendance is indispensable. Teachers should attend regularly every Sabbath, if possible. Every one should be punctual—none should be absent. If circumstances sometimes should prevent your attendance, see that you have a substitute—one that is fully qoalified to take your place. If you don't come yourself, and fail to send a substitute, your class will soon abandon you. Children will soon become discouraged. It is bad policy for teachers to absent themselves too often, even if they do send a substitute; but it is worse, still, to absent themselves from time to time, and neglect to send substitutes: the former argues a want of interest in the prosperity of the school; the latter an entire disregard, not only for the prosperity of the school, but, also, for the teachers, scholars, and everything connected with it. Let not teachers, then, absent themselves, unless they have reasonable excuses; and in such cases, they should always send substitutes fully qualified to take their places. And if there are such teachers for whom it is impossible to pay that attention generally required, let them see that they get those who can pay the necessary attention, and who are competent to fill their places. And those who have no relish for, and interest in the school, and who are determined to forsake it, (but without lawful excuse) let them inform the managers of their intention, so that they may look out for such who will take their classes, and do their duty in this, as well as in every other respect. A supply of faithful, good, competent teachers, will assist greatly in carrying forward a well-organized Sabbath-school. It should be remembered, that it is just as discouraging to the children, when the teachers absent themselves, as it is to the teachers, when the children absent themselves. Both, therefore, should be punctual; but let the teachers especially be punctual, so as to give no scholar occasion to say: "I won't go to Sunday-school, for my teacher won't be there."

Fourthly: "An upright conduct and a chaste conversation" are indispensable.—This argues strongly that those who engage as teachers, should have good religion, or at least be strictly moral. A good character is very important. No teacher should be without this distinguishing mark. When people are not religious or strictly moral, they are often very loose in their conduct and conversation; and this, every one knows, is a bad example to set before children. We should be teachers both by word and action. If we are light and trifling at times—pass jokes—relate stories which create nothing but laughter—I say, if this spirit characterizes us, even if we would sometimes be in earnest with them, they will think we just want to tease them and have our sport with them. and therefore will not receive our instructions. A liar may tell the truth sometimes, but because he is known to be a liar, it is likely he will not be believed, even if he should tell the truth. Teachers may act very consistent during school hours, but because a spirit of levity may characterize them out of school, children will not likely place much confidence in them, while they would be in earnest with them in school.

One day, while travelling along, I fell in company with a fine looking youth, to whom I made it my business to talk on the subject of religion. First, I asked him, whether he prayed sometimes. To this he replied, "do you pray?" I answered him yes. Then, says he, "why don't you pray, then?" I answered him again, and said, "for aught you know I am praying." I next asked him whether he was in the habit of swearing sometimes. To this he replied, "it is not any of your business." I finally began to think that the poor boy was laboring under a wrong impression with regard to my object in talking to him. "Now," said I, "perhaps you think I am just making sport with you." To this he replied, "yes, I do just think so!" "Well, now," said I, "you are mistaken; I was in earnest when I asked you these questions." I then put the same questions to him again, and when he could not help but know that I was in earnest, he gave me every satisfaction, by telling me that he never prayed, and that he was in the habit of swearing. We soon gave the parting hand, with the promise that he would begin to pray, and swear no more!

Now, why did this boy answer me thus impolitely in the first place? Why, from the very fact that he was more or less accustomed to those who would address him lightly and jocosely, and therefore thought I wanted to do likewise.

Thus we see the disadvantage from being too lax in our conduct and conversation. Let us, therefore, be of "an upright conduct and chaste conversation," that we may not only be patterns to believers, but also to children. But,—

Fifthly: A good assortment of Sabbath-school books are also indispensable to keep up the school. If you have no books, you will soon have no scholars. Children are sometimes as fond of reading as grown persons; and how will they read if they have no books? There are many books which should be in Sunday-school, in connection with the Bible. Be not so vain as to think that children should read no other book than the Bible. By the word Bible, we are to understand, "The Book;" that is, the chief, the principal Book—the Book of books. Now, because it is the best Book, this does not go to argue that all other books are bad. No; it argues to the contrary: that some are good, others better, but the Bible best. If, then, other books contain useful knowledge, let us, also, have them in our schools in connection with that which contains the most uselul knowledge—the Bible. Suppose, now, I have three books; the first is good, the second better, and the third the best. Of course, to have the good and the better one, in connection with the best, is more advantageous to me than to have the best alone. So, then, if some other books are good, and others better than good, of course, to have all the good and the better in connection with the best, (the Bible) would be more advantageous than the Bible alone. If children, by reading, obtain a knowledge of other good books, in connection with that knowledge derived from the reading of the Bible, will they not have more knowledge than by reading the Bible alone? Knowledge, (of the right kind) combined, is powerful. If, then, children, as well as men, obtain more knowledge by reading good books, in connection with the Bible, than by reading the Bible alone, should we not, therefore, place good books into their hands, together with the Bible, that their knowledge may abound yet more and more? Say no more, then, that other books are bad, and contain no useful knowledge, from the very fact that the Bible is the best book—the Book of books.

Now, in order that we may have the requisite books in our Sunday-schools, the teachers, parents, &c., should all unite in contributing moneys to purchase them. Let this not rest upon one, or a few teachers. As all are concerned, let all give more or less, according to their circumstances. Let there be no screenery here. It would be very advisable to pay 12½ cts. quarterly. This would not appear harder than to pay double the sum at the end of the year. At this rate, (paying a shilling quarterly) there being twenty teachers, we would have $10 ready money at the end of the year. Then a subscription list should be put out to give an opportunity to those teachers to subscribe more, who are not satisfied by paying only fifty cents a year. The rich ought, of course, be willing to pay more than the poor. The quarterly contributions is about the amount the poor may be able to give. This subscription list, going the rounds, will also afford an opportunity to those who are not connected with the school as teachers. If this method were adopted in some of our Sunday-schools, it would avoid a great many difficulties in obtaining the necessary books.

These, then, are some of the things indispensable in a Sunday-school, in order to advance its prosperity, viz: A sufficient number of teachers—their regular attendance—a constant effort to increase the number of scholars—a Christian deportment on the part of the teachers—and a well-selected assortment of books.

A LOVER OF SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

Letter from Elder Wm. H. Mullinix.

SMITHTOWN, June 30, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I have not as yet favored you and the numerous readers of your interesting paper with a communication. But as I have an occasion to write to you, in order to send you a few more names, with the money for their and other papers, I have taken my pen in hand this afternoon, for the first time, to send you a short epistle.

As for the news that I have for you from this place, there is nothing that will be read, I suppose, with any particular interest. Though I would inform you and your readers that, according to the appointment at our last annual meeting, I came on to this circuit on the first of April last, and met with a kind reception by the people, especially by the friends and brethren of this place. After fixing for house-keeping, I went round to the different appointments on the circuit, found the brethren and friends generally well, and appeared glad to see me, having been formerly acquainted with me.

Since I have been preaching for them in my weak manner, I have had good congregations at most of the places, both in point of size and behaviour; and I had repeated invitations to preach at new places. At this place (Smithtown) I preach in the Academy, and in Cavetown at a private house. At Funkstown I preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and at Mr. MARTIN EKLE's mill, in a large school-house. I have had calls from other places, but as I want to preach every two weeks for those that I do preach for, I am not able to attend them. I have now twelve regular appointments, and I doubt not but that many more could easily be opened in Washington county, if we only had a way of obtaining a better support for the one that would do it.

The people's prejudices have been much removed, within the last few years, on this circuit, and I do assure you, my gentle readers, that I flatter myself with a hope of yet seeing God's church a large church in this county.

And to the brethren, especially those on this circuit, I would say, do not be discouraged. Although things at present appear somewhat dark and gloomy; the darkest time, remember, is always just before day. The Apostle says: "In due time we shall reap, if we faint not." Let us, then, continue to exercise patience; and it may be that we shall yet see a mighty ingathering of souls from the labors that have been spent, and seed that has been sown in this section of country.

To the brethren in the ministry, I would say, as there is such a drought in our religious world, do let us soak our seed well with tears before we sow it, and it will be more likely to spring up the sooner. I often fear, brethren, that we have too much form about us when in the pulpit, and seek to please men more than to do them good. BRETHREN! our time is too precious to waste in this way. Therefore, as we have opportunity, let us make it our chief aim to do good to all men among whom God, in his providence, may send us, especially to them of the household of faith. Then, when our race is run, and our warfare ended here below, and the Lord shall come to make up His jewels, we may be found of HIM in peace without spot and blameless.

Yours, in Gospel bonds,

A Serious Thought.

SHORT and uncertain as is our existence in this world, our character is perpetually receiving here the stamp of eternity; and we are all, and always, and everywhere, and in all things, gathering those materials which must inevitably be the source of the most tormenting or the most felicitous recollections throughout eternity. J. A. J.

AN ESSAY,

Read before the Ministerial Conference of the Mohecan Baptist Association, held at Haysville, Ashland county, Ohio, on the 30th of May, 1846.

THE question assigned to me by the last session of this Conference, is the propriety or impropriety of taking measures to form a closer union with those denominations who agree with us in believer's baptism. And what are proper measures, if any should be taken?

I could wish that a more able hand had the question, or that I had more time that I might do my best with it.* Were it simply an obstruse metaphysical question, that had no bearing on the present prosperity of the churches and the conversion of the world, I should not feel much solicitude respecting it; but the great subject of Christian union, of which this is a part, is, in my view, one of the most important, as well as critical, subjects of discussion now before the public. It has been a real pleasure to me to notice, at the present time, a disposition in various branches of the Christian church, to come together. It seems to say, that the bigotry and party zeal, which have so long over-spread the Christian world, blighting the prospects of churches, hindering the progress of revivals, and causing the energies of Christians, which should have been used in the conversion of the world, to be used against each other, is fast abating. If these could once be removed, then men, with candor, would search for truth, and the vast deserts of error would rapidly pass away, and truth would soon prevail over the earth.

My brethren, have we nothing to do in this glorious work? Or shall we, standing as we suppose, on the platform of truth, say to all other Christians, "stay away!—come not near me, for I am holier than thou!"—and so make no effort to bring the hearts of, especially God's obedient, people into closer union. I know that similar expressions have been urged against us to draw us, if possible, from certain scriptural doctrines and practices, or cause us to justify unscriptural ones. But here, as certainly as the truth is the instrument for the conversion of the world, and the church is the pillar and ground of the truth, we must never yield; and those who would draw us away, are guilty of the division.

I am well aware that this subject is one of much thought and study, among many of our ministering brethren, and I rejoice in it. The question naturally arises here, whether there be any denominations that agree with us in believer's baptism, and who they are! The FREE WILL BAPTISTS baptize none but believers, and immersion is with them baptism. This is, also, true of a people styling themselves the CHURCH OF GOD. With the CAMPBELITES, or DISCIPLES, immersion is baptism, and this they administer to none but such as are, in their view, believers. But as in their definition of faith, trust is wholly left out: they can hardly be said to agree with us in believer's baptism. But even here, as I am informed, a large proportion of them are equally careful with us, in requiring the evidences of regeneration as a necessary prerequisite to baptism. Such I would include in my list. There may be others, but I do not think of any more in our vicinity.

* The writer received a kick from a horse, which nearly proved fatal, and by this means a good part of the time, the question which was put in his hands, was unable to write, this, besides the care of two churches.

Our duty respecting them, or the propriety of taking measures to form a closer union with them, depends on the following questions, viz:

1st. Are the members of those churches Christians?

2d. Are they evangelical in their views of Gospel doctrine?—(not whether they entertain opinions different from our own.)

3d. Are they obedient to Christ?

4th. Do the scriptures any where teach that such should be united?

Whether they are Christians or not, depends on the following inquiries, viz:

1st. Have they right views of regeneration?

2d. Are they careful in requiring the evidences of it before baptism?

3d. Do they maintain a faithful discipline?

Concerning their views of regeneration, what I have seen of their writings, leads me to suppose that they are correct. But of their examination of candidates for baptism and discipline, I cannot speak particularly; yet I have no reason to conclude that they are so negligent as to give an unconverted character to their churches.

1st. Are there some unconverted persons among them? Doubtless, there are among us. But if they are more deficient than we, increased friendship with them would tend to correct these faults. But on the whole, I do not think that an objection to union could be made to stand on this point.

2d. Are they evangelical in their doctrines? By this I do not mean whether they entertain some opinions, such as Feet-Washing, &c., that we do not, or whether they reject some that we entertain; but whether they maintain the grand distinguishing doctrines of the Christian religion, such as salvation through Christ alone, and the accompanying doctrines: Trinity in Unity—Deity of Christ—Justification through Faith alone—Obedience as the Fruits and Evidences of this Faith—The Spirit's Influences, &c. &c. I cannot say but on these subjects they are quite correct. Certainly, I have not, as yet, seen sufficient evidence to form a contrary conclusion.

3d. Are they obedient to Christ? Of their internal obedience, or that of the heart, God alone is judge. But what I have reference to here, is: Have they that conscientious regard to the commands and duties of Christianity, that distinguishes the Christian? And have they, in general, correct views of those commands and duties? So far as I am acquainted with them, they do as carefully attend to the duties of prayer, public, social and secret, and public worship, baptism, and the Lord's Supper, and whatever else distinguishes the believer from an infidel, or a Christian from a worldling, as ourselves; and in forms very similar to our own.

4th. Do the scriptures anywhere teach that such should be united? Christ has earnestly prayed that his people might be one. They being, without doubt, his people, certainly removes all impropriety of taking measures to a closer union, provided those measures be correct.

It is not, according to scripture, absolutely necessary that the opinions of the members be precisely alike. Him that is weak in faith, is to be received, but not to doubtful disputation. One, anciently, thought it no harm to eat meat that had been offered to idols; another esteemed it n sin; yet they did not withdraw and form different churches. The Jewish Christians thought they must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses The Gentiles thought it not necessary; yet we nowhere read that they disfellowshiped each other on that account, unless it is when the Jews endeavored to impose their yoke on the Gentiles. Gal. 5: 12. The differences among the Corinthian brethren were, doubtless, as great as those among these denominations; yet Paul exhorts them to be at peace, and not to have divisions among them. 1 Cor. 1: 10.

One consideration further, which, to my mind, has great weight, must not be omitted, i. e., the immense influence union, and especially as expressed by united action, would have on the world. The adage is not less true than extensively known and used, that "union is strength." If those sects, so nearly agreed, were to merge into one, who can tell what immense mutual benefit would be the result? The faith and zeal of one warming the rest, the learning and stability of others enlightening and strengthening the rest. And thus all the various gifts would be used for the perfecting of the saints—for the work of the ministry—for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, into a perfect man, unto the measure of the full stature of Christ. But further: with how much greater power could we approach the mercy-seat, where union is especially required? See Matt. 18: 19, 20. And how much more efficatious would be the testimony of the church among men, were they all united in love and in the bonds of peace? See Job. 13: 35—17: 21. But to all this it will be objected. The Free Will Baptists open the doors of their communion to persons unbaptized. If they do in one way, they close it, or nearly so, in another, if I am correctly informed. They so give the invitation, that seldom any but baptized persons come to their table, and they as seldom commune with unbaptized churches.

It may also be objected respecting the "Church of God," that they hold the Presbyterian form of church government! Who ever thought of making this a term of communion? If everything else was right, especially the hearts, one towards another, this would not long stand in the way.

I, therefore, do come to the conclusion, that measures, immediate and sincere, should be taken to form a closer union with those denominations; and, if possible, form a union so close, that we may be one people.

But what are those measures that are proper to be taken? I would say,—

1st. Admit at once that they are churches of the same faith. But, says one, are there not points of difference in faith? Yes; but no greater than exist between different churches of the regular Baptist denomination in other respects.

2d. Admit that the difference, in respect to order, is not so great as to be a bar of fellowship.

3d. Extend to them the right hand of fellowship as sister churches of our Lord Jesus Christ.

4th. Exchange letters of commendation with them, in the same manner that we do with churches of our own denomination.

5th. Freely invite their minister to sit in council with us at our ministerial meetings, associations and elsewhere.

6th. Wherever two churches of those different denominations exist in the same place, encourage them to become one, adopting whatever name the majority of such united church may think best, and forming whatever associational connections they may think proper. In such cases, let the records of the different churches be preserved, and in this respect start anew from the time of such union. But what, says one, give up the name, "Regular Baptist!" Yes; just as soon as the Christian world are so united in the truth, that it shall not be needed as a distinguishing title. Then the name Christian will suffice, and I say let it then suffice.

It appears to me that a great mistake has been committed, and one that has greatly retarded the spread of the truth, in supposing that all Christians are to join one particular denomination, and, consequently, laboring to proselyte to the party instead of the truth. I must confess I would be much better pleased to see even our Pedo-Baptist brethren adopting and practicing the truth, than leaving their churches to join ours. Pride and contention, between different sects, would not be nourished half as much by such a course. But if they cannot profess and practice the truth at home, let them go where they can.

Much more might and ought to be written on this question; but here, for the present, I must leave it; hoping it will not be passed by without a thorough discussion; and, finally, may God grant that ere long action, prudent and united, may be taken on this subject.

REUBEN NEWTON.

The crop of 1844 was estimated at 95,607,000 bushels wheat, and 121,953,000 bushels corn. There was a material deficiency in the crop of wheat in the State of Ohio last year over the preceding year; but in almost every other State, except the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama, there was a considerable increase. In the corn crop there was a falling off of one-third in New York and South Carolina, one-fourth in Maryland, one-third in Virginia, one-third in North Carolina, one-fourth in Alabama, and a considerable increase in all the other States except Mississippi.

Iron Trade.—A valuable report in pamphlet form on the Iron Trade of the State, has been made by a committee consisting of Messrs. Thomas Chambers, Dr. George N. Eckert, and Samuel J. Reeves, who were selected for said purpose by the Coal and Iron Association of Pennsylvania. The pamphlet consists of upwards of 30 pages, and embraces a list of all the Furnaces, Forges and Rolling Mills in the State, together with their annual product. The report gives the following result in the aggregate:

The number of Furnaces erected in the State up to 1842, was 213, of which 7 were Anthracite, capable of producing 189,556 tons of pig metal, viz:

	Furnaces.	Productions.
Number up to 1842,	213	189,856 tons.
No. of charcoal built since,	67	75,000
No. of Anthracite, do	36	103,000
	316	368,856

Making an increase of 103 new Furnaces, capable of producing 178,200 tons of Pig Metal, to which must be added the increased capacity of the old Furnaces during the same period, equal to 37,971 tons, making the increased production of Pig Metal 216,171 tons, or more than one hundred per cent. since the passage of the Tariff of 1842.

The capital invested in works up to 1842, which is calculated at $47 per ton for charcoal, and $25 per ton for anthracite Furnaces, was estimated to be $8,560,418

Invested since 1842, 6,109,400

Aggregate capital, $14,669,818

Schuylkill Navigation.—We learn from the U. S. Gazette of Monday June 29th, that the Schuylkill Navigation Company are progressing rapidly with the enlargement of their works. About one-third of the line, extending from Philadelphia to Royer's Ford, five miles above Phœnixville, is open to the trade. The next division, reaching from Royer's Ford to Reading, and connecting with the Union Canal, will come into use in about two weeks. The residue of the line is progressing with great vigor, and will be completed in time to have a salutary effect on the price of coal.—Argus.

From Washington—Resignation of Jas. Buchanan.—The nomination of the Hon. James Buchanan as one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, was made to the Senate by the President on the 1st inst. He has consequently taken leave of the State Department.

Money.—Mr. Dement, Receiver of Public Moneys, at Dixon, Ill., arrived in St. Louis on the 11th, with $20,000 in specie, which was deposited in the Bank of Missouri.

The Oregon Treaty.—The following is understood to be the outline of the Treaty that has been approved by the Senate, and sent to England for ratification, settling the Oregon boundary:

ARTICLE 1. Fixes the territorial boundary between the United States and Great Britain, west of the Rocky mountains, on the line of forty-nine degrees, till it reaches Queen Charlotte's Sound, and thence through the Straits of Fuca to the ocean, which gives to Great Britain Vancouver's Island.

ART. 2. Declares the navigation of the Columbia river, up to where it strikes the line of forty-nine degrees, to be free to the Hudson's Bay Company, during the continuance of its charter.

ART 3. The rivers, ports and harbors, north of the 49th degree, to be free to the commerce of both nations.

ART. 4. Indemnity for the forts and trading stations of the Hudson's Bay Company, south of 49 degrees, and of the Americans north of the same, if any there be.

ART. 5. Indemnity for private property of citizens or subjects who may be south or north of 49 degrees, if they wish to retire within their own territory.

The debate that preceded its ratification by the Senate, is said to have been exceedingly spirited and interesting.—The following is believed to be a correct record of the vote--Mr. Jarnagin, of Tennessee, being absent:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashley, Bagby, Benton, Berrien, Barrow, Calhoun, Chalmers, T. Clayton, J. M. Clayton, Colquit, Corwin, Crittenden, Davis, Dayton, Dix, Evans, Greene, Haywood, Huntington, Houston, Johnson of Md., Johnson of La., Lewis, McDuffie, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Niles, Pearce, Pennybacker, Phelps, Rusk, Sevier, Simmons, Speight, Turney, Upham, Webster, Woodbridge, Yulee—41.

California.—The climate of this country contains every grade. In Monterey the year round the thermometer is from 42 to 86 degrees—but little difference between June or January. From October to March is the rainy season. With rare exceptions, from April to October, it never rains in California; the young vineyards have to be irrigated. When five or six years old, they do not need the trouble. The wheat fields are never irrigated, and often produce 60 fold; one hundred and ten fold has been taken from a field, yet the seed is planted in a slovenly manner, and the harvest badly gotten in. Apples, pears, and peaches require hardly any care; and what little they receive, is but from a few. There are many orange trees here in good condition. Perhaps any seed of fruits known in this latitude, can be brought forth with less labor than elsewhere, yet wheat is from $1 to $2 per English bushel, corn $1, beans $2, barley $1, peas $2, potatoes $3 per 100 lbs., onions $6 ditto. Oak wood, cut from vacant land, the carting being only a mile, $8 per cord. The country around Monterey is full of timber; trees without number, 10 feet in diameter, 250 feet long. The writer has often, when on horseback, been unable to see his companion riding 20 feet from him, a large tree lying between them.—There are actually some 16 feet through and 330 feet long; yet, with this abundance of timber, window sashes, doors, wheelbarrows and cart wheels, even axe-handles and boards are brought from New England. While a raw bullock's hide is worth but $2, a half tanned one will bring $8. When at some years, in part of the country, wheat may be worth but a trifle, a hundred leagues distant, United States flour may be selling at $11 per barrel.—Two sufficient reasons are always before us, for this unnatural state of things in a beautiful country; first, the little desire the inhabitants as a class have for labor; second, the continual revolutions taking place through the whole country.

Awful Fire at St. Johns, Newfoundland.—Fifty Lives Lost—The Whole Town laid in Ashes—We learn from Captain Scarrow, of the brig Blucher, arrived at Quebec, June 24th, from Harbor Grace, N. F., that just before he left that place, a mail arrived from St. Johns, bringing the dreadful account that the whole of the city of St. Johns, Newfoundland, except two stores, had been burned down on the 9th inst., and that fifty soldiers were killed in blowing up a house to arrest the fire.—Eighteen vessels were also burnt in the harbor.

The loss must be severely felt by its inhabitants, it being the business part of the town, and being at a season of the year when the merchants are engaged principally in the manufacture of their oil, a quantity of which must have been in the Vats. The loss will also fall heavily on the fishermen, as they will find great difficulty in procuring provisions to prosecute the cod-fishery the present season.

St. Johns, N. F., contains a population of about 20,000 inhabitants. The town was burnt twice before—once in 1824, when most of the inhabitants took refuge on board the vessels in the harbor for safety,—and again in 1840. It seems to be an ill-fated town. The buildings were principally of wood.—N. Y. Sun Extra.

Emigration to New York.—Large numbers of emigrants from all parts of Europe are still flocking to our shores. At this port alone during the month of May, 19,321 were safely landed. This is an increase of 1,337 over April, which would make the number for April 18,084. The number for March was over 8,000. The whole number for the months of March, April and May, adds up—45,404!

Whole number of steerage passengers arrived at the Port of New York since first of June last,	17,933
Whole number since 1st of March last is SIXTY-THREE THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHT.	63,328

Improvement in the Electro Magnetic Machine.—Dr. S. B. MISCELLANEOUS.

The Divine Method of Raising Charitable Contributions.

"Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

Let us examine this DIVINE METHOD.

1. It is to contribute frequently and statedly. Upon the first day of the week. This is frequently, for it is once in seven days. Nor shall we think that God calls too frequently, if he calls once a week, to make some appropriate acknowledgment of his right, by giving a portion of what he gives us, to carry on his peculiar work in the world, and to save the perishing; to save them not from starvation, but from perdition.

Steadily also. Upon the first day of the week. What day could be more appropriate? The Redeemer's birth-day. As it is said, "This day have I begotten thee." Now on the same day, we lay by in store that which may honor the Saviour.

It must be good to begin the week with this labor of love. Let God have the first fruits of all our time; let the noble object of saving lost men, as co-workers with God, pre-occupy our thoughts and our plans, give tones to our spirits, and direction to our movements.

The sanctity and the blessedness of the Sabbath are thus spread over all our time and all the work of our hands. Thus frequently and statedly the Divine Method requires to lay by in store.

2. It is to contribute universally. "Every one of you." Whose duty is it? the duty of every christian. Due allegiance is expected of all, and due favor shown to all. It is ordained that every one shall lay by him in store. How suitable and how beautiful is this arrangement! Here the whole church of Christ, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the male and the female, appear before him on the first day of the week. Nor does any one appear empty. Every one lays by him in store an offering, as an acknowledgment of obligation and thanksgiving. This being done frequently and statedly, and on that day of consecration and blessing, it is suited to produce the most happy results. Here all hearts beat in unison before the face of the Lord. This act is done by every one in his own dwelling, under the eye of the Lord, who seeth not as man seeth, but looketh upon the heart. From a principle of obedience and love, every redeemed sinner gives an offering to the Lord. While this method cherishes the best feelings towards God our Saviour, and towards his people and cause, it does, at the same time, lie at the basis of all that is needful by way of contribution.

For a moment think of the power which the mighty Saviour can call into action on this principle. Suppose a church of two hundred and fifty members. Let every one be poor, and every one lay by only the widow's two mites, which makes a farthing. One cent a week from two hundred and fifty christians will amount, in a year, to at least one hundred and twenty-five dollars! Is not the Divine Method of great power? How vast the sum from a million of christians!—from a million of poor christians! Not less than five hundred thousand dollars.

But this is by no means the divine standard of contribution. It is only the frequency and universality that we have yet considered. And far be it from us to intimate that the rich are to contribute no more than the poor. Such is by no means the Divine Method.

3. It is to contribute in due proportion, "As God hath prospered him." It is supposed that every christian is engaged in business. It is needful, while in this world, that every one should have some honest and laudable mode of acquiring property, both to supply personal and domestic wants, and afford a surplus for the needy. Believers were generally poor in apostolic times, and obtained the means of their support by their daily labor. At the end of the week, their work being done, they could be ready to observe the Divine Providence in regard to them, and to know how they had been prospered in their business. And this was the rule of proportion for their contribution. They might lay by in store a certain per cent., five, ten, twenty, or any other proportion, just as they were able or as their love prompted them to do, either more or less. If, at any time, they had received more than common, then their proportion would be the same, while the amount would be greater. And so if they had received less. This would operate equally upon all the members; for the rich would give abundance from their abundant income, and the poor would give a little, just in the same proportion.

The Apostle does not say, however, how much each man should give, only that it should be proportionate to each one's property. Every one is able to exercise his own judgment. God wishes not that we should feel as tributaries, but as friends and children; that he is Lord of all, the Father of mercies, and the Saviour of the lost; that we should understand the work he is engaged in, and that we are allowed and expected to co-operate in it. And, that our views may be enlarged and our affections engaged, he allows us the unspeakable privilege of considering his kingdom as our kingdom, his work as our work, his glory as our glory, and the happiness and glory of all that is achieved and done as his joy, in which we are permitted to share. With such a work before us, and such results as our ultimate reward and portion, he calls us to take part in the work, with the assurance that every one shall receive a reward according to his own labor. With our eyes fixed on the future joy, he allows us to deny ourselves, to labor, to make sacrifices, and bear his cross, just in proportion to our faith and love; all proceeding spontaneously from our ardent affection for Him, and his cause, and the souls of men. In this blessed enterprise he lays out before us, not only the world, which is the field in which he works and employs us, but heaven and hell, with their eternal realities. Heaven, the dwelling of all that becomes holy and happy, on the one hand; and hell, with the wicked and the lost, on the other, God reveals to us as the final destination of every soul of man. It is not then a mere estimate of our doing a certain amount of labor, or giving a certain amount of contribution, or bearing a certain weight of sorrow and affliction, that is to regulate our action, or our suffering; but it is the worth of the soul, the bliss of heaven, the pains of hell, the example of God, angels, and good men, that are always before us. Such are the themes of thought, the expanding ennobling, and invigorating realities, which are to move us. And, with these in view, God allows us to judge and determine how great shall be the amount that we will consecrate to this noble, angelic, godlike enterprise. The purpose and the act are to be our own, in the sight of God, with the glory and joy that are set before us. "Such is the Divine Method."

The Petition

Of the Wives of Fifteen Thousand Drunkards in the State of New York.

To our Fellow Citizens of the State of New York:

We, the undersigned, suffering poverty, shame, degradation and misery not to be described, brought upon us by the license system, which has spread snares and traps into which our poor unfortunate husbands have fallen, and from which, while they continue in every town and village, we find it impossible to rescue them; do humbly beseech and entreat you, the electors of the State of New York, to look at our degradation and misery, and, as will be in your power in April next, to break up these dreadful establishments and suffer them no longer to continue in our midst. We plead for our poor, unhappy husbands. None but ourselves know their misery and degradation.—While in the licensed tavern, they seem strong and happy; but when they have returned to us, and the fumes of their liquor have passed away, and they see their poverty and shame, and want of employment, and the misery of their wives and children, they are of all men most miserable. We can bear their hard language and blows and neglect, but we cannot bear to see them stripped of all their nobleness and energy, and self-respect as men, and withering under the finger of scorn. We plead for our children. They were brought into the world with as bright prospects of happiness as the children around us, but they have grown up but to feel that they are the heirs of poverty, and want, and shame, an example which may soon place them too in a prison, an alms-house, or drunkard's grave. By withholding all license and removing from our midst these houses, where, by the little money we have, or a little labor, or the mortgage of our small habitations in which we live, rum may now be obtained at any hour of the day or night, you will at once send joy and gladness through thousands of hearts.—Our deluded husbands will thank you for the deed. Often and often have they assured us that were it not for the temptations in their path, they should be sober men, and that they wish they could see the day when not a drop of the accursed poison could be found on the earth. Will you not then listen to our cry? Will you not foster the hope of fifteen thousand suffering families.

A Word to Mothers.

Cultivate Truthfulness in Children.

Children are naturally truthful. Nature does not lie. Let nothing be done to alter this happy disposition. Cultivate in them the love of truth, candor and the confession of error. It is lamentable to think what fearful falsehoods are uttered to deter children to keep them quiet, or to make them obedient. Threats of being taken by old men, and black men, and other like terrors, are resorted to by ignorant and foolish servants to frighten them, and make them lie still in bed. It is certain that death, fits, idiocy or insanity, have been the consequences of such inhumanity. But, setting aside the probable chance of such calamities, there are other certain results; if the child discover the falsheods practised upon him, he becomes boldly indifferent to the threats, is more disobedient and wilful than ever, disbelieves all that is said to him, and finding no respect for truth in others, has no regard for it himself.

Be Firm.

Firmness is adhering to promises, or any particular line of discipline in relation to children, is of first importance. If the mother allow her child to transgress her orders and set her at defiance, she is clearly unfit for the performance of her duties. Prevent disobedience with temper and decision.

Check bad Propensities.

Some children early evince a love of cruelty; they torture insects; they destroy wantonly, and pull in pieces, break, crush, and tear everything that comes in their way. To cultivate the opposite feeling is the mother's part; she must prevent every circumstance that can encourage the propensity, manifesting dislike at its exhibition. No better check can be found than occupation, giving a child something to do that will employ its energies harmlessly. She ought to show it how animals should be treated, first making use of a toy, teaching the child to feed, and caress, and protect the representation of the dog or horse, and taking it away on the first exhibition of unkindness. No child should be allowed to witness the death of trapped mice, rats, the drowning of puppies and kittens, &c.; they cannot be made sensible of the reasons for their destruction; they do not know the nature of suffering and death, but only derive amusement from the spectacle, and learn to look upon pain as a matter for sport and pastime.

Encourage a spirit of forgiveness in your Child.

Children not unfrequently acquire habits of violence from their mother, who in this, as in many other points, errs from ignorance. Should the child accidentally knock his head against the table, the fond and foolish parent will tell him "to beat the table." This inculcates the passion of revenge; and afterwards through life, the child, become a man, furiously resents all real or imaginary injuries. A child should on no account be told to box or beat anybody or anything. Neither should he be taught to scold or abuse what has hurt him. On the contrary, he should be taught to forgive injuries, to endure sufferings with fortitude, and to entertain kindly feeling towards all.

Hints for Christians.

The way to secure the future, is to improve the present.

Opportunities to do good create obligation to do it; he that has the means, must answer for the end.

Knowledge is power; seize every opportunity, therefore, to discipline the mind and to acquire as much knowledge as possible.

In all doubtful cases, take the safe side, remember he who parleys with temptation is lost.

Prefer the duty you owe to the danger you fear

Pray often and you will pray oftener.

God requires the services of the whole being. Strive therefore, for a pure heart, a clear mind and a sound body.

Let no impenitent husband, wife, parent, child or friend, go down to death unwarned.

Cultivate an enlarged benevolence,—remembering that you live in the nineteenth century! Refuse no contribution to the cause of God until you have thought of the judgment.

Sow such seed while you live, as you would be glad to eat the fruit of when you die.

Do what you can to induce others to do what they ought.

Watch lest you go towards heaven by your resolutions, and towards hell by your conduct.

In dependance on the Almighty and sovereign grace of Jesus Christ, labor for a constant revival of religion, that the Holy Spirit may dwell in your heart, and that he may pervade the entire community around you.

Rest not till you have evidence of increasing sanctification. Hear, think, read, speak, labor and live to be holy and useful.

A Full Fountain;

Or, How to prepare to Teach.

A young clergyman once visited old Dr. Bellamy, with the inquiry, "What shall I do for matter to supply my sermons?" The Doctor quaintly replied, "Fill up the cask, Fill up the cask, Fill up the cask, and then if you tap it anywhere, you will get a good stream. But if you put in but little, it will dribble, dribble, dribble, and you must tap, tap, tap, and then you will get but little after all."

Dignified Conduct of a Young Lady.

Eliza Embert, a Parisian lady, resolutely discarded a gentleman to whom she was to have been married, because he ridiculed religion. Having given him a gentle reproof, he replied, "that a man would not be so old-fashioned as to regard God and religion." Eliza startled—but on recovering herself, said, "from this moment, when I discover that you do not respect religion, I cease to be yours. He who does not love and honor God, can never love his wife constantly and sincerely.

A good man has well remarked, that jesting upon serious subjects is ever the mark of a shallow and superficial mind, poor in ideas, and still poorer in judgment

A hard Chapter on Lying.

Humiliating as the fact may be, it is nevertheless a fact that lying is a prominent sin among men. Liars are found in every station of life. The old tell their last falsehood before they lie down in the grave; the middle aged add lie to lie; the young practice as if bound apprentices.—The husband, the wife, the parent, the child, the master, the servant, the professor, the non-professor, the preacher, the hearer—there are liars among them all.—They tell lies for gain, for amusement, from malice, from cowardice, from vanity, from habit, and sometimes, it would seem, because they have nothing more interesting to do.

Reader, do you tell lies? Do not be offended; do not dodge the question; but pause and reflect. How did you happen to say so and so about such a man? Perhaps you feel that you are free from that sin. Then you are in a blessed situation. But if you are guilty, repent; for all liars have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

I have seen an anecdote some where of a certain 'squire or captain, who was a liar so intolerable, that the pastor was induced to preach on lying for the 'squires special benefit. "Well squire," said a hearer when they had left the house, "how did you like the sermon." "Extremely well," replied the 'squire. "I could'nt keep my eyes off old Mrs. ———; she must have felt it, for it suited her exactly." If all liars are as blind as the 'squire, how carefully ought we to examine ourselves.

But what shall we say of the lies which the sects tell upon each other? It is a very solemn subject. Whosoever maketh and loveth a lie, shall be excluded from the kingdom of God.—Rev. 22: 15.—Christain Index.

DISCIPLE.

Protection from Lightning.

Within the last few years, this subject has acquired renewed interest, in consequence of the immense loss of life and property, which has been sustained throughout our country, by this terrific agency. It has, therefore, become a practical question of vast importance, in which we all have a deep concern as to the causes of this destruction, and the best means of counteracting an element so universally diffused throughout space, and which, left to itself, proves so highly destructive. To a superficial observer, it must be very manifest that there exists a culpable ignorance on the part of the community, in reference to this whole subject, as well as a general neglect in the employment of those means which both experience and philosophy have proved adequate for the perfect protection of property, and consequently of human life. From recent investigations, it has been satisfactorily ascertained that the simple rod of Franklin is all sufficient, if properly made and applied, to secure this requisite protection, and that in all cases, where buildings have been destroyed or much injured, it has been owing either to a neglect of its use, or to some violation of established principles in its construction or application.

No building can be considered secure without a good conductor, and nine-tenths of those now having them, are not much better off, owing to the fact of their faulty construction, their inadequate height and termination, and the very negligent manner of their application. As the conducting power of the rod is greatly influenced by extraneous circumstances, it should be made, not only with great care, but in strict accordance with those principles which experience has proved necessary, in order to attain the highest possible degree of this essential requisite.

The Conductor should be made either of copper or iron—the first is by far the best; as it is not liable to rust, and possesses eight times the conducting power of the latter; but its very high price operates to exclude it from general use, and causes iron to be preferred, as its moderate cost, brings it within the means of every citizen and farmer throughout the city and country.

The Conductor should be a rounded form—three quarters to one inch in diameter—the larger the better security, as the conducting power is in proportion to the solid mass; it should be continuous, the bars of which it is composed being well screwed into each other, or nicely adapted, by means of a mortice and tenon jointed, pinned firmly together, by which the surface are brought into the most intimate contact.

The Conductor should be terminated at its superior or upper end by a stem of copper, capped either with one or more points made of gold, platina or silver; but of these, the first is the best, as its conducting power is much greater than either of the other metals, and if made solid, or well galvanized, is less liable to rust, a common result in a climate as moist and variable as that of ours. In addition to this, the rod should be well painted with several coats of black paint, which not only protects it from the moisture, but also to increase its conducting power.

As to the application. The efficiency of a conductor is greatly increased by its height above the building, and in its particular the greatest possible ignorance prevails, not only in the community at large, but in those who profess to understand this subject, and to furnish the necessary means of protection to others.

It is a common occurrence all over the land, to see large barns and public buildings of great dimensions, say of thirty, forty-five or sixty feet, in extent, protected with a small rod elevated two or three feet above the chimney or ridge of the roof, an experiment not only dangerous in itself considered, but a useless expense, without securing, in any way, the object for which it was applied.

The established rule is, that a conductor will protect a space every way only twice the extent of its height above the building, and this rule should never be violated in the adaption of the conductor, for if it is placed only three feet above the ridge of the roof of a house or barn say thirty feet in length, it follows of course, that only six feet in every direction from its point receives protection, whilst the rest of the building is left exposed to almost certain destruction, if struck by lightning under these circumstances, and in this way houses having a rod are frequently destroyed, and the disrepute into which the ordinary means of protection have fallen in many parts of our land.

One conductor is sufficient for almost any sized building, provided its elevation is equally great, but when this is not desirable, two or more placed in different situations should be employed—particularly if there be several high points or chimneys.

It should be secured to the building by means of iron or wooden stays, embracing necks of glass bottles, rings of horn, or dried wood, through which the rod should be passed—thereby removing all danger of the lateral discharge, which, however is not great if the rod be perfect, due attention be paid to facilitate the discharge at its termination into the earth's surface.

The termination of the rod should be into the earth permanently moist, which is found ordinarily at five or eight feet in sandy or gravelly soil. This is of vast importance, and, if overlooked, will endanger the building and its inmates, however perfect the conductor may be in its construction and application; much, almost everything depends on this principle being fairly carried out, that the rod must be inserted into earth permanently moist.

In order to guard the rod from rust, when passed into the ground, it will be necessary to paint it a number of times with good black paint, and the hole, into which it is inserted, should be partially filled up with fine charcoal, such as is found in the pen of every house-keeper; as this not only retains moisture for a long time when wet, but likewise counteracts that tendency to rust, which proves so destructive to iron, with a few years' exposure in our climate.

With due attention to these directions, and the principles laid down more fully by Professor Olmstead of New Haven, the community may rest satisfied that there is almost perfect security in the lightning-rod of Franklin, and no reason whatever, in itself considered, why public confidence should be withdrawn in any degree from this mode of protection which has been confirmed both by experience and philosophy.—North American.

Milk Souring in Thunder Storms.—We have heard great complaints from dairy women, about their milk getting sour during a thunder storm, even tho' perfectly sweet a short time previous. The following plans will prevent this in a great degree. All the pans containing the milk ought to be placed upon non-conductors of electricity, such as blocks of baked wood, pieces of glass, or wood that has been well painted or varnished. These are articles most easily provided. Beeswax, feathers and wollen cloth are also non-conductors, but inconvenient to be used. All these articles will insolute the pans and prevent the electric fluid from entering, which is the cause of acidity or is in fact the principle of acidity itself.

Steam Power.—A pint of water may be evaporated by two ounces of coal. In its evaporation it swells into 216 gallons of steam, with a mechanical force sufficient to raise a weight of 37 tons a foot high. This shows conclusively the astonishing power of steam.

Mexican Depredations.

The following schedule will show the extent of depredation committed by Mexico upon the property of American citizens, and for the settlement of which that Republic agreed to pay partial indemnity, but has violated her faith:—

The amount finally adjudicated under the convention of the 11th April, 1839, is	$2,026,139 86
The claims referred to the umpire upon a disagreement between the American and Mexican commissioners, but which were not decided by him	928,627 88
Amount of claims submitted to the board too late to be considered, according to the estimate of the claimants themselves	3,336,837 04
Amount of 17 claims filed in the Department of State since the adjournment of the board, according to the estimates of the claimants themselves,	1,141,989 55
Total,	$7,430,594 34

Together with eleven other claims, filed since that period, on which the claimants have placed no estimate.

Of this seven and a half millions, which an impartial estimate might perhaps reduce to five, nothing has ever been paid, except out of twenty quarter-yearly instalments, into which the first of the above items ($20,026 68) was divided, together with some interest.

POETRY.

CHRIST STILLING THE TEMPEST.

BY DR. JOHN C. M'CABE.

"And when he was entered into a ship his disciples followed him; and behold there was a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. And his disciples came to him and awoke him, saying, Lord save us, we perish! And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O! ye of little faith. Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm." Matt. viii. 23—26.

The sea is hush'd into a calm repose,
And scarce a zephyr o'er its bosom blows;
The sails hang drooping on the sun-brown'd mast,
Waiting the coming of some favoring blast.
Upon a pillow—hard as is his lot,
Reclines a sleeper; yet he murmurs not
Against his couch; but calmly seems to sleep,
To the low music of the lulling deep.

Anon dark clouds the beauteous skies o'er cast,
The sea moans wildly to the furious blast,
Hoarse thunders roll along the low'ring sky,
And lightnings glare upon the upturn'd eye.
The useless cordage, and the tattered sails,
All wildly flutter to contending gales;
The sea, indignant, proudly rears its crest,
And spurns the fluttering wave-bird from its breast.

"We sink! we sink!" is now the startling shriek,
While at each shock the strained timbers creak.
Calm is the slumberer, though the tempest raves,
And each dark cloud its fiery banner waves;
And peals the deep-toned ordnance of the skies,
While Alp-like billows to the heaven's rise,
"Oh God! and shall we sink? awake, awake!
Save, Rabbi, save us for thine own God's sake!"

He rises, and there's hope in that mild gaze;
He looks upon the lightning as it plays,
And on the tortured waters; and his ear
Lists to the thunders; and one single tear
Falls on his cheek; as man he deeply feels,
Then to the ocean turns, "Be still!" it reels
Back to its caverns; "Peace!" the thunders cease,
Charmed by the talismanic sound of "peace,"
"Be still!" and lo! the trembling lightnings furl;
Their serpent banners from their tortuous curl.

* * * * * * *

The winds are sleeping on the calm blue sea,
That little barque rides safe o'er Gallilee;
A God hath spoken to the storm, "be still,"
And sea and tempests, all obey his will,
Oh may he bid each bosom's tempest cease,
And whisper gently to the swol'n heart,—
"PEACE."

FIRST THREE MONTHS!

THE CHURCH ADVOCATE has now been issued for three full months. This number being the first of the fourth month, is, accordingly, sent out to those, and to those only, who have complied with our terms.

It has been distinctly and repeatedly stated, that those who would violate their contract, and fail to pay for their papers, during the first three months, should have them stopped, and be charged SIXTY-TWO AND A-HALF CENTS, as a penalty for their delinquency.

We deeply regret that we have it to say, that more than one-half of the subscribers for the ADVOCATE, have forfeited their subscriptions by non-payment, notwithstanding they were repeatedly notified of the consequences.

We hope, therefore, that each and every one of these delinquent subscribers, will immediately remit to us, or pay over to our agents, the aforesaid sum of sixty-two and a-half cents. When this is done, we shall take a pleasure in re-entering their names on our subscription list, as bona-fide subscribers.

Should any money be in the hands of our agents, they are requested to remit it immediately, in order that the innocent may not suffer with the guilty. We are disposed to do justly, and to treat every man right according to contract. We wish to have the names, therefore, of all our covenant-keeping subscribers, who are entitled to their papers, so that they may be duly credited, and have the same forwarded. The rest must content themselves to abide the penalty which their own delinquency has incurred.

Punctuality is the life of business. Contracts impose obligations. A violation of contract is an immorality, except in case of fraud or inability. Every church member that is guilty of this sin, ought to be dealt with accordingly. Were this strictly attended to by the church authorities, as in other cases of immorality, the church, as well as business men in general, would be saved from many difficulties, hard feelings and vexatious disappointments.

We do hope that the members of the "Church of God" will wash their hands of this odious iniquity, and in every instance be careful to keep their word and fulfil their contracts, except it be for reasons above stated; which are the only reasons, in our judgment, that can furnish justifiable grounds for non-compliance.

Our Agents.

OUR agents, at least many of them, will please accept our greatful acknowledgments for the interest they have taken in collecting and remitting dues. As a compensation for their labor of love, we should be pleased to offer them their papers gratis, if we once knew that we could afford it; but as it is yet uncertain, and will depend entirely on the manner in which the subscribers will fill their contracts, and pay up their subscriptions, we have hitherto made it a rule to charge them one dollar. By this rule we shall be governed for the present.

Those brethren who over-paid for the Publisher, must look to the committee, appointed to settle up that concern, for redress; we, as an individual, having nothing to do with the settlement of the Publisher accounts, can, of course, allow no offsets in the settlement of accounts for the ADVOCATE.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

WE call the special attention of the churches, and especially the attention of the teaching and ruling Elders, to the article on that subject, found in the contributors' department of the last paper. We do hope the churches will wake up to this subject after a Godly sort. Some churches have moved in this matter—let the rest follow—and let all move together on a subject so vitally important to the dissemination of the Gospel of God.

We hope that those churches that have moved in this good cause, according to the plan suggested by the General Eldership of the "Church of God," will report their progress for the encouragement of others to follow their footsteps. Who will take the lead! and who will follow after! Shall we have some good deeds and efforts to record in our next paper, in this good, noble and blessed cause!

The Central Railroad.

THERE are only about eighteen thousand shares of this road taken, since the opening of the books, by the company. This is only equivalent to nine hundred thousand dollars. This looks like a NO-GO!

COLPORTAGE AND COLPORTEURS.

WHAT is colportage?

It is a system of intenerancy for the purpose of instructing the people by the two-fold means of preaching the Gospel, and vending religious books, tracts, &c.

What are colporteurs?

They are men who go about doing good by preaching the Word and selling books, &c.

When was this system commenced?

As a regular system, it was commenced at Geneva, in Switzerland, about ten years ago; but as an incidental business, it has been carried on for years by different intenerant preachers.

Is the system a good one and deserving of patronage?

It doubtless is a good system, and eminetly calculated to accomplish an immense amount of good. Besides the good that may be done, by the preaching of the Word, that of circulating good books may be like "casting bread upon the waters, that shall be found after many days." Hence, then, let colportage and colporteurs be favorable viewed and liberally encouraged, by all who delight in the spread of truth and righteousness.

More new Subscribers.

OUR esteemed brethren, A. MEGREW, L. SLINGLUFF. G. ROSS, J. A. PLOWMAN, J. RIFE, and others, will please accept our hearty thanks for new subscribers they have sent us, and the zeal they have otherwise manifested in furthering the interests of the ADVOCATE.

A Request.

WE beg leave to request those of sur patrons, who do not file and preserve the ADVOCATE, to send us the third number, provided they have it clean and unmutilated. This number having run out, we make this request, in order to be able to supply new subscribers who may want all the back numbers.

The Tariff Bill.

THIS important bill passed final reading in the Senate, on Tuesday last, by the casting vote of Vice President GEO. M. DALLAS. On the passage to a third reading, the vote was a tie, when Vice President DALLAS gave the casting vote, and so the bill passed by a majority of one vote.

Our Army in Mexico.

THE army of the United States, now in Mexico, is about eleven thousand strong.—The expenses of carrying on this war will be immense. It is said now to cost nearly one-half million dollars per day.

Death of the Pope.

The Pope of Rome (Gregory XVI.) died of hydrocele, combined with erysipelas, on Monday the 1st of June, at a quarter past nine o'clock, A. M., in the 81st year of his age.

Mauri Capellari (for that was his name) was born at Belluno in 1765; and on the 2d of February, 1831, he was crowned Pope under the name of Gregory XVI.

The vacancy on the Pontifical throne has been filled up by the election of John Maria Mastai Ferretti, who was accordingly proclaimed the 258th successor of St. Peter, under the name of Pius IX. His election was achieved without much difficulty or delay, the conclave being in session only from the 14th to the 16th of June last.

The ceremony of coronation took place on the 21st of June. He is one of the youngest cardinals ever elected to the Popedom. He was born at Sinigaglia, in the Roman States, on the 13th of May, 1792, and accordingly he is now in the 55th year of his age.

The Latest Foreign News.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on Friday afternoon the 17th ult., and the Great Britain arrived off Sandy Hook on Monday the 20th, bringing deeply interesting and important news.

Many important events have occurred in Europe, but none perhaps more so than the passage of the Corn Bill, the resignation of the Peel Ministry, and the settlement of the Oregon question.

The Corn Bill passed the House of Lords on the 25th of June without a division.

On the same day, the Irish Coercion Bill was lost in the House of Commons, by a majority of 73.

Sir Robert Peel immediately left London for the Isle of Wight, and tendered his resignation, and that of his colleagues, to Her Majesty.

On the 30th of June, Lord John Russell received Her Majesty's command to form a new administration.

The settlement of the Oregon question was confirmed by both Houses of Parliament on the 29th.

Great joy has been manifested in England at the settlement of the Oregon question.

Great riots have occurred in Ireland.

The grain market remains without change.

Camp-Meetings.

It will be seen from the camp-meeting notices, on the last page of the Advocate, that there will be a goodly number of camp-meetings throughout the bounds of the several Elderships. This is as it should be. But we hope, also, that those who love the cause of God, and can possibly make it suit, will not fail to turn out with their tents, and support the cause, as in former years, and as true men and Christians. Let none hang back.

One thing more. Let there be no controversies at any of the encampments, either among ministers or people. To prevent it, consider two things, viz:

First: That it is wrong and highly injurious for Christians to contend or dispute with each other. And, hence, it is forbidden. See, Phil. 2: 14. 2 Tim. 2: 14, 24. Tit. 3: 9. 1 Cor. 11: 16.

Again: It is satan's policy to excite and instigate controversies among Christians, and thereby hinder good from being done. Beware of his devices!

Adjournment of Congress.

Both Houses of Congress have agreed to adjourn on the 16th of this month.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

This is a great and important subject. It has claimed the attention of the pure, the wise and the good, more or less, in all ages of Messiah's reign. But of late years its advocates have greatly multiplied. Many noble and master-spirits now plead for and support the cause of Christian union, who formerly cared for none of these things. The world seems to be moved, and men of all nations appear to be in search of light on this subject. The "World's Convention," if God be pleased, may kindle a fire that may shortly illuminate all christendom on this important subject. May God's blessing attend the convention!

But to the point: "Mine opinion" we have promised to give. In doing this we shall speak freely, according to the light and knowledge we have in the premises. And in order to make our remarks clear, comprehensive and satisfactory, we shall show,—

I. What Christian union is not.

II. What it is.

III. What are the best means to promote it; and,

IV. The motives that should induce us to labor for its accomplishment.

I. We shall show what Christian union is not. And,—

1. It is not a mere mutually, friendly intercourse and fellowship, between the various sects and parties, as they exist in christendom. This friendly intercourse between the different sects, is all the union that many people desire, or hope for in this word. To hope for any thing beyond that, they think, is wild and visionary; yea, and not even desirable. But we say there may be a mutual friendly feeling, and a free extension of the hand of fellowship between the existing sects, or the so-called denominational churches, and yet true Christian union be a perfect anomaly.

2. It is no sectarian Christian alliance. The various sects and denominations may form an alliance for purposes of co-operation, and for laudable and holy purposes of co-operation, and yet Christian union remain a non-sequitur.

3. It is no combination of the different sects, as such, into one. The different sects, as they now exist, combining or uniting together in one body, would constitute no Christian union, for this obvious reason: that by far the greatest number of the members of these sects, are sinners, and not Christians.

If, then, neither sectarian fellowship, nor sectarian alliance, nor sectarian combination constitutes true, scriptural Christian union, what is it that does? This is the second thing proposed to be shown.

II. What is Christian union? It is the association of all true Christians, according to the Gospel plan. True Christians constitute the first essential element in this union. Without Christians,* no Christian union can exist.

* By Christians, we mean those who have faith in Christ—those who have the spirit of Christ—and those who follow Christ.

But there may be Christians, and yet disunion instead of union, prevail among them. It is so now the world over. There are more or less Christians among the different sects and denominations, but they are not "of one heart and one soul," as were the first Christians. They are not as Christ prayed, that they might be "perfectly one, even as the Father and the Son are one."

Now this may be owing, mainly, to two causes, viz:

1st. To a want of knowledge of the true Bible plan. God has but one plan, and that plan he has plainly revealed in the New Testament. And yet plain as it is, many otherwise intelligent Christians are ignorant of it. This evil, then, must be remedied. The people must be taught the right ways of the Lord. The preachers "must show the house to the house," and teach them how "to measure the pattern," and how to "build the house that was built these many years ago, which a great King built and set up." But it is owing,—

2d. To a want of disposition to carry out the true plan of God. We once heard a minister say that the Lord had revealed to him, in answer to prayer, in rather a special or supernatural manner, the evils of sectarianism, and the true plan of constituting churches; and yet this very minister loved sectarian darkness rather than Gospel light; and, accordingly, went to the building up of a sect instead of "the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth. We have good reason to believe it is even so with many more. They have a knowledge of God's will in this matter, but they have no disposition to do it.

The Bible plan of Christian union includes four things, viz: 1. Union of affection; 2. Union of sentiment; 3. Union of design; and, 4. Union of action.

1st. Union of feeling and affection. Hence, we read: "Love one another with a pure heart fervently:" 1 Pet. 1: 22. Above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves: 1 Pet. 4: 8.

2d. Union of sentiment: "Be ye perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment; that ye speak the same thing:" 1 Cor. 1: 10. Stand fast in one spirit with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel:" Phil. 1: 27. "Be of one accord, of one mind:" chap. 2: 2. "Be of the same mind in the Lord:" chap: 4: 2. "Be perfect; be of one mind:" 2 Cor. 13: 11. "Be all of one mind:" 1 Pet. 3: 8.

3d. Union of design. "Mind the same thing:" Phil. 3: 16. "Be ye like-minded; be of one accord, of one mind:" chap. 2: 2.

4th. Union of action. "I mean not that others be eased, and you burdened:" 2 Cor. 8: 13. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ:" Gal. 6: 2. "Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief to the brethren which dwelt in Judea:" Acts 11: 29.

All this, then, is included in Bible Christian union. And this is not all. The Bible plan of Christian union requires, moreover, that this love and union be,—

First: Sincere. "Let love be without dissimulation:" Rom. 12: 9.

Secondly: Universal. "Love the brotherhood:" 1 Pet. 2: 17.

Thirdly: Uniform. "Be steadfast—always abounding in love one toward another:" 1 Thes. 3: 12.

Fourthly: Perpetual. "Keep yourselves in the love of God:' Jude 21. "He that loveth God will love his brother also:" 1 John, 4: 21. "Love one another as I have loved you:" "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another:" John 13: 34, 35. But we hasten to show,—

III. The best means of promoting Christian union. Among these we reckon the following, viz:

1st. The exclusive use of scriptural names.

2d. The general adoption of a perfect and infallible rule of faith and practice.

3d. The early and frequent inculcation of the doctrine through the pulpit and the press.

4th. Union meetings for social and public worship.

5th. Co-operations in benevolent causes.

6th. Public conventions and friendly intercourse in the common transactions of life.

7th. Earnest prayer to God for the spirit of love and union.

PULPIT DISPOSITIONS--No. 6.

Thema---CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

TEXT—"And he commanded them to be baptized." Acts 10: 48.

We shall contemplate,—

I. The state of the persons who were commanded to be baptized.

II. The import of baptism, or the action they were commanded to observe.

III. The reasons why the Apostle commanded them to be baptized.

I. The state of the individuals addressed.

1. They were not in a state of infancy; nor,

2. In a state of nature; but,

3. In a state of grace. Proof,—

1. Because they believed: chap. 11: 17.

2. Because they received the H. G.: ver. 47.

3. Because they spoke with other tongues and magnified God: ver. 46.

II. The import or meaning of baptism.

1. It does not mean three or four different actions.

2. It does not mean to rantize or sprinkle.

3. It does not mean to pour. It is never used to express the action to sprinkle or to pour.

4. It does not mean to wash, except where immersion is included—a washing in water.

5. It means to immerse or dip. Proof,—

1. The practice of the Greek church.

2. The best authority of the literati.

3. The use of the term by sacred and profane authors.

III. The reasons why Peter commanded these Ceserean converts thus to be baptized.

1. Because thus Christ had been baptized: Mark 1: 9, 10.

2. Because thus Christ had commanded them to baptize: Matt. 28: 19.

3. Because baptism is the appointed token of salvation: Gal. 3: 27. 1 Pet. 3: 21.

4. Because it is a symbol of Christ's death and resurrection: Rom. 6: 3, 4.

5. Because it is a public pledge of obedience: Rom. 6: 4.

6. Because it is the answer of a good conscience towards God: 1 Pet. 3: 21.

Interrogatories.

1. Is it right to baptize members of other churches? Yes; if they are believers.

2. Is it right, under all circumstances, to refuse to baptize infants? Yes.

3. Is it right to baptize by immersion only? Certainly; nothing else is baptism.

4. Is it right to baptize immediately on the profession of faith? Yes, undoubtedly it is. For thus the Apostles and first ministers always done. See Acts 2: 41. Chap. 8: 12. Ver. 37, 38. Chap. 10: 44—48. Chap. 16: 14, 15. Ver. 33. Chap. 18: 8. Chap. 22: 16.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The Church Advocate.

The Church Advocate is welcomely viewed by all its subscribers in this vicinity. Its extremely low price, one dollar and twenty-five cents per year, will enable every member of the church to take it. In some neighborhoods a goodly number having no connection with the church, both professors and non-professors of religion, have subscribed for it. This augurs well, and shows where we must seek to get subscribers—not in the church only, but out of it—and even among those who profess no religion. The intelligence in the religious world which it brings amply repays its perusers. It should have an extensive circulation, and will no doubt, provided all exert themselves to this end.—Brethren and sisters, you ought all to take an interest in the Advocate, by subscribing yourselves, and trying to get others to do so too.—There are quite a number of sisters in the several churches that could take it, and we believe they will, provided some one will ask them. There are also a large number of young brethren that ought to take it. We think if they were asked they would not object. Still, even if no one asks them, and they feel desirous of subscribing, they can make their wishes known to brother Winebrenner by letter, post-paid.

The Church Advocate is a publication in which all should feel and take an interest.—Its circulation, with proper exertions, might be swelled to three thousand copies, which would, at the year's end, yield a handsome sum for missionary purposes. We still think if the brethren, especially the preaching brethren, were active in the matter, this number of subscribers might be exceeded.

Finally, we would like to see the ministers of the church writing for the Advocate.—How many will enlist to furnish regularly an essay for each number? The zealous, the industrious and interested, we fondly hope will do so.

RUFUS.

July 14, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

It will be universally conceded that men, laboring in the ministry, should be supported by the churches, and that there is sometimes sufficient cause for ministers to complain; yet, in many instances, the grounds of complaint are only visionary. Avarice may usually be found lurking at the bottom of these murmurers about money. It is truly painful to hear hints about a slim support, when we know to the contrary. "These things ought not so to be." The great Franklin taught "economy is wealth;" and we infer therefrom that extravagance is indigenee. But since it is not our province to write a dissertation on practical economy, we will only recommend a retrenchment of the purchase of costly and unnecessary things, not as a dernier, resort to prevent want only, but as the first item in the household affairs of all. An individual that is thrifty will live well, where an extravagant one would be pennyless! Costly apparel is, in every instance, to be severely reprehended; and expensive viands need also a passing rebuke. One of the wrongs of the "rich man" was his costly array, "purple and fine linen." And his "fairing sumptuously every day," is certainly not commended.

Neglect of attending to regular preaching appointments, may sometimes be a cause of a poor support. People do not like to be treated so; and he that forgets his duty to the churches, must not complain if he is forgotten by them. Again, when the people of God support ministers for the purpose of preaching the Gospel, they think, and justly too, that Sabbath preaching is not sufficient. Preaching during the week-day evenings is needed in many places, and will be useful in enlarging the borders of Zion, if conducted in the right way. But the efforts must be occasionally conducted just like a protracted meeting, by preaching night after night at the same place. And this can be done without interfering in the least with the Sunday appointments. It can be done on week-day evenings. Revivals will follow these continued efforts, especially in new appointments. Churches will be built up. The preachers will become revived more spiritual, and consequently more affective in their preaching. But indolence will not effect this. Actual labor is necessary. The word must be proclaimed with power. Idleness never finishes any work, but industry does. Alas! in some instances we fear the minister has got luke-warm, and the churches have caught the direful infection. The inquiry has been made, how comes it our preacher no more weeps over his congregation as he formerly did? He does not feel for their eternal welfare as he once did. He is luke-warm! Behold Paul's zeal, tears, labors.—"He ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." Paul was a missionary.—How often do some of the missionaries of the "Church of God" warn the people? Once a week! Nay, verily. Copy the Apostle Paul's example.

The New Broom.

July —, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

It is an old saying, and a true one, that a new broom sweeps clean. Inasmuch as it is both old and true, I shall take it for a text, and make a few practical remarks on the same.

In the first place, it must be shown what constitutes a new broom; in the second place, what the parabolic sense of the new broom is; in the third place, what constitutes the new broom parabolically speaking; and in the fourth place, the best plan possible to keep up the broom from becoming old, or the necessity and advantages of keeping the broom in good order. Now, then, I will take up these propositions in order.

I promised to show, first, what a new broom is. In its literal sense, it is a household utensil, composed of wood, straw and hemp. That part of the broom which is wood, is commonly called the handle. The straw part is sometimes called broom-corn, it having derived its name from the many brooms that have been made from said straw. The hemp, I spoke of, is frequently known by the name wraught twine. These productions, when mechanically put together, form a good substantial broom that sweeps clean.

I shall now take up the figurative sense of the broom, which I am pleased to call nothing else, nothing less, and nothing more, than the CHURCH ADVOCATE; for every body that reads it cannot help but say, that it truly is a clean-sweeping organ, or broom. Now, then, I shall proceed to the third proposition, to show what constitutes the figurative broom. The literal one, as we have heard, is made of three different things; and so, likewise, is the figurative. The ADVOCATE is the broom; the editor the handle; the contributors the broom-corn; the good paying subscribers are the twine. These three things, then, methodically and properly put together, necessarily form also a good and a welcome family broom, and one that sweeps clean.

Now I shall proceed, agreeably to my arrangements, and consider the keeping of the broom. It must be obvious to every person, who knows any thing about house-keeping, that any broom will wear out by its being in constant use; yes, clear up to the handle. But it must be considered, that when the straw is become short, that then the broom is, in a great measure, useless. What, then, is to be done now? Why, let me tell you, above all things, save the handle! for if it only is well taken care of, it will answer a good purpose for many other new brooms. The more a handle is used, the smoother it gets; and the smoother it gets, the more will want to handle it. So I would say to the contributors; if you want the ADVOCATE to make a clean sweep of it, send in your splices about twice a month. And if you cannot prepare them, or make them all together ready for the handle, the editor and workman in the office will, no doubt, put themselves to some trouble to fix them off for the public.

Then in the next place, I would say, to one and to all, myself included, send in your pieces, and when you send, forget not the TWINE; for without it, the broom cannot be successfully put together.

I have now, in short, give you the best plan, in my judgment, to keep the broom in order. Now as to the necessity of keeping the broom in good order, if what is mentioned in the above be neglected, it necessarily follows that the ADVOCATE must go down. And should we be so careless as to let it go down, all our social intercourse and mutual communications, which we have, through this medium, would be at an end; which every lover of spiritual liberty would have to regret. The advantages of such a necessary organ should be appreciated far above what it costs; for I calculate that one dollar and twenty-five cents, is no adequate compensation for value received, from such an excellent paper as the Church Advocate.

I am your well-wisher
And brother in the Lord,
FRANK.

A True Friend.

What a blessing and comfort it is to have a good and honest friend—one that will not desert us in adversity no more than in prosperous days—one that will prove a friend in affliction or persecution, or any thing that may befall us in this cold world—one that is always willing and able to give us a word of comfort and advice. When we feel dejected and cast down, and weary of the things of this world—when we can turn aside from the world, and meet a true friend to tell our troubles to, and there receive cheering and encouraging words; O! how revived and refreshed we can retire, and indulge the thought that we have still one good friend on whom we can implicitly depend alike in adversity and prosperity. Reader, if thou hast found such a friend, try and keep that old and well-tried friend, and never betray the trust of that friend, but prove yourself worthy of his confidence and affections; so that he need not be ashamed of you, nor of your society, but can, with confidence, take your part. We live in a world of trouble and sorrow, where we are liable to trials and disappointments, and we all need the soothing and cheering smiles of a kind friend.

But, O! how often are we disappointed in those we so highly esteem and account good friends. But, alas! how often we are pained to hear some enemy has raised an evil report against us falsely, for some unholy cause, and to our surprise, we hear our reliable friend has raised the tongue of slander against us, and has joined and helped to cast out our name as evil. Such may well be called false friends! And a false friend is like the sun in a dial—it is only seen in clear weather. So are some friends; they are all in our favor while the sun of prosperity is shining on us; but let a cloud of adversity come over us, and where are they?—alas! they are gone. Let us, therefore, be careful in whom we place implicit confidence, and to whom we tell the secrets of our heart. Nevertheless, though it should be as the poet says:

"Though friends should all fall, and foes all unite,"

Yet, if we can claim to ourselves the promise that the Lord is our friend, we should not despond. For the Lord has promised to be a friend that "sticketh closer than a brother."

"O! let us never place our trust,
Too much on mortal friendly dust;
But let our hope to Heaven ascend,
To God who is a faithful Friend."

A FRIEND.

Preparations for Camp-Meetings.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

As the time of holding camp-meetings is drawing near, I have thought proper to take up my pen in order to make a few remarks, in reference to the preparations that should be made, in order to have spiritual and profitable meetings, which, no doubt, is and will be desired and prayed for by all the friends of the cause of our Lord. No doubt many of us have friends and relations, yea, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, or children, or perhaps companions, who are yet strangers to grace, whom we wish to see converted and made happy in Christ. The question may be asked: how may we be blessed with the glorious sight of seeing them converted? I answer the question by saying, that, first, we must be bold in tenting out on the Lord's ground, where He will meet with us and bless us. By us staying at home with our tents, on account of some frivolous excuse, is a poor encouragement for sinners to attend the meetings and get religion. Again, I would say, we must not only provide for our tents suitable provisions for the body, as is too often the ease; but we must also have our own hearts in order, by praying much in secret, and by solemn fasting and self-denial, and thus come to camp with the power of God in our souls, and be full of faith and the Holy Ghost; so that it will not take us all the time of camp-meeting to get ready to labor for mourners, as is too often the ease. For very often it takes some professors of religion, all the time of camp-meeting, to get themselves revived.—No wonder, then, that mourners linger to get through, or obtain the blessing. Sometimes there is a grand mistake made by professors; they come to meeting, but forget to fast, forget to pray, and by sueh neglect of duty, they come to camp, empty-hearted and barren, and then they often wonder why there is not more good done at such a meeting. Try the above plan of coming to camp, and see whether you will not soon discover the grand cause.—Preachers may preach and do all they can, if the congregation is dead, little good will be done. Therefore, dear brethren and sisters, let us be up and a doing; it may be the last camp-meeting some of us may ever attend in this world.

Again, brethren, be liberal at camp-meeting. Have your tents well provided, so as to maintain strangers; for remember, you may entertain angels unawares. And then if sinners are not converted, it will be a strong inducement to get them to turn to God, and try to save their souls from the horrors of an everlasting torment in hell. Cheer up, therefore, brethren and sisters: I hope we have some friends and brethren now in glory, who were first converted at camp-meeting, and if we are faithful, we shall be permitted, when this earthly tent has fallen and decayed, to strike our tents on the pleasant shores of bright Canaan, where we will meet with all our dear friends who are gone before. May the smiles of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the power of our God, rest on every encampment, held for the purpose of glorifying His name, throughout the world.

I remain your unworthy, but Affectionate brother and Fellow-
Laborer, in the Kingdom and Patience of Jesus Christ,
A FRIEND OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Letter from Elder J. Meyers.

ALLEGHENY CITY, PA., June 30, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Being still unable to travel, and having leisure hours, I commit a few of my thoughts in connection with some remarks of other persons, to paper, on the all-important office of a pastor, bishop, minister, or any other distinctive appellative, and send them to you for publication in your valuable journal.

Pastor—"literally, a shepherd," says Buck—figuratively, a stated minister, appointed to have the watch-care over a congregation of professing Christians. His qualifications be must receive directly and indirectly from God; otherwise he will not only be a useless, but also a dangerous teacher. Exclusive men-made preachers may, indeed, answer the purpose of pleasing men, but God's ministers alone can please Him.

The pastor, therefore, must have—1st, sound principles; 2d. He must be mild and affable in his disposition and deportment; 3d. He must be superior in his knowledge and talents; 4th. He must be diligent as to his studies; 5th. He must be benevolent and candid; 6th. He must be zealous and faithful in his public work; and, lastly, a minister should be uniform in his conduct.

Jesus Christ says, Matt. 24: 45: "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give meat in due seasons?" Here two things are included, namely: Faitfulness and prudence. His faitfulness will not permit him to deceive others—his prudenee will protect him from being deceived. In his prudence he will not unfrequently detect the wolf in sheep's-clothing—in his faithfulness he will be humble without ostentation.

The pastor's faithfulness includes pure and spiritual aims and intentions for his divine Master—personal sincerity, or integrity of heart—diligence in the discharge of his duty—impartiality in the administration of Christ's house, and an unshaken constancy and perseverance to the end.

His prudence directs him to lay a good foundation of knowledge in his people. It will direct him in the choice of such subjects as will best suit the wants of his people. It will also direct him in the language he is to use—of what great use his own affections are for the moving of others—teach him to be careful by the strictness and gravity of his deportment—to maintain his esteem in the consciences of his people—and to excite him to seek a blessing from God upon his studies and labors.

Now we are informed that God is holy, and and without holiness we shall never enjoy his presence; hence, we are earnestly exhorted to follow after holiness. Thus, if Christians indiscriminately are commanded to be holy, how much more ought the pastor to be so. Example is at all times, and in all places, stronger than precept; hence, the common saying of a certain dissipated parson, of by gone years: "Follow my words, but not my actions," will not answer the purpose. If a preacher is a light, trifling, prayerless, and frothy character, his people will be so too; for we are imitating creatures, and people will soon imagine themselves sufficiently warranted, if they have the preacher for a precendent.

These things I have so frequently observed, during a twenty years Christian experience, that I am fully convinced of the propriety of preaching to ourselves once in a while. For what good does public preaching do if we neglect fire-side preaching? I know of a time when the preachers in the "Church of God" were less learned and less practised in the art of sermonizing, and yet God blessed their labors abundantly. And why was it so then? Because the preachers were holy men, i e., devoted to God and the cause of religion, partakers of the Divine nature. They were zealous, serious and pious men. When they attempted to preach, they depended on God more than on their notes and skeletons; hence, the copious out-pourings of the Spirit of grace on the congregations. When preaching in their simplicity, they thought of pleasing God, and labored for the salvation of sinners, and not to gain the applause of the learned and the worldly; which latter, I fear, is too much the ease now.

I now seriously ask: will the Lord bless the sermons of such ministers, however systematic these discourses may be arranged, and well they may be divided and subdivided, if, in the internal, they neglect visiting their flocks impartially; and when visiting, will merely have (old ministers) a sociable chat with the master and dame of the house, about temporal matters—the war with Mexico—young ministers have a tete-a-tete with the young ladies—afterwards sit down to a sumptuous table—praise the sweet meats and pies and custards thereof; then depart without catechising the young and old of the family, or may be, without saying one word about religion; yea, go away, even without prayer? In short, I would merely say, ministers that can act so, are neither faithful or prudent. They may complain—hammer away in the pulpit at the people, and preach ever so plain—their labor, I fear, is lost, and like an empty sound, it dies away in the floating air.

God, I pray, have mercy on ministers, that they may become holy men, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners. The third of 1 Timothy and first chapter of Titus, ought to be specially and particularly studied by all who desire the office of a bishop. Let these few remarks suffice until my next epistle.—Farewell!

J. MEYERS.

P. S.—No special good news in regard to religion from our Iron cities. Brother HARN, after having performed a three week's tour to Green county, has returned, and is again engaged in laboring here.

Letter from Elder G. U. Harn on the Death of Elder J. H. Bamberger.

YOUR letter of the 17th June is before me. Do I dream that Elder BAMBERGER is dead? or is it true? Has our King indeed removed him to another post in His dominions? and shall I not meet him again here in his earthly domain, with his Heavenly embassy he was so firm and unflinching in? No one can more deplore the loss of him than myself. If tears would re-animate his slumbering body and bring back that firm spirit of his, I feel as though I could go on a pilgrimage to his silent grave, and there shed them profusely. I honored his talent and esteemed his ardent attachment to the "Church of God," while many who, for a while, far more loud and boisterous in her praise, have got weary, and because they were somewhat disappointed, have deserted her ranks. I always looked upon him as being our brightest star among all the young men we have in the Eldership. Also, my private intimacy with him, during the past year, had so enhanced my ardent attachment to him, that I feel to invite his spirit to come and accompany me on my journey, till I join him in another part of Prince Massiah's reign, which I have many reasons to believe will not be long hence.

A few sentences of his own language to me in private letters, will give a faint idea of our mutual attachment. Among them are the following: "I was very glad, indeed, to hear from one for whom I feel great regard as a Christian brother, and for whom I cherish the warmest feelings of friendship, and especially so, when I remember that I have every reason to believe that those feelings by him are reciprocated." Again, in one of a later date, he says: "These are times to try men's patience and their souls; and whilst some, who have been older in the cause, are getting tired of the work, and, Demas-like, forsaking the same through love of praise, money and ease, my heart turns to yourself, and other young brethren; and I daily pray we may be preserved, and show ourselves worthy of a better cause—prove that we are governed by higher motives, and influenced by nobler aims, and possessed of better principles, and stand on a firmer foundation." And in his last to me, dated May 13, 1846: "I love you still as much, if not more, than ever." These quotations speak his ardent attachment to the cause of God, and love to us young brethren in the ministry. But, O! is it possible that one of our little number must so soon fall a victim to tyrant Death? Dear young brethren, in the ministry, particularly, let me beseech you all to try and imitate him more wherein he followed the Master, and soon, very soon, we shall salute him among the worthy piers that are ranging the Heavenly field of bright glory above. As for my own part, I say, let men of this world seek glory by courting the smiles of the populace, the praise of vain and ostentatious sectarians, or by waiding ancle-deep in the purple gore of their fellow-men, I still will seek that honor which comes from above, and lives when all earth-born pomposity shall be buried in the common grave of oblivion, prepared for all hopes below the starry regions, or gold-speckled etherial canvass. I assure you all I still feel that love and attachment to you I have ever done; and though we shall meet less than we have formerly on the shores of time, let us, as little children, love each other with pure hearts fervently.

You may look upon these remarks as evidences of weakness, but I write from the fullness of my over-flowing heart. And to J. H. B's. uncaged spirit I say,—

Whisper gently in mine ear,
Hast thou pass'd the reach of fear?—
Has this vale of sin and gloom
Ceased to follow at thy tomb?

Oft thy soul was deep distress'd,
Many living can attest!
Who, to cheer thy spirits up,
Sweeten'd oft thy bitter cup.

Now thou art, all harm above,
Spotless as the snowy dove,—
Quaffing life's golden nectar,
Given by thy true Protector.

Be thou, now, my constant guide—
Never do forsake my side;
While on earth I still remain,
Teach me Shiloh's peaceful reign.

When, like thine, mine end hath come,
Then eschort me safely home;
Introduce me to thy Lord,
And to all the hosts of God:

There we'll range the verdant clime,
Unannoy'd by griefs of time,
And rehearse our toils all o'er,
On Canaan's fair and happy shore.

I think it due Elder BAMBERGER and the church at large, that his journal and manuscripts should be preserved and published in a small volume; such parts, at least, as will be profitable; for I have no doubt he has some useful manuscripts. Men of the world are very careful to peruse this course; and why should they be wiser than the children of light.

Fraternally yours,
G. U. HARN.

Sunday Schools.

It is absolutely necessary to our well-being, that the light of Christianity and education should be generally diffused. It should visit every nook and corner of the land, that it may send its cheering influence into its gloomiest recesses. The Sunday-school system is one of the most philanthropic institutions on earth. Its mighty impulse to the doing of good is felt in all parts of the country. Many little knees are now bent in earnest and fervent supplication to their Great Creator, who, but a few years ago, spent the holy Sabbath in cursing, swearing, fighting, and other sinful enjoyments, if I so may call them. There are many children in the country who are laboriously occupied six days in the week—the seventh was generally spent as above described—but now these little ones are "gathered together" in the Sunday-schools; and instead of hallowing about on the streets, their voices proclaim hallelujahs to their Father, and their prayers ascend to the portals of Heaven. I shall here give a short sketch of the history of Sunday schools, and in a future communication I will attempt to say a few words on their benefit.

The first Sunday-school, of any kind, was established at Savannah, Georgia, about one hundred and ten years ago, under the direction of John and Charles Wesley, Benjamin Ingham, and Charles Delamotte, who came as missionaries to Georgia, for the double purpose of advancing the spiritual interests of the colony, and the conversion of the Indians Mr. Delamotte was not a clergyman, but had received a good education; and in connection with John Wesley, established a school of thirty or forty children at Savannah. The following account of their week-day and Sunday instructions, is extracted from a letter of John Wesley, sent by Mr. Ingham, on the 26th of January, 1737, to the associates of the Rev. D. Bray, in London, who had sent a library to Savannah:

"A young gentlemen who came with me, teaches between thirty and forty scholars to read, write and cast accounts. Before school, in the morning, and after school, in the afternoon, he catechises the lowest class, and tries to fix something of what was said in their understanding, as well as memories. In the evening he instructs the larger children. On Saturday, in the afternoon, I catechise them all. The same I do on Sunday before evening service. And in the church, immediately after the second lesson, a select number of them having repeated the catechism, and been examined in some part of it, I endeavor to explain at large, to enforce that part both on them and on the congregation."

Another journalist gives this account of the same school of Mr. Delamotte:

"Before public worship, on the afternoon of Lord's-day, he catechised the lower class, and endeavored to fix something of what was said by the minister in their understanding, as well as their memories. In the morning he instructed the larger children."

About this same time, a Sunday-school was established at Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pa., by the congregation of the Seventh-Day Baptists. These Sunday-schools were certainly quite different from the modern system; but I think America can claim the honor of having the first of these institutions. The present system of Sunday-schools was instituted by Robert Raikes, who was born at Gloucester, England, in the year 1735. He was, by profession, a printer, and conducted a paper called the "Gloucester Journal." As a man of business, he was useful, persevering and prosperous, and gained some credit for the neatness and fidelity of his typograpy. The first prominent display of his patriotic humanity, was occasioned by the state of the prison of his native city. The prisoners who committed trifling offences, were thrown into the company of the most worthless vagabonds, and generally left the goal much worse than they entered it. Their time was spent in idleness, gambling, cursing and swearing. Through the exertions of Mr. Raikes, they were supplied with work and instructive books; their condition being thereby much improved.

But in the establishment of Sunday-schools, we are indebted to Mr. Raikes for services of a superior and more extensive benefit. "Some business," says he, "leading me one morning into the subarbs of the city, where the lowest of the people (who are principally employed in the pin manufactory) chiefly reside, I was struck with concern on seeing a group of children, wretchedly ragged, at play in the street. An inquiry of a neighbor produced an account of the miserable state and deplorable profligacy of these infants, more especially on a Sunday, when left to their own direction. The thought then suggested itself, that should some little plan be formed to check this deplorable profanation of the Sabbath, it would be at least a harmless attempt, if it should be productive of no good. Accordingly, an agreement was soon made with persons properly qualified, to receive and instruct in reading, and the catechism of the established church, for a reasonable compensation, as many children as shall be sent them on Sundays. The curate of the parish volunteered the superintendence of their education, and undertook to examine them at certain times, and thereby test the competency of the preceptors and the progress of the pupils."

Thus, was the first regular Sunday-school instituted in 1781. The project was not a fruitless one. Its advantages were so apparent, and the value of its influence so obvious, that in a very short time the poor children of other parishes, in Gloucester, were collected together to receive the precious love of instruction, freely dispensed on that day, which they had been accustomed to spend in deleterious idleness, sinful amusement, or puerile profligacy. In a short time, Sunday-schools started up in the neighboring towns, and at length they threw open their fostering arms in almost every part of England. The first Sunday-school in America, after the developement of Mr. Raikes' plan, was formed in New York in 1815. In the same year was formed the Philadelphia Sunday and Adult School Union, and in 1824, the American Sunday-School Union, also, at Philadelphia. The latter institution has, and still continues, to be the means of an inestimable amount of good. Its benign influence is felt and acknowledged in all parts of the Union. Travelling agents are employed in many of the States and territories, and among the Indians. The proceeds of the Union are derived from donations by individuals, Sunday-schools and churches, and are expended in the publication of books, which are sold very low, and distributed gratis to those families and schools that cannot afford to pay. To give the readers an idea of the business of this Institution, I shall annex a statement of their receipts and expenditures of two years.

H. J. BEYERLE, M. D.

Linolestown, Dauphin co., July, 1846.

Letter from Elder A. Megrew.

Dalton, Wayne county, Ohio, June 12, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I have received the third No. of the Church Advocate. I feel much pleased with it, and will do all that I can to support it. The brethren who take it are pleased highly, so far as I know. It appears to be quite cheering to the hearts of the faithful brethren.

We are still trying to move along in Ohio in the good old way, though we have had many things to contend with during the last year, which were discouraging in their nature. But we trust we have got through with the worst of them, and are looking up for better times. The prospects are better, in my opinion, than they have been for some time. I hope the dear brethren in the East will not forget us in the West.

To my brethren, generally, I would say, let us, in the name of the Lord, set up our banners and go on, and let holiness be our motto.—And while others seek for popularity, wealth, numbers, high-sounding titles, self agrandizement, let us not be high-minded, but "condescend to men of low estate," observing all the ordinances of the Lord, and the sun of righteousness will beam forth the rays of devine light and love upon us, and then shall we be like a well-watered garden, and, as a people, bring forth the fruits of righteousness, and have honor of God our heavenly Father.

I see in the last number of the Advocate a request to the brethren to send in the appointments for the camp-meetings. I, for my part, have knowledge of but one in Ohio certain as yet. This will be held on the farm of brother Stump, two miles east of Bethlehem, Stark county, commencing on the 27th of August next. The brethren within the bounds are most earnestly solicited to attend this camp; and not only to attend, but bring their tents, and that at the commencement of the meeting, prepared to stay until the close. And, indeed, those who can conveniently tent and won't do it, for fear of cost or trouble, had better stay at home altogether. There are some who like to attend camp-meeting very well after the ground is prepared, the tents up, and-so-forth; and in order to avoid being called spungers, they pay their boarding, or at least talk about it. Now if all were to do so, how would we hold camp-meetings? And this is the cause we have so few. There are several other brethren this year, who are willing to give the ground and bare the burden of a camp, but in consequence of such a backwardness upon the part of many in tenting out, we dare not venture to give them out at the present at least. We hope the brethren from a distance, and those who cannot tent, will not feel backward in attending the camp above mentioned. They will be heartily received and entertained.

Yours, in love,

A. MEGREW.

Letter from Brother Samuel Boyer.

Mercerville, July 10, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I am glad that you are determined to keep up the Church Organ in some shape or other. I received the Church Advocate, but have not, as yet, seen any one to pay the subsciption to; nor have I seen any one who has the former accounts of the printing establishment.

Brother W., what has become of the camp-meeting folks of Washington county? There appears to be nothing said in regard to a camp-meeting to be held on this circuit this year. Perhaps some have not got their big tents done yet, that was talked of last year.—Now I should like very much that something would be done, and that fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, would come out to pray and be prayed for, and that the work of the Lord would move onward, and sinners be made to tremble and shake as a Belshazzar did. I see that religion is growing cold in the country, and unless people will wake up and fight the battles of the Lord, (not Mexico) sin will take the sway. Although I do not get to meeting very often, I still keep the object in view of my eternal deliverance, that when God will call me to give in my account of my stewartship, while here below, I may render it with joy.

The day cannot be far distant when God will wind up the concerns of this world, and when all nature will be hushed into silence, and Gabriel, with his shrill and clangering trump, "will stand with one foot on the sea, and the other on the land, and declare that time shall be no longer." Oh! my God, what a mighty rumbling there will be in that day, as of distant mighty thunder—when the elements will melt with fervent heat—the moon turned into blood, and the stars shall be unhinged from their lofty pitch of Heaven's high concave, &c. Brethren, pray that we may have a part in the first resurrection, and be happy to join the glorious saints at the right hand of the Magesty on High, in a world without end. Amen.

Yours, in the Lord

SAMUEL BOYER.

Another Letter from Eld. A. Megrew.

Dalton, Wayne county, Ohio, July 10, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I herein send you the names of seven new subscribers, who, I think, will be punctual in paying for the Advocate. I expect to send you more soon. As I said in my last I would do all that I could for the Church Advocate, so I intend to do. I desire to see it sustained, and it can easily be done if every one will exert themselves. However, I am aware there is too little Christian enterprize among us, at least in Ohio, both among preachers and people. It appears to me that some preachers think they have nothing to do but merely preach. And it would appear that some members think they have nothing to do but go to meeting, sing and pray, &c.; and while some good brethren are doing all in their power to sustain the cause, and keep matters moving, there are others doing, in a manner, nothing. This, I think, is utterly wrong. We are taught to bear one anothers burdens; undoubtedly, the idea is, that each should do according to their several abilities, both in spiritual and temporal matters. But it is frequently the case that our poor brethren do more for the support of the Gospel, and other matters, than the rich. Some rich men, yes, members of the church, worth their thousands, pay two or three dollars a year. Some, indeed, who own two or more quarters of well-improved land, pay nothing at all; yet to see them in meeting, they appear to be very warm in the cause. This, surely, does not look like bearing one anothers burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ. For my part, I have but little confidence in such professors of religion. I do not say these things by way of complaining in reference to myself: I do believe that some preachers complain without a cause sometimes. I thank the good Lord we have some good brethren, who will not let a faithful laborer want by any means. But I should like to see equality in all these things, and not the weak bear the burden of the strong. It is necessary that each do their duty, in order that all things may work well and all be happy.

As our camp-meetings are coming on, I would say, to the brethren in Ohio, make your arrangements to attend with your tents, every one that can; and you that cannot leave home yourselves, assist others that can leave home, but are not otherwise prepared. There is a prospect, I think, of the camp-meeting spirit reviving again in Ohio. Please publish the following camp-meetings, and oblige

Yours, truly,

A. MEGREW.

CAMP-MEETINGS IN OHIO.

A camp-meeting will be held on the old camp-ground, on the farm of brother Shifler, west of Olivesburg, Richland county, commencing on the 13th of August next.

Another on the farm of Jacob Bricker, in Wayne county, one and a-half miles east of Wooster, commencing on the 20th of August next.

Another on the farm of brother Stump, one and a-half miles east of Bethlehem, Stark county, commencing on the 27th of August next.

Letter from Brother D. Price.

Elizabethtown, July 18, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I feel happy to see the responsibility that you have taken upon yourself as editor of the Church Advocate. It is a very interesting and welcome messenger to us, and I do hope, with brother Neidig, that the good pensmen of the church will favor the editor with their communications, which will make the paper still more interesting. Furthermore, I do hope that the terms will be fully complied with by all the honorable subscribers of the Advocate, then the paper will, without fail, be carried into effect. If we take brother Hinny's advice, before the first three months are expired, and pay up our dues to the editor, or to the authorized agents, by these means we can avoid those mighty difficulties that so often arise by our own carelessness and neglect. If we fully discharge our duty in regard to this matter, it will be to our credit and to the promotion of the paper. I will take brother H's. advice, and enclose you one dollar; the balance I will pay you, or one of the agents, by the first opportunity. My humble opinion is, that the editor or the Executive Committee should enforce the terms, at the expiration of the three months, wherever dues are unpaid. I think it would prevent a great deal of this slothfulness that has manifested itself in the old establishment. Any person taking a paper on credit for years, is like paying a bread-bill, when the bread has been eaten a year ago. Come, brethren, let us sustain the cause of the Advocate, and pray God to bless His church and Gospel everywhere.

Yours, in love,

D. PRICE.

Letter from Brother S. A. Brumbaugh.

Centre Factory, July 11, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

As the three first months of the Advocate are nearly expired, and as every non-paying subscriber is to have his paper discontinued at the end of that term, I therefore enclose the amount of my subscription that you will receive it, and thus secure the Advocate to me and family for one year. I wish you much success in the undertaking of this paper.—Surely, the church needs an advocate similar to this. But in order that it might still be more useful, I think the editor and elders, who labor in word and doctrine, should take up texts, dwell upon them, and have them published in the Advocate: thus there might be a great deal of knowledge and instruction diffused amongst the readers of the same. May the Lord bless and give prosperity in this matter!

I am yours in love,

S. A. BRUMBAUGH.

Letter from Brother John Shuler.

Ottowa, July 11, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I am very glad to see that you have again started the paper. I felt much at a loss when the Publisher stopped. But the Advocate, I can assure you, is a welcomer and better sheet to me. I hope you will be sustained in your efforts in carrying on the paper.

I should have wrote to you before, and sent you my subscription, but I wanted to get some more. I now send you five dollars for four papers; one for S. Boyer, one for brother John Souders, one for Geo. Rumple, and one for myself. Please credit the brethren with the same, and I will try to do all I can to get more.

The brethren are all well, and very well pleased with the country. Brother J. Bricker is now here in good health, and likes the country. He has been to Iowa and the Rock Rive country, but did not like it as well as he does in this section of Illinois. I hope he will buy here, as I want some more brethren to settle in these parts. Mr. S. Boyer says if you will make out his account he will pay it to me. Our country looks very fine at present. I think if you and some more of the brethren would come out here, you would be pleased. Religion is very low at present, but I think if we had good spirited preaching here, something would be done. I could tell you a great-deal more about matters and things, but I forbear. Brother Bricker seen brothers E. Logue and Shrom. I close, hoping that I may be able soon to write to you again. We are all well.

I remain yours in Christ,

JOHN SHULER.

Letter from Brother John Mumper.

Venango county, Pa., July 16, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I would embrace this opportunity to address a few lines to you, which you may communicate to the "Church of God," through the medium of the Advocate, if you see proper.

In the first place, I would say that the Advocate, as far as I know, renders general satisfaction—(as for my part, I find it filled with good matter, far beyond what I expected when I subscribed for it)—and I wish you success in your undertaking, as we well know now that it is of great use to the church, as the means of communicating with each other.

In the second place, I will give you some information how we are getting along in this part of the country, as we have been without preaching since April last, in consequence of the ill health of brother Meyers, who is, with his family, in the city of Allegheny. We are at a loss for his cheering voice among us. May the Lord keep him steadfast in the faith of the Gospel, and help him to endure his afflictions with Christian fortitude. We were somewhat discouraged at first, but we soon recovered, trusting that all would work together for good. Brother Meyers, when he was with us and in health, he labored hard and earnestly for his Master, for which we feel thankful. And our prayer at the throne of grace is, and shall be, for his health, that he may not sink in the trying hour—that if we never hear his cheering voice again, we may have a strong hope that we shall enjoy his society with all the Israel of God, in the fair portals of glory.

The brethren and sisters of the "Church of God" in Irvin township, where I reside, I believe stand as firm in the faith of the Gospel, as they ever did; still looking forward with strong confidence in the promises of the blessed Redeemer, that when this body shall fall a prey to devouring worms, that our immortal souls shall go to rest in the Paradise of God, there to spend eternity in traversing the Golden Streets of the New Jerusalem, with that happy throng that we anticipate we shall meet there. Dear brethren, pray to God that this may be our happy lot, and when so doing, remember that you have our prayers continually to the Great Head of the church, that we may all meet in glory.

Yours, in the bonds of Christian love,

JOHN MUMPER.

Doings of the Standing Committee of the Ohio Eldership.

The Standing Committee met according to appointment, in the house of brother S. Metzler, in the bounds of the Moreland churches, consisting of the following brethren, to-wit: Archibald Megrew, William Adams, Samuel Sherich, James Neil, and Peter Hartman.

1st. A letter being presented and read from Thomas Miller, of Smithville, concerning a debt contracted by brother E. Wood, which was adjusted for the time being, by a promise of payment by the 1st of December next. The demand is twelve dollars.

2. The camp-meetings were taken into consideration; whereupon, it was agreed that one be held at brother Stump's, Stark county, two miles east of Bethlehem, commencing on the 27th of August next.

3d. The case of Samuel N. Miller was taken into consideration; whereupon, brothers S. Sherich and J. Neil declined acting, because they were interested: and brothers H. Murray and S. Metzler were chosen in their stead. The committee then

Resolved, That Samuel N. Miller be expelled from the Ohio Eldership of the "Church of God," for repeated prevarications, and otherwise highly improper conduct.

(Signed) Peter Hartman, Archibald Megrew, William Adams, Henry Murray, Samuel Metzler, } Committee.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Dreadful railroad Accident.—The New York papers give an awful account of an accident which took place on the New York and Erie Railroad, on Friday last. It appears that the locomotive, with the usual train of milk and baggage cars, was, with four passenger cars, proceeding at a rapid pace, till, within a short distance of the bridge near Turner's, a breakage in the wheel of the forward passenger car parted the rails, and let the wheels down on the cross-ties of the bridge, which is thrown across a ravine of about twenty feet in depth, the wheels striking with tremendous force against the timbers, broke through the planking, and the first of the passenger cars was precipitated through the bridge, followed and crushed by the remaining three. The second car, indeed, was literally encased in the preceding one; and it is wonderful that any within escaped with life. The locomotive and cars preceding the passenger cars, met with slight injury. The scene is represented by an eye witness to have been one of dreadful horror and confusion. A mass of dead and lacerated bodies, mingled with the fragments of the broken cars; the groans of the dying and the screams of the wounded, were awfully distinct in the loneliness of the glen. Where a few moments before all was life, and gayety, now was terror and death.

Two passengers—Mr. George Stevens, a flour merchant of our city, and a son of Dr. Crane, of Goshen—were killed outright. From thirty to forty were more or less severely wounded. One female had her throat cut, as if by a razor, from ear to ear; from another, the shoulder blade projected several inches through the skin, but we refrain from the horrible details. In the hindmost car, was a young ladies' school, with their teacher, on a pleasure excursion to Hoboken. Fortunately they all escaped with but slight wounds--though the teacher was more seriously injured; but the whole scene must have been a terrible conclusion to the bright anticipation of their young and buoyant hearts.

Mineral Lands of Lake Superior.—The following message from the President of the United States was presented to the Senate on Thursday:—

To the Senate and House of Representatives:—I communicate herewith a report from the secretary of the treasury, transmitting a report from the commissioner of public lands, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 22d of June, calling for information of the progres which has been made in the surveys in the mineral region upon Lake Superior, and within what time such surveys may probably be prepared for the sale of the land in that country. In answer to that portion of the resolution which calls for the "views of the Executive respecting the proper mode of disposing of said lands, keeping in view the United States, and the equitable claims of individuals, who under the authority of the war department, have made improvements thereon, or acquired rights of possession"—I recommed that these lands be brought into market and sold at such price and under such regluations as Congress may prescribe, and that the right of pre-emption be secured to such persons as have, under the authority of the war department, made improvements or acquired rights of possession thereon. Should Congress deem it proper to authorize the sale of these lands, it will be necessary to attach them to suitable land districts, and that they be placed under the management and control of the general land office as other public lands.

The Telegraph made to Talk.—The Charlestown Courier, contains a notice of an invention, by Dr. Hume, one of the professors in the Citadel Academy, whereby the Magnetic Telegraph may be made to speak as well as write. How this result is effected, the notice does not state, but gives the following sketch of what the invention actually accomplishes:

The Russian telegraph is alleged to be capable of expressing ten different sounds by ten wires. The Charleston telegraph expresses 2 sounds by 2 wires, and may be made to express the 26 sounds composing the alphabet, by 27 wires, but this is unnecessary, for if a sufficient number of distinct sounds can be expressed by fewer wires to make an inteligible language the object is accomplished. The difference between this telegraph and Morse's consists in the substitution of sounds for marks and greater simplicity. It is distinctly audible in a large room, and any one who takes the trouble to learn its language, may hear its news as fast as it is told at the outer end.

Singular Freak of Fortune.—Col. Hicks, once a slave in Kentucky, and afterwards in New Orleans, is now a commission merchant in Monrovia, doing a business worth $4000 or $5000 per annum.

M. Ronge.—In the month of February, M. Ronge was cited before the criminal tribunal at Breslaw, for having outraged the principles of the various creeds authorized in Prussia in a work published by him at Breslaw, under the title Neue doch alte Feinde ("New enemies and yet old ones.") This suit caused much uneasiness to M. Ronge's friends, but the result has been a complete acquital. The sentence declares that "though M. Ronge does speak in most severe terms of the various religious communities legally established in Prussia, still there is not anything that falls under the action of the criminal law. In consequence, the tribunal declares M. Ronge to be acquitted, and places all the costs at the charge of the state." A number of the houses in Breslaw, were illuminated the same evening to celebrate this decision.—Globe.

Destructive Fire in Nantucket.—The Nantucket Warder, Extra, of Tuesday afternoon, gives the following account of a terribly destructive fire in that town, on Monday night. It commenced in the store of E. G. Kelly, and spread with great rapidity, and in a few hours the whole business part of the city, including Post Office, Insurance Office, Reading Room, the Inquirer and Mirror printing offices, and many valuable dwelling houses and stores, amounting in all to more than two hundred, were destroyed. Upwards of twenty buildings were blown up in attempting to stop the progress of the devouring element.

The Warder, received Wednesday night, gives further particulars of the disastrous fire, which are appalling in the extreme. One third of the town has been destroyed; between three and four hundred buildings have been burnt. The loss is estimated at about $1,000,000.

It is very remarkable that no lives were lost. Two or three were injured more or less severely. About thirty kegs of powder were used in blowing up about as many buildings, and proved very efficient.

Certain cure for bone Fellon.—Any person or persons who may be visited with the above unpleasant and obstinate disease, will no doubt find almost momentary ease as well as final relief, by applying the following remedy, to wit:—Take of whole flies (Cantharades) which may easily be obtained from the Apothecaries, (say one dozen) and bind them carefully over the affected part, or if there be great inflamation cover the whole finger and let them remain two or three hours; in which time the patient will find almost entire relief, take off the flies and apply a soft plaster of suet or other healing salve as in case of common blistering.

Emigration.—Up to the 27th of June, 21,303 emigrants had reached Quebec from Europe, chiefly from the United Kingdom. The immigration into British America, this year, from Europe, at all the ports is over 26,000, but of these a large number are settlers on their way to the United States.

A large Fire occurred in Boston on Wednesday morning which destroyed property worth over $50,000—$15,000 insured. Reuben Richards, A. S. & W. G. Lewis, and Nelson & Bradford were the sufferers.

Emigration to Oregon.—A writer in the Oregon Territory computes the emigration into that territory, by the sources of the Plattee and Arkansas rivers, as follows: In 1842, 137 men, women and children; in 1843, 872 men, women and children, and 1,300 head of cattle; in 1844, 475 men, women and children, and 3,000 head of cattle and sheep; in 1845, 3,000 men, women and children, and 7,500 head of cattle and sheep. These emigrating parties, together with smaller ones by sea, from the mountains and from California, make the American population of Oregon about 8,000; which added to 1,250 British, gives the strength of the white population of that teritory.

Liberated Slaves.—The slaves liberated by John Randolph at his death, passed through Cincinnati lately on their way to Mercer county. Their liberty has been procrastinated by an attempt of Randolph's heirs to break the will, but in this they failed, and the slaves were finally permitted to leave Virginia, for the place above named, where Randolph has left 3000 acres of land for them. In addition he has left a considerable sum of money to provide them with houses, stock, and implements of husbandry. They numbered three hundred and ninety; their ages varying from a few weeks to 93 years.—"Old Juba," the favorite body servant of Randolph died about a year ago; hisnext favorite slave, "Old Johnny," was with the gang, and is now 63 years old.

Colporteurs for the Army.—Letters from New Orleans state that $800 have been raised in that city to supply volunteers of the Army of occupation, with the excellent books of the American Tract Society; and that a presiding elder of the Methodist Church, who accompanies a regiment as a chaplain, has consented to act as a colporteur in the camp, and will enlist the other chaplains in the same service.

The Cholera in Ceylon.—The latest accounts from Ceylon represents the ravages of the cholera as truly dreadful. In the town of Jaffna, which had a population of about thirty thousand at the last census, more than three thousand have died. A number of church members at Oodooville, Manepy, &c., have been cut off. After the cholera began to abate, the small pox made its appearance.

United States Land.—It is computed that the quantity of land owned by the United States, exclusive of unsold Texas and Oregon lands, is two hundred and forty-two millions of acres. There is, in addition to this, an immense tract of land, to which the Indian title is not extinct. The average sale of the public lands is something less than two millions of acres annually. The sales of the past year have amounted to a little more than two millions of dollars.

Summary view of the Presbyterian Church. (Old School.)—There are in connection with the General assembly—22 Synods, 116 Presbyteries, 1643 Ministers, 218 Lincentiates, 339 Candidates for the ministry, 2274 Churches, 7766 Members admitted during the year on examination, 5699 members admitted during the year on certificate, 174,020 total of communicants, 2033 adults baptized, 9639 children baptized; $254,514, contributed for religious purposes.

A Long Piece of Tobacco.—In the year 1843, eight millions one thousand four hundred and forty-nine pounds one shilling and four pence, (as per custom house report) was spent by the people of Great Britain for tobacco! A tolerable round sum to "end in smoke," or to be turned into "old soldiers!" If the weed had been worked into pig-tail half an inch in thickness, it would have formed a line 99,470 miles long—long enough to reach more than four times around the world.

Potato rot in Maryland.—The Hagerstown News of the 17th inst. says:—"The potato rot has made its appearance in this county. It is truly lamentable to see whole hills of apparently fine potatoes turned up, which, upon examination, turn out entirely unfit for any use whatever.—It has been but a few days since the disease appeared, up to which time the potatoes in all situations appeared remarkably healthy and promising."

Embarkation for London.—We learn that numerous clergymen have already sailed for the World's Convention, anticipating somewhat the time. Amongst them are Rev. Drs. Cox, and Patton; Rev. A. T. Hopkins and lady, of Buffalo, Rev. Mr. Gordon, of Lexington, Ky., Rev. Dr. DeWitt, of N. York, Dr. Polman, of Albany, Rev. Dr. Forsyth, of Newburg, and Rev. J. R. Wilson of Cincinnati.

Ohio Tobacco.—The Pittsburg Chronicle says:—"In a single warehouse, in this city, there are now lying, awaiting transportation east, 2000 hhds. of tobacco, 1900 of which were raised in Ohio. If Kentucky does not look to her laurels, Ohio will soon rival her in the production of this article of commerce."

Americans and Russia.—Col. Todd informs us that the grading and working on the entire railroad line, from St. Petersburg to Warsaw, (440 miles) was given to American contractors. This contract amounts to four and a half millions of dollars, and was given to American contractors in the face of the competition of all Europe, without security.—Cin. Chron.

The river and Harbor Bill.—This important bill has passed both Houses of Congress. It makes the following appropriations:

For the improving of the harbor at Havre-de-Grace,	$20,000
Baltimore harbor,	20,000
Improvements of the Ohio, and Mississippi rivers,	320,000
St. Louis bar,	75,000
Delaware Breakwater,	75,000
Red river,	80,000

Sabbath in New Orleans.—Nine agents of towboats advertise in the New Orleans papers that they recognize the divine command to 'remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy,' and therefore they agree that hereafter no boat under their control shall make up her tow at the Levee on that day.

Bread Stuffs in Prospect.—The Rochester American says:—"An intelligent friend, just arrived from the Valley of the Mississippi, informs us that the amount of agricultural product in that region, will this season be great beyond all precedent or belief."

POETRY.

APOSTROPHE TO ETERNITY.

ETERNITY! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
Yet onward still to thee we speed,
As to the fight th' impatient steed,
As ship to port, or shaft from bow,
Or swift as couriers homeward go,
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
As in a ball's concentric round
Nor starting point nor end is found,
So thou, Eternity, so vast,
No entrance and exit hast;
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
A ring whose orbit still extends,
And ne'er beginning never ends;
Always thy centre, Ring immense!
And never thy circumference!
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
Came there a bird each thousandth year,
One sand-grain from the hills to bear,
When all had vanished, grain by grain,
Eternity would still remain:
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
As long as GOD shall GOD remain,
So long shall last hell's torturing pain,
So long the joys of heaven shall be;
So long delight! long misery!
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
O Man! let oft thy musings dwell
Upon the dreadful woes of hell,
Oft on the saints' all glorious lot,
For both shall last when time is not;
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
The thought of thee in pain, how dread!
In joy how bright their prospects spread!
For here God's goodness glads our eyes,
And there his justice terrifies;
Mark well, O man Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
Who here lived poor and sore distress'd,
Now truly rich, with GOD doth rest!
With joy consoled for all his ill,
He lives to praise GOD's goodness still:
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
A moment's pleasure sinners know,
For which they pass to endless wo;
A moment's wo the righteous taste,
Through which to endless joy they haste:
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
Who looks to thee alone is wise,
Sin's pleasures all he can despise;
The world attracts him now no more,
His love for vain delights is o'er:
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
Who thinks on thee speaks thus with GOD,
"Here prove me with thy chast'ning rod,
O! let me here thy judgments bear,
Hereafter, LORD, in mercy spare!"
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

Eternity! Eternity!
How long art thou, Eternity!
"O man! I warn thee, think on me,
Think oft on me, Eternity,
For I the sinner's wo shall prove,
The recompense of pious love:"
Mark well, O man, Eternity!

OBITUARY NOTICE.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DIED—At Indianopolis, Indiana, on Sabbath evening, July 5th, Mrs. SARAH ANN, wife of Mr. Jacob S. Walker, aged 33 years and 7 months.

Mrs. W. was born near Hummelstown, Dauphin county, Penn'a., and was the daughter of HENRY and LEAH LANDIS. The deceased met with the loss of her parents long before she arrived at the age of maturity, and was taken into the family of her uncle, Mr. DAVID HUMMEL, of Harrisburg, where she remained as one of its members, until her emmigration to Indianopolis, in 1836. She was beloved by all with whom she had formed acquaintance, for her amiable disposition and pious principles—was an exemplary Christian, and an affectionate wife and mother.

'Twas sad and painful news
To friends, who knew and loved her for
Her many virtues—to learn that Death,
The "King of Terrors," had done its work,
And summoned her into the presence of Her Maker.

But, cheering is the thought!
To know that she loved JESUS!—and as she lived,
She died—with faith unshaken—such faith as was
Her "morning star," through all her daily walks,
And in the solemn hour of death a pilot true,
To lead her Heavenward!

A husband fond,
And children she loved dearly, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
Now mourn their loss. And friends as deeply feel
The pangs of sorrow. Why should they mourn?
While knowing that with her 'tis well. She is freed
From sickness, pain and care, resting now in glory,
In God's bless'd kingdom, the long'd for haven of
The weary soul!

Let those who loved her,
And who were friends on earth, meekly immitate,
As she has done—a bless'd Saviour. And when God sends
To call us hence—like her—we may be ready to receive
The glorious reward of life immortal!

Confession and Forgiveness.

A Christian is bound to forgive his brethren upon proper confession of their faults.—"Forgive one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven you." "Except ye forgive, ye shall not be forgiven."

Inasmuch, then, as a number of our brethren and patrons have frankly and freely confessed themselves faulty in neglecting to pay for their papers, within the time specified in the terms, and still further to amend the matter, have accompanied their confessions with the full pay for their papers, we feel willing, frankly and cordially, to forgive such, and to exempt them from the penalty annexed to the violation of our terms. Their papers, of course, shall be duly forwarded.

And here we would propose, to one and all, who see and acknowledge their wrong in this matter, that if they will send on, or pay over to our agents, the full amount of their subscription, on or before the 15th of September next, they shall be, in like manner, entitled to clemency. But those, and all those, without respect to person, who disregard this overt proposition, shall be held responsible and be rigidly dwelt with according to our terms and regulations.

Worse than Bad!

We are sorry to hear that some few of our subscribers (we hope, however, for the sake of their souls, there are not many) have become dissatisfied with us, because we stopped their papers for non-payment. We beg such erring ones to remember, that we have no license to become partakers of other men's sins. It is more than enough that they have violated their contract, without our participation in the same. But so it is, and so it has been from time immemorial—misery and evil-doers love company. Howbeit, God being our helper, we shall try to maintain our integrity, although others, in multitudes, swerve from its peaceful path. We hope, however, for the good of the cause, and for the sake of the high profession which many of our non-paying subscribers make, that they will cease doing worse than bad, by murmuring against us for not violating our part of the contract.—☞SEE TERMS AND REGULATIONS!☜ And remember, a contract is binding on both parties; the wrong doings of one party will not justify the other in doing the same, nor will two wrongs make a right.

Read This!

As we intend sending out this number of the Advocate to some hundreds who did not and may not receive the previous one, we beg leave to re-insert, for their special benefit, the article in our last under the caption, "FIRST THREE MONTHS." Here it is. Be sure to read it!

FIRST THREE MONTHS!

The Church Advocate has now been issued for three full months. This number being the first of the fourth month, is, accordingly, sent out to those, and to those only, who have complied with our terms.

It has been distinctly and repeatedly stated, that those who would violate their contract, and fail to pay for their papers, during the first three months, should have them stopped, and be charged SIXTY-TWO AND A-HALF CENTS, as a penalty for their delinquency.

We deeply regret that we have it to say, that more than one-half of the subscribers for the Advocate, have forfeited their subscriptions by non-payment, notwithstanding they were repeatedly notified of the consequences.

We hope, therefore, that each and every one of these delinquent subscribers, will immediately remit to us, or pay over to our agents, the aforesaid sum of sixty-two and a-half cents. When this is done, we shall take a pleasure in re-entering their names on our subscription list, as bona-fide subscribers.

Should any money be in the hands of our agents, they are requested to remit it immediately, in order that the innocent may not suffer with the guilty. We are disposed to do justly, and to treat every man right according to contract. We wish to have the names, therefore, of all our covenant-keeping subscribers, who are entitled to their papers, so that they may be duly credited, and have the same forwarded. The rest must content themselves to abide the penalty which their own delinquency has incurred.

Punctuality is the life of business. Contracts impose obligations. A violation of contract is an immorality, except in case of fraud or inability. Every church member that is guilty of this sin, ought to be dealt with accordingly. Were this strictly attended to by the church authorities, as in other cases of immorality, the church, as well as business men in general, would be saved from many difficulties, hard feelings and vexatious disappointments.

We do hope that the members of the "Church of God" will wash their hands of this odious iniquity, and in every instance be careful to keep their word and fulfil their contracts, except it be for reasons above stated; which are the only reasons, in our judgment, that can furnish justifiable grounds for non-compliance.

To our Contributors.

We thank you heartily for the aid you have given us, to fill the columns of the Advocate with useful and interesting matter. We hope you will not weary in well doing, but continue to furnish us regularly with a variety of as good and well written pieces as you possibly can. We shall make every allowance for young beginners. One thing, however, we would particularly request of all our contributors, namely: that they write short and legible pieces. Write often, but as a general thing, let your letters and articles be brief: never more than one sheet at a time. If your subject will not admit of it, divide into Nos., and let us have line upon line. We have received several very lengthy communications, which for want of room, we have been obliged to divide. If the writers, however, will have patience, they shall have the pleasure of reading the whole in due time, in the columns of the Advocate. We are much pleased with the spirit and matter of our young writers; and we are by no means displeased with their great length; only we cannot always accommodate them, by publishing all they write at one time, or in one paper. We hope, then, they will have patience, and believe that we shall always do the best we can.

Pattern Churches.

As one Christian excels another in gifts and graces, so one church often excels another in alms-deeds, acts of benevolence, punctual engagements, efficient labors, spirituality, &c., &c.

In whatever else the following churches may be deficient, they excel and they deserve to be named as model or pattern churches for punctuality, in meeting their engagements with the Editor of the Church Advocate, to-wit: The Martinsburg church; the Newburg church; the Landisburg church; the Rockland church, Venango county, Pa.; the Perryopolis church, Fayette county, Pa.; and the Dalton church, Wayne county, Ohio.—These all kept their promises, and paid for their papers in due time. Query: If these churches (and the most of them are hill-country churches) could do so, why not the more wealthy churches in the cities, boroughs, towns and rich plains of our goodly land? True, there are many honorable exceptions, to the general charge of delinquency, in many other churches and neighborhoods: and as individuals, they are entitled to equal honor for their punctuality. "Honor to whom honor is due." We hope they will all stick to their integrity, and that the rest will copy their example in days and years to come. Its principle (not interest) we feel most concerned for.

Relief Subscription.

We hope that our friends and brethren, who were kind enough to promise us assistance in paying off the debt on the Printing Establishment, will hold themselves in readiness to meet their engagements during the camp-meeting season. It is time, and high time, that this matter should be settled up.—And we hope that all the brethren will feel their obligation to assist in discharging the debt. Most of the brethren have already subscribed towards this object, and some, indeed, have done valiently; but we want all to do their duty. There are a few here and there whom the Lord has blessed abundantly with this world's goods, and still they have hitherto put us off with verbal promises; and some others who, though they have subscribed liberally, and are full able to pay what they have subscribed, have not, as yet, redeemed their promises. Now we wish those brethren to bear in mind that the money is very much needed, and that it is confidently expected and earnestly desired, that they will pay up their subscriptions soon.

Our brethren in the West are also requested to keep this matter moving, and what they can do, to do quickly. We understand that the Lord has blessed them this year with abundant crops of all kinds. We hope, then, they will not forget Zion, but cheerfully aid us according as the Lord favored them.

A Request.

We beg leave to request those of our patrons, who do not file and preserve the Advocate, to send us the third number, provided they have it clean and unmutilated. This number has run out, therefore we make this request, in order to be able to supply new subscribers who may want all the back numbers.

Bowman's Camp-meeting.

This meeting commenced on Friday the 7th, and closed on Thursday morning the 13th inst. This meeting, from first to last, was a delightful time.

As the meeting was suddenly got up, it was small, in point of tents, for a Cumberland camp; only about eighteen tents were on the ground. The congregations, however, most of the time, were large, attentive and remarkably well behaved.

Preachers, as usual at Cumberland camp-meetings, were numerous, The preaching and exhorting, so far as we heard, was excellent—all of it, as it always ought to be, plain, close and practical. We would, we had more such kind of preaching. Let others feed and feast the people with their learning and eloquence, we will try to feed them with the sincere milk of the Word. We are called and pledged, and bound to preach the Word, the whole Word, and nothing but the Word. The Lord help us to go on!

As to the results of the meeting, we cannot speak definitely. We are writing on the morning of the last, and, we trust, the great day of the meeting. Hitherto it has been getting better and better. Since Saturday, more or less have daily professed conversion. The most of these were from among those who done most to sustain the meeting. It is usually so. Besides the church in the neighborhood, there were none that contributed more towards the support of the meeting, than the Shiremanstown, Milltown, and Harrisburg churches. These, accordingly, in part, at least, have already got their rewards—some score or upwards of new-born souls. The Lord bless them, and those, also, who were instrumental in their conversion!

Christian Union.

We commenced writing on this subject in our last paper, and promised to continue it; but on account of absence at several camp-meetings, and a press of other business, we shall defer it for the present, hoping to find leisure soon to resume and continue the subject.

Camp-meeting Reports.

We request our brethren at a distance to send us accounts of their respective camp-meetings, at as early a day as possible, after the close of the same. Try to make your reports short, plain and substantially correct.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The Church Advocate.

To make a religious journal of interest to its patrons, one thing, we think, is important above all others, namely: a large amount of original matter; first, of editorial; secondly, of origiual contributions from the brethren, especially from the preaching brethren. Why some of the latter have been so silent, we cannot tell. Why is it? Where are the older heralds of the Cross sticking, that we hear so seldom from them? Can we not persuade them to feel interested enough to contribute something regularly for the columns of the Advocate? Or shall this address to your consciences be in vain? By writing for the same, others are invited to lend their aid in a similar way, and the good that may accrue therefrom, eternity alone may unfold.

We would, also, like to stir up those that formerly communicated their thoughts to the public through this channel, but whose hands appear to be withered, and whose ideas seem dried up, for we see them not now engaged in this laudable work. Cannot these persons be influenced to use the talents God has gifted them with, and not bury them? Remember the condemnation of the slothful servant!

Again, we would suggest that the ministers of the "Church of God" ponder over this matter more fully, take the hint, and begin to do more than they have lately done to promote the interest of the Advocate. Some have done much; (but have even they done as much as they could?) others comparatively little, and some nothing at all! O! that I could persuade the brethren to become willing to contribute more freely. O! that I could convince them of the advantage of so doing.—The willingness is all that is wanting; the talents is in the church, and we want to see it brought out. If the preachers of the Gospel would go zealously forward in this matter, others would not be so backward. Arouse, friends, come let us see you do something for the Lord in this way also. The Advocate preaches semi-monthly to a large number of people. Reflect, that in this way you may convince some to turn to God, who, perchance, may never hear you preach a sermon. Let all write that are able, exercise their talents in this way. Let us see them flowing in exuberantly from Ohio, Maryland, western, as well as eastern Pennsylvania, and the Advocate will be filled with original matter, be more useful to the church, and become a powerful engine for the propagation of truth, as held and practiced in the "Church of God."

Support of the Ministry.

It is seldom that we have called attention to that part of Christian obligation, of which the following article speaks. We know that it is an enforcement of duty, which to some is unpleasant, and to not a few it is so, because it is not sufficiently understood.

The duty of providing for the maintenance of those who devote their time exclusively to the Christian ministry, is so obvious, that to reasonable and hospitable people, there needs no argument on the subject. As, however, there are vast numbers who have never duly considered it, (consequently have but feeble convictions with regard to a matter of such high importance) while others deny and decry the highly responsible obligations, it may not unprofitably occupy a brief space (though far too brief to do it justice) in your valuable sheet.

In the first place, it is a matter of necessity that the people sustain their minister. The work of the ministry is such as to forbid his sustaining himself; and if so, how is he to live? The Bible enjoins it on him to devote himself entirely to his work. The work of the ministry is to be his one and all-absorbing employment, to the exclusion of every secular avocation. 1 Tim. 4: 13—16. 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2. The work requires such exclusive devotion. It is enough, and more than enough, for all his time, strength and mind. He must, therefore, either "live of the Gospel," or else desist from it, or starve. If he attempts to sustain himself, his sacred profession must suffer; there is distraction between the two objects, and either in this or in that; and, indeed, in both of those callings the man must be unfruitful. The experiment has been abundantly tried, and the result is known, in too many melancholy instances, of a minister's care-worn and barren, if not secularized and half apostate condition. It is, therefore, a matter of necessity that he receives his support from the people.

In the next place, it is just and reasonable, because he labors for the people's benefit. He leaves other professions, and his own interest, to be useful in this. Others labor for themselves. The husbandman toils at the plough, with the expectation of enriching his own granary. The merchant traffics for gain to be appropriated to himself and family. The mechanic disposes his ware at a price to afford him a sustenance. The physician tenders his bill. The lawyer the amount of his fees. The laborer expects his wages. But the minister labors with no such immediate view to his own emolument. He, alone of men, goes and comes, studies and thinks, and labors for the good of others. He keeps no reckoning; he fore-goes emolument, spends his time, exhausts his strength, wastes his breath, is a stranger to ease, for the sake of precious immortal souls. Upon what principle, therefore, of justice or of honor is it, or can it be expected, that he should do this and not be so much as furnished with needful food and raiment? Have they a natural claim to his services? Have they a right to command them? Not at all. He is naturally as free from all men as others are, and has made himself a servant to all only at their invitation, and by his own consent. It is, therefore, just that he should receive a sustenance, leaving the necessity of it ont of view.

In the third place, the Bible inculcates the duty. It has no reserve or delicacy on the subject. He that calls ministers to their work, has taken care that they be supported. God has manifestly a solicitude on the subject, which is very observable under the Jewish dispensation. He charged the Levites with the service of the sanctuary, and gave for their subsistence the tithes and offerings of their brethren. And he repeatedly charges the latter never to forget this duty, lest the former, deprived of their only dependence, should fail for want of bread. "Take heed to thyself, that thou forget not the Levite as long as thou livest upon the earth." Again, he giveth the reason: "The Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him; for he hath no part or inheritance with thee."

When our Lord commissioned and sent forth the twelve to preach, he said: "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coates, neither shoes, nor yet staves, for the workman is worthy of his meat." Again, when he sent forth the seventy, he gave them a similar direction, adding, as before, "that the laborer is worthy of his hire." Paul is full on this subject. "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate to him that teacheth in all good things." "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in word and doctrine." "For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn; and the laborer is worthy of his hire." "Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? Or who feedeth a flock and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man, or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: for he that plougheth,should plough in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope, should be partaker of his hope. If we have sown to you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? And they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Gospel should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. 9: 7—14.

The duty, then, of supporting the Christian ministry being thus fully established, the following are obvious inferences:

THOMAS H. DESHIRI.

Devotion.

In this world of dejection and sorrow, how pleasant it is to have a friend in whom we can confide, and to whom the secret emotions of the soul may be communicated without reserve. And how greatly is this pleasure increased, when we know that our friend can enter into our feelings, appreciate our sorrows, and sympathize with us in our afflictions.—Such a friend is God. But He is even more than this. He not only sees, and knows, and feels our sorrows and distresses, but, with a hand of mercy, He kindly relieves them.—Knowing that God is our friend, and that He will never betray our confidence, the Christian goes to Him, and in the humble attitude of a suppliant, pours forth the secrets of his soul in prayer. Happy, indeed, is the condition of that man, who places implicit confidence in God, and who feels that His ears are ever open to the cries of the distressed, and His hands ever ready to assist the needy.—When retired from the bustling scenes of the world, when all around is hushed in silence, how sacred and heavenly is the communion of the pious souls with its Maker! If any earthly happiness can bear any comparison to that enjoyed beyond the confines of the present world, it is the happiness enjoyed by devotional exercise. O! how many hours of misery are counterbalanced by a few moments before the altar of prayer. Here then is a retreat, a sacred and hallowed retreat, where the weary and disconsolate may find relief, and pour forth their mournful complaints to a Being who is ever attentive to their interest, and who will in due time supply all their wants. And no matter how great may be our difficulties, or however poignant our sorrows, yet a few moments before the altar of prayer is sufficient to banish all, to ease the mind, and enable it to encounter with becoming firmness, all the trials and oppositions of human life.—How frequently has the Christian knelt before the throne of mercy, with a mind overcast with gloom, and a soul burdened with the most intense sorrow, and poured forth in secrecy and silence his sincere desires, when in a moment, as if by some magic spell, his gloom was banished, his countenance became radiant with joy, and a secret and heavenly peace succeeded. These devout aspirations to a throne of grace, constitute the food which supports and invigorates the spiritual life of the Christian. For the moment he forsakes God and ceases to pray, that moment he ceases to be a Christian. Prayer is the Christian's vital breath. Without devotion, the spiritual life, vigor and energy of the Christian, die within him; and instead of being warmed and animated by the holy influence of religion, he grows cold and indifferent, and proves recreant to the duties which involve his present and eternal welfare, and finally the last spark of religion is utterly extinguished, and the soul left in perfect darkness. But is it not passing strange that any individual, who has once experienced the soothing and tranquilizing influence of devotional exercises and feelings, should ever neglect this exercise? For let it be remembered, that not in all the most splendid and dazzling amusements of this world, is there to be found that calm and constant joy which results from devotion. Wicked men may boast, if they please, of their fancied enjoyments, of the excitement of the ball-room, or the pleasure of the giddy revel, yet all this can bear no comparison to that exalted pleasure experienced by the humble child of God, as he rises from his knees in communion with God, having his countenance beaming with joy divine, and his soul filled with love to God, and to his fellow-man. But above all, this pleasure brings no remorse, no bitterness of soul, no checks or reprovings of a guilty conscience. It is not that pleasure which lasts but for a moment, and then leaves the mind agitated and alarmed, but is that enjoyment which seems to be the natural element of man, which refines and purifies the affections, and which elevates and expands the soul. And did men but know, or could they be induced to believe, that happiness, the long desired object of the whole human family, was to be found in the humble and holy life of the Christian, derived from the exercises of devotion, how many more would seek enjoyment from this source than what really do? We would say, then, to those who never experienced this happiness, come and test the matter for yourselves: come and see if there are not pleasures in religion which the world, with all its glittering toys, titles and honors, can never afford.

Uniontown, August 5, 1846.

The Church at Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md., July 31, 1846.

To the Brethren of the "Church of God" in Pennsylvania and Maryland, greeting:—Grace and Peace be with you.

God having raised up a little band of disciples here, whose glory is in the Lord, and who desire to serve Him as He has ordained in His word, have been struggling, for about two years, to propagate the doctrines of a strictly Bible church among the people; but against great difficulties, such as the general prejudices of the other denominations, high rents of halls to meet in, and, lastly and chiefly, a number of unruly members who, since they have been expelled, have been going about the city holding disorderly and disgraceful meetings, under the name of the "Chuch of God" and "Elders of the Church of God." With their wholesale condemnatory harangues, they have disgusted the orderly who have become acquainted with their characters and doings, and brought reproach upon religious worship in general. We purpose, however, to rid ourselves of the odium brought upon the church by them, by exposing them to the world in the public prints.

The church had recently rented a small meeting-house at fifteen dollars per month, but was compelled to give it up, and has gone again to the Hall used for the last year past, where we pay nearly a hundred dollars per year; and here we expect to worship till we can either build a new house or purchase one of those for sale. The church has authorized Elder C. Price, our pastor for this year, to visit the brethren in the country, to raise some funds towards this project—to either build or buy a meeting-house. And as he will be at the camp-meetings, we hope the brethren will remember us. In a city like this, it is difficult to get congregations together in halls. Let us have a suitable house of our own, then we can open a Sabbath-school and prosper. We are willing to do all we can, and get all we can from others here, but expect the greatest part to come from the country. Remember, then, that brother Price will soon visit many of you to get your assistance. As soon as sufficient is subscribed, we shall either buy or build. For your beneficence you will receive our prayers.

In behalf of the church,

J. F. WEISHAMPEL, } Elders.

Camp-meetings.

In order that good may be effected at camp-meetings, a few things are needful; and to unfold to the minds of the brethren some of these necessary things, is the writer's object. Among these, much religion and genuine Bible zeal stand pre-eminent. Therefore, we say, to one and all, get revived before you go to camp-meeting, and then we may expect heart-cheering times. Let us fast and pray before the camp-meetings begin. Pray that God may make the meetings a blessing to our souls, and the souls of sinners likewise. Let special secret prayer be offered for particular individuals, for whom we feel specially concerned. But permit me to enforce the necessity of fasting in particular. Friends attend to this, both before and during the camp-meetings. It has been too much neglected. Crucify the flesh in this way, that the spirit may have a full possession of the inner man. The brethren and sisters ought to converse privately with sinners, and let the preaching brethren do the same. And after an invitation is given for mourners, let the brethren and sisters go fourth among the congregation, and try to persuade men to flee to Christ. Do not be backward in attending to this important work: let none hang back and refuse to do their duty, and then say they have no influence.—All men have influence, more or less, and it is a positive wrong not to exert it. The preaching ought to be co-operative; that is, the preaching brethren should understand each other, and preach alone for the salvation of souls. "Preach Christ and Him crucified," and let church government and such other things alone, until men are converted. To all we say, finally, work together in union. Let all things be done in love—let there be no dissimulation—be social—be hospitable—be engaged in all manner of earnestness—pray much and earnestly—fast—look to God, and on Him depend for success, after you have done your duties, but not before. Should these disconnected lines be the means of leading but a single person to do his duty towards himself, his God and his fellow-men the end for which they were penned, will be, in a measure. accomplished.

Shippensburg Camp-meeting.

August, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

We have thought proper to let our brethren know, through the Advocate, that after considerable consultation and hesitation, on the subject of camp-meetings, we have at last made up our minds to sacrifice some things of a temporal nature, and to pitch our tents in the silent grove for a few days, in order to worship the God of our fathers. We know there are sometimes difficulties in the way of those who undertake to encamp in the grove; but we think that the old adage will hold equally as good in this case as in others, viz: "that where there is a will there is a way." We hope our good brethren of Shippensburg, Orrstown, Fayetteville and other places, will come up to the help of the Lord after a Godly sort. These tabernacle feasts are a grand means, under God, of gathering in the out-casts, who are ready to perish, into the fold and family of God. Thousands have been converted at camp-meetings who, perhaps, never would, had it not been for such extra means. It is an incontrovertible fact, that there are a great many persons who, from some motive or other, go to camp-meetings, that will not go to meeting-houses, and often times they get convicted while there, and have no rest till God converts them or pardons their sins. A striking instance of the kind we will state. At a camp-meeting, some two or three years ago, an old lady, the mother of a large family, who also had been a very moral woman, came from a section of country where the life and power of religion was not preached; and while at the camp, she was powerfully convicted, and also happily converted to God. She then returned home, and stated to her husband and family what a happy change had taken place in her. They acknowledged the change, and saw that they too were sinners and exposed to eternal death. The children first sought, and also found the Lord; and, finally, the father also was converted. So that in the course of a week or two, the father, mother and six children, were happily converted to God, and likewise some of their relations. In the course of a few weeks, the aged father of that family was laid upon a bed of sickness and death; and although he was racked with great pains, resulting from a violent attack of Diarrhœa, yet, notwithstanding, he frequently praised God aloud for religion, and continued in a very happy and rapturous state of mind until he died. The next week one of his lately converted daughters sickened and died happy in the Lord. Now let me ask, were not those brethren and sisters, who labored for the convertion of that old lady, amply rewarded already for their labor of love, independent of what they expect to receive in the day of eternity? We might relate many like-instances still more striking, all resulting from camp-meetings. But notwithstanding all the good that has resulted from camp-meetings, there are some of our brethren who still oppose them, and likewise other extra means of grace, whilst the churches to which they belong are barren, and their friends and neighbors are going to the judgment in their sins. May God arouse us to the use of every means of grace for the salvation of precious souls!

Now we give a general invitation to all God's people, to come and unite with us in holding our camp-meeting. But at the same time we want it to be distinctly understood, that contentious persons and evil debators, will not be tolerated among us; and we hope that our brethren elsewhere will pursue the same course. There was much harm done in this way last year, and we hope and pray it may be carefully avoided this year. Then, we trust, the work of the Lord will again prosper, if we do our duty. And we think, also, that if our brethren in the ministry and the lay-members, (instead of leaving the pulpit and the altar immediately after preaching) would strive to persuade sinners to embrace religion, and labor more with the mourners, there would be more good done. Brethren, let us pray like Jabez of old, for "a blessing INDEED! at our camp-meetings this year; also, for an enlargement of our costs, for a rebuilding of the waste-places in Zion, for backsliders to be reclaimed, and for the conversion of sinners. But above all, and first of all, let us be sure to obtain a mighty shower of grace in our own souls, and then all will be right, and God will work to his name's glory and honor, and we shall be benefited: otherwise our labor may be all in vain. May God bless us, unite us together more and more, and finally save us with all the ransomed of the Lord in Heaven.

Yours, in love, &c.,

A DISCIPLE.

Letter from Elder George U. Harn.

PITTSBURG, PA., July —, 1846.

ESTEEMED BROTHEN:—

After an absence of near three weeks from home, on a tour through Allegheny, Fayette, Greene, and Washington counties, I resume the pen once more to address you. I left home on the steamboat Concul, on the 1st of June last, for Brownsville, a distance, by way of the very beautiful Monongahela, of about fifty-five miles. We were something less than seven hours on our journey. This gently-flowing stream, uninterrupted by rocks and falls, as your eastern rivers are, but particularly your eternal rock-ribbed Susquehanna, selvedged on either side, at this season, with the most beautiful natural green, and fortified with its lofty hills; in which are embedded inexhaustible strata, of the best quality of bituminous coal, presents a very sublime and picturesque scenery to the admirer of our old matron, mother nature, who, though she is standing upon the verge of her fiery grave, and has followed above one hundred and eighty generations of her earth-born intelligencies, to the valleys and shades of Death, still retains in her furrowed face marks and traits of beauty and grandeur, far surpassing that of the most exquisite artificial splendor, that so vainly decorates her ostentatious, but ephemeral children.

My feelings of admiration were much enlivened by the very agreeable, but unexpected company of Elder A. APPLER and brother J. CHRIST, of the "Church of God" in Uniontown, Md., who were on their return from the States of Indiana and Ohio. At B—— we parted—they taking stage for Cumberland, and thence by railroad to Baltimore, and I afoot to an uncle of father's, about six miles from town.

On my way, I was awoke from my musings, by the everlasting jargon of millions innumerable of the seventeenth year locusts.—Twelve years ago, if I mistake not, they were as plentiful in our native country, Frederick county, Md. At my arrival among my relatives, I was apprised of the death of an aged aunt of father's, who had lived about sixty-three years a virgin, and about forty-seven of them, an exemplary and pious member of the Methodist E. church. She emigrated from Md. in her youth, when Western Pa. was yet in its infancy. Beloved by all who knew her, and especially was she a favorite of my father. She left the shores of time for, I have no doubt, a blissful eternity, on the 23d of may last.—Her name was ANY HARN.

Friday I started on foot for Carmichaeltown, in Greene county, and preached at candle-light in the Cumberland Presbyterian House of Worship, to a very attentive audience, from Rom. 8: 8. Next evening the audience was much larger, and I addressed them from, "Prepare to meet thy God." On the Lord's day three times: the fore and afternoon, on the atributes of the "Churches of God" in Judea, and at night on the ordinance of washing of the saints feet. The house was full to excess in the evening, and some said we had six hundred hearers out. I suppose not less than this.

On Tuesday night, brother J. HICKENNELL joined me and preached to them. We were heartily requested to continue the meeting.—We lodged with an uncle of mine, THOMAS HARN, who, together with his wife, belong to the Cumberland Presbyterians.

During my stay, I was requested to visit the Green Academy, by its principal, Professor LOUGHRAN, who, from all appearance, seems well qualified for his high and responsible position. His school has a goodly number of young men in attendance as students. He professes to give instruction in all the branches commonly taught in such institutions: the languages not excepted. His highest charge is eight dollars a session, and boarding is quite moderate in the village. Considering all things, if I were going to an institution of the kind, and had not time and means to spend in a regular course at college, I know of no place I would make choice of before it. I held an interchange of sentiments with him, and concluded he was a liberal-minded Cumberland Presbyterian.

Wednesday, in company with brother H., passed on our way to the southern hills of Greene co., walking and riding turn about, as we had but one horse. Excepting Round-nob, in Bedford county, I do not know as I have ever seen so tumorous a county in my travels. We found the little "Church of God" in very good order, and all very much attached to brother WERTZ, its planter. Brother COOK was there watering it. He had just been through southern Ohio and western Va., and stated the people were anxious for the word of life. Some arrangements were being made for him to move his family to Greene county, and preach in conjunction with brother H., who travels a distance of two hundred miles around his circuit. This is burdensome enough for three men. But how is this burden to be removed? Some of those who have been preaching for many years, are wearing out and dying; others are turning their minds to the things of time. Upon the whole, I fear that some of our brethren are breaking their promises to God, made on their placing their hands to the Gospel-plough. Complaints are offered in consequence of lack of support, as their excuse for looking back to the world.—But, dear brethren, have any of us undergone what our brother Paul did in this respect, yet! If not, how can we stand before God and answer for the office we have held in time? I fear the love of this world, and the applause of men, are taking the place of the love of God and the salvation of souls!! Where is your boasted resolution and firmness in the cause you enlisted in? Can you only fight when victory is perching on our triumphant banner? Or did you enlist through all the ups and downs of this glorious war! O, do not seek repose while some of Messiah's officers are deserting, and others are falling under the enemies sword, covered all over with eternal glory. They are now receiving their wages, wearing crowns of immortal honour, and their worthy brows are decked with endless laurels. As they have been removed to other posts, let us fill theirs here.

Fraternally yours,

G. U. HARN.

Letter from Elder John C. Booth.

"O Lord revive thy Work."

Is it not our humble and daily petition, my Christian brethern, that God would revive his work at our approaching camp-meetings? Are we pouring out our hearts before God, imploring most earnestly, and with the importunity and faith of the Syrophenician woman, that every Achan within us, and within the bosom of the churches, may be removed, and that the Holy Spirit, with all his quickening powers, may descend upon us? Are our closets frequented, and do they witness our confessions and strivings in the performance of our duties? When casting our eyes over the people of our neighborhood, do our hearts ache in perceiving their awful devotion to the God of this world, and to their abominable idolatries? Who that has observed anything of their moral state, but will deeply deplore the undeniable fact, that "lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God," abound on every side? And is not this the very essence of abominable idolatry, so pointedly condemned throughout the scriptures?

The heart that manifestly seeks its gratifications in temporal rather than in spiritual and eternal treasures, is guilty of the sin of idolatry, much as it may seek to ward off the imputation. Permit me to ask, dear brethren, are not we, individually, and are not the churches, in a lamentable degree, involved in this sin? Have we not all, in a measure, shut out from the mind that tender concern for the honor of the Saviour, and promotion of His kingdom and glory, which alone can furnish evidence that we are the subjects of a kingdom that is not of this world, and that our citizenship is with the saints, the excellent of the earth, in whom is, and ought to be, all our delight? We profess to seek the prosperity of Zion above our chief joy. Are her precious interests resting daily upon the heart with the weight they demand? Is it not true, that the tree that bears no good fruit, deserves no good name? Are we distressed when reflecting upon the awful speed with which dear relations, intimate friends, and others, alike precious in their relations to the heart of infinite benevolence, are rushing down to endles perdition, without a thought of the slippery place on which they stand, nor of the certainty of the inevitable ruin awaiting them, should they persist in their present determined hostilities to the invitations of mercy. Of the nature of our obligations, dear bretheren, the unbelieving portion of the community are not so ignorant as we sometimes might suppose. They plainly see where and who is the inconsistent professor. And how cautious should this make us, least they should discover anything wrong in our behaviour? This consideration should opperate as a salutary check, and while it teaches us to avoid even the appearance of evil, should lead us to pray and to strive, that we may become proper examples to all around us. We ourselves were the children of wrath, even as others. We obtained mercy, and they are just as welcome, if penitent, and to all the blessings of the covenant as what we were. We, who were not a people, are now the people of God. Their hearts are not harder than were ours. We will not then yield to dispondency and unbelief, in reference to their situation, but will pray for an increase of faith, that therein we may give glory to God.

The sword of the spirit, which is the word of God, is intrusted to us, my brethren. So that while we personally feel its power, we may be enabled to wield it with energy, and, as it were, in close combat against sin; for just as the eagle that hasteth to the prey, so we all are hastening to the retribution of eternity; and many, very many, unprepared. Let us weep over our indifference to their future prosperity—let us not rest till the righteousness of Zion shall go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. Let us thank God and take courage in the heart-cheering promise, that if ever we go fourth in Divine strength to the rescue of souls from the grasp of the adversary, "we shall, doubtless, return again, rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us." May the Lord give us many souls at our approaching camp-meetings, as seals of our fidelity. And may we at last be permitted to meet and recognize them, adorned in white robes, in the Jerusalem above. Amen; so be it. Amen and Amen.

I remain yours in Christ,

JOHN C. BOOTH.

NEWBURG, July 30, 1846.

Letter from Elder Thomas Strohm.

RELIGION is one of the greatest blessings that the Divine Being ever bestowed upon the human family; the principles of which are calculated to make men and women happy in time and eternity. Yet, notwithstanding it is so great a blessing, it is much to be lamented that so many live in the utter neglect thereof, and not a few, even of those who profess to have experienced the happy influence of religion, live criminally in the neglect of the duties and obligations thereof. If we retrospect the past, and read the impressive history of primitive Christians, we shall find that they were more earnestly engaged in the service of God, than what we are at the present time. And they were not only more engaged, but they "contended more earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." And this, to my mind, is a clear evidence that they appreciated the religion of the Bible more than many of the modern professors. The aim and end of professors of religion in primitive times, in all things and under all circumstances, seems to have been, first, how to please God, and how to accomplish the most good. But at present it appears that many are more engaged in contending for party interests, and things not belonging to religion. The consequence of all this is, that the true happiness, religion is calculated to give, is not enjoyed; and the neglect of the means of grace, such as public worship, prayer-meetings, and the ordinances of "God's House," follow in a connected train. How often is it the case, that many absent themselves from public worship on the "Lord's Holy Day,"—that day that God commanded to be kept holy, for some frivolous reason, and then complain that they cannot enjoy religion as formerly? But no wonder; for while men live in the open violation of God's commands, they cannot expect to enjoy the happiness of religion. How many there are, also, that neglect nearly always to attend to prayer-meetings, though God has promised, "where two or three meet in His name, that he will be one in their midst."—Now those that neglect this their duty, in these and other respects, surely cannot hope to enjoy that degree of happiness in religion, that they otherwise might. And how many, also, neglect to attend the ordinances of God's house, although made obligatory upon all the people of God, by both precepts and examples. Such, too, cannot expect to enjoy the happiness of religion. Their conduct well shows for itself; for by the "fruit we shall judge the tree." These are the characters that are always dissatisfied. They usually complain a great deal, and see many wrong things in others, but none in themselves. It is the peculiar privilege of those, and those only, that walk blameless before God, to enjoy the happiness of religion; for Christ says: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Such, then, may confidently expect to enjoy the happiness of religion. Their "peace shall be as a river, and their righteousness as the waves of the sea:" and to them religion affords the greatest enjoyment: it makes them happy here and happy in eternity.

Yours, in Christian love,

THOMAS STROHM.

ELIZABETHTOWN, August 3, 1846.

Letter from Elder D. Wertz.

OLD HARMONY, BUTLER COUNTY, July 23, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I would take my pen in hand to drop a few lines for the CHURCH ADVOCATE, hoping you will be so kind as to give it a place in your paper. It has often been the feeling of my heart to communicate a few lines for the readers of the ADVOCATE, still I left it undone, from a sense of my incompetency for the task. However, such as I have I shall give.

We have had glorious meetings in different parts of God's vineyard, where as many as twenty and thirty professed religion. Last winter I held two protracted meetings in Greene county, Alepo township, where the Lord done a great work for the people, under my feeble labors as an evangelist. The people come as far as five and ten miles to meeting, so that the school-house would not contain them all. The cry was heard in every direction: "come and preach." When I first come to this meeting, some expressed themselves that WERTZ had better stay away.—The Universalists, also, got a good deal uneasy for some time. But I went in a mountain on the Lord's-day morning, and prayed to God with all my heart, to commence a work of grace in this country; and as I felt in former days, in the beginning of a good work, strong in faith and fervent in prayer, so I felt now, and accordingly I went preaching to the people the truth in love, and the Spirit commenced to opperate powerfully among the people. Some soon found Christ to the joy of their souls; and after hearing and believing, they were baptized, both men and women. At our first meeting, fourteen at one time, and then again four, in number, were baptized, and twenty-five, in number, united in church-fellowship. Some brethren living there, and others, have since been baptized. At our next meeting I baptized twenty-two in number. This was a heavenly time, and I hope will never be forgotten by that large concourse of people, who witnessed the solemn occasion. Some of the converts shouted the praises of God, and sinners wept aloud to see the parents of their believing children go in the watery tomb, to be buried with their living Head. There was one old sister, I have been informed, eighty years old. I have since baptized six more, making in all forty-six, and fifty-six received into church-fellowship. Thus, like in old times, they all heard the Gospel, soon believed with all their heart, and then were baptized.

After this, we set things in order by electing an Elder and a Deacon: THOMAS HINAMAN, elder, and ABRAHAM BYERS, deacon. We then appointed a time for the celebration of the other ordinances of the church. A great many people gathered at the time appointed. But the school-house being too small, we took the Lord's great temple, so that the people might all see the performance of it. About fifty attended to feet-washing, and about seventy to the Lord's supper. Some Baptists, some Methodists, and some Presbyterians united with us—we were all one in Christ Jesus. O! what a heaven on earth, to see God's people flock together and worship God in Spirit. May the Lord bless those dear brethren, and all the young converts in Greene county.

I then preached my farewell sermon to them at my second meeting, commending the dear young lambs to the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. From thence I went to my home, at brother ROBERT WHITLEY's; he is lying sick with the consumption, but is very happy in God. I preached in his house before I left. I also preached my farewell sermon to the church and people at Perryopolis. Most of the church and people here showed me a good deal of kindness and friendship. May the Lord bless the church and brethren in that place. Four or five of that little number, who professed religion at that revival, are gone home to rest. One sister died a most happy and triumphant death. She was a very holy and devout woman.

I am at present among my old Harmony brethren on this circuit. There are still a few good Israelites here praying the Lord to revive his work, and looking for full redemption. But we need not seek or pray for persecutions: we have plenty of that. Sects and parties are in the field contending for their rights, and sinners are railing, mocking and ridiculing. May the Lord grant that the gospel canon may be fired at those enemies, loaded with Heaven's amunitions, and cause many of their captain's enemies to give up the battle, and fight no longer against God! Amen.

Yours, truly,

D. WERTZ.

Letter from Elder F. N. Barlow.

MARIA FORGES, August 1, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

As the Lord is working among us here, and that powerfully, too, I have thought that you and your readers might be glad to hear that the Lord is pouring out his spirit, and converting some of the dear people at Maria Forges. I came to this place last Friday evening, a week ago, and commenced a protracted meeting, expecting to hold it over the Sabbath only; but on Saturday, and Saturday evening, souls began to cry out, "what shall we do."

Our meeting continued to increase in interest, and on Sabbath morning we had the largest concourse of people ever known to have assembled in this place. The people appeared deeply affected by the truth, and the same evening we had a soul-cheering time in seeing sinners turning to God. The same affecting sight has continued every evening since. Last evening we had a melting season; six mourners came forward, who cried mightily to God for pardon through Christ. And in answer to the prayers of God's people, and through the mercy of a merciful Jesus, three souls were happily converted to God. There never was so great an excitement here on the subject of religion. Yea, the Lord, my brother, is evidently working a great work among the dear people here. About fifteen souls have been hopefully converted since the commencement of the meeting, and numbered, we trust, among the precious lambs of the fold of Christ. The interest seems to be still increasing.—Pray for us, brethren, that the Lord may still be with us, and move the hearts of the people to come to Him, and that his hand may be upon the little ones, and ever keep them from falling.

This great work is principally owing to the union of God's people here. The dear Methodist brethren, at this place, have united with us, not, we think, in appearance only, but in reality. Their souls have been diligently engaged in the work. O, how I love them!—My soul delights in them, for they have proved themselves to be Christians, indeed. O, may this bond of Christian union and affection be strengthened! for in union there is strength. This fact has been doubly proved here. I cannot easily say too much in favor of the people here. They have treated us with the utmost kindness. This has been shown in different ways by their works.

1st. When the brethren were worn out in singing and praying, the young people come forward to assist us in singing. Thus has the work gone on harmoniously; all seem to be deeply interested.

2d. I stated the situation of brother E. LOGUE to them. A subscription paper was started among them, and without any trouble, eleven dollars was raised for the relief of our brother, which we enclose in this letter, desiring you to send it to him the first opportunity. Please send him my address, with my request that he should write to me. Thus, I say, have the people proved their affection and kindness for us. May the good Lord, as he has opened their hearts in liberality in this matter, also open them to receive the truth and live.—Brother GLENN has assisted me in the meeting: he is a dear young brother.

Yours, in the bonds of love,

F. N. BARLOW.

P. S.—August 3. Since writing the above, the Lord has still manifested his saving power in the conversion of four others, to the light of His divine countenance. Pray much for us, that the Lord would continue His presence among us here. We are pretty much all worn out. O! that we had some of our brethren here to help in this time of need.—You may expect to hear from me again.

Letter from Brother Jacob Miller.

CHERRY GROVE, CARROLL COUNTY, ILL., July 25, 1846

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take this opportunity to inform you that we received the ADVOCATE, and are highly pleased with it. We wish you great success, and hope the brethren, generally, will not be backward in supporting it. For my part, I will do all I can for it here. We have not complied with the terms yet, but as soon as we can get some eastern money, we will enclose the amount and send it to you. We hope, therefore, under our peculiar circumstances that our paper will not be stopped.—However, if it is not consistent for you to send it on without strictly complying with the terms, we shall not think it strange. We cannot ask you to break your word.

I am happy to inform you that we are all well, and are well satisfied with this country. We have prayer-meeting at my house regularly, and some of the Methodist brethren attend and join in with us and help us. I gave one of them your work on REGENERATION to read, and he is highly pleased with it, and says that he received more light than he ever had before. He wants one of the preaching brethren to come to this country and preach for us. He thinks, as I myself always have thought, that he could do a great deal of good here. We would be glad if brother HARN, or some other brother, could come and preach for us. The people turn out well, and are very orderly and attentive to preaching.

I received a letter from brother A. J. KAUFFMAN, of Lancaster county, Pa., informing me that he had been to this country, but could not call and see me, which he was very sorry for. He is highly pleased with the country, and says that if he can sell, he will move out.—And he thinks that there will be many more of the brethren coming out shortly, from different places in the East.

I bless God that I feel more and more encouraged to serve Him in His own appointed way. We have had some refreshings from the Lord in our little prayer-meetings, and my prayer is, that we may always feel that He is present with us when we meet in His name. God bless you and all the brethren. I beg an interest in all your prayers.

Yours, in Christian love,

JACOB MILLER.

Letter from Elder John Hickernell.

WESTMORELAND COUNTY, PA., July 22, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This will inform you that I am now living in Bethany, a small town situated about three miles and a-half west of Mount Pleasant.—On yesterday I came home and found all well, and this morning I thought of writing a few lines to you, and let you know that I am still trying to proclaim the Gospel to a lost and ruined world.

My field of labor, at present, is about two hundred and fifty miles. I have no one to assist me at this time; but I expect that brother M. W. COOK will take a part of my circuit after the camp-meetings are over, which will releave me considerably.

I would just say that brother Cook and myself visited a neighborhood in the State of Virginia. We held a meeting near the forks of Big Fish Creek, where we found a number of friendly folks. The prospects there are tolerably good. We judge from the effects the Gospel had upon the hearers. We had likewise several invitations to preach in other neighborhoods.

After our camp-meetings are over, we purpose holding a protracted meeting in that place, and see what the Lord will do for them.

The church in Greene county is doing well. Not one of them, as yet, has backslid or apostatized from the faith. I love to see converts maintaining their integrity.

I intend, after a few days, to take a journey down the Ohio river, about two hundred and fifty miles from this, to assist in holding a camp-meeting in Athens county, Ohio. Brothers HARN and WERTZ are going along, where we expect to meet brothers COOK and RICHMOND. May the Lord bless the meeting to the conversion of many souls!

A question: Where is our dear brother J. M. KLINE? We feel somewhat concerned about him. Some think he has left Cambria county, but I have opposed the idea. Others suppose that he is sick. There is a general inquiry made. We don't know his Post Office address,* or we should have been in search of him. My Post Office address is Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, Pa.

No more at present, but

Remain yours in love,

JOHN HICKERNELL.

* Brother KLINE'S Post Office address is Newman's Mills, Indiana county, Pa.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

The intention of Government towards Mexico.—The Washington letter writer of the Baltimore American mentions the following as the designs of our government towards Mexico: The dismemberment of Mexico is the design of the Administration, and that not only by the invasion of California, but by seizure and possession of the entire country beyond the line of Tampico, on the Gulf of Mexico, and the same parallel on the Pacific. This seizure embraces the richest and most valuble provinces of Mexico. It includes all of California, from the head to the cape, and not alone the Provinces bordering on the Rio Grande. Parts of Jalisco, Gaudalaxara and Zacatecas, and all of Sonora, Durango, San Louis Potosi, New Leon, Chihuahua, Coahuila and Tomaulipas are to be the fruits of this conquest. The Government are ready to settle the question now, if Mexico will yield up the country named, or consent to run a line from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, upon the line stated. All this is in contemplation now, secretly but seriously, and the regiment raising for California is the first fruits of the expedition.

Distressing Dispensation.—SUDDEN DEATH OF THREE SISTERS.—The Cincinati Commercial, states that on Thursday, week, one of the Misses MCCUE, of that city, went to market, returned home and died, as it is supposed from the effects of the heat, soon after. On Friday, the second sister died in the same manner, after returning from the funeral. On Saturday, the third sister died in the carriage, while attending the funeral of the second sister. The young ladies were all in apparent health to the time of their death.

Good news from Persia.—Under date of March 2, the Rev. Mr. PERKINS writes to the puritan the following gratifying intelligence:

"Our mission, for the last six weeks, has presented some of the most interesting scenes that I ever witnessed on earth, or ever expect to witness this side of Heaven. The Lord has made bare his arm in the midst of us, in a manner that causes us to wonder as well as rejoice, in view of His soverign mercy and grace. A great work of salvation has been wrought in our Male and Female Seminaries, as far as mortals can judge—and we have our utmost discrimination in relation to it,—and it is now extending into some of the villages. The work is marked by great stillness, solemnity, pungency and power. 'It is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes.' It is so clearly the work of God, that even the indifferent among the Nestorians marvel and stand in awe; and as yet, no opposition is manifested to it from any quarter."

Mormon Expedition.—The whole number of teams attached to the Mormon expedition is about three thousand seven hundred, and it is estimated that each team will average at least three persons, and perhaps four.—The whole number of souls now on the road may be set down in round numbers at twelve thousand. From two to three thousand have disappeared from Nauvoo in various directions. Many have left for Council Bluffs, by the way of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers; others have dispersed to parts unknown, and about eight hundred or less still remain in Illinois. This comprises the entire Mormon population that once flourished in Hancock county. In their palmy days they probably numbered between fifteen and sixteen thousand souls, most of whom are now scattered upon the prairies, bound for the Pacific slope of the American continent.

Speed of a Locomotive.—An experiment was lately made on the Great Western line in England for the purpose of exhibiting the attractive capacity of the broad-guage locomotive. A new engine, dragging a passenger train of one hundred tons, performed the distance from London to Bristol, (118 miles,) in 2h. 26m. 46sec. stoppages included. The average speed attained on level portions of the line was nearly sixty miles per hour. On rapidly desending gradients a maximum speed of from seventy to seventy-two miles an hour was reached, while again, on sharp curves and steep inclines, the rate diminished to about fifty miles an hour.

Number of British Christians.—By a recent report, it appears that the British Nonconformist churches were enumerated as follows:

INDEPENDENTS.—In England and Wales 2316 churches.

BAPTISTS.—In Britain and Ireland, 1676 churches.

PRESBYTERIANS, Orthodox.—In England 120 churches.

CALVANISTIC METHODISTS.—In England and Wales 716 churches.

METHODISTS.—In England and Ireland, 4000 societies. Besides the "Friends" and other religious communities.

The Evangelical Protestant congregations in England and Wales amount to at least eight thousand.

The Crops.—The crops of grain in Western New York are said to be unusually abundant; in other portions of the State they are good, although some damage has been done by the heavy rains.

The editor of the Washington (Pa.,) Reporter, who has been on a tour through the greater portion of that State, represents the harvest to be three-fold greater than any for many years past. The grain is all of the very best quality. Oats and grass are of unexampled productiveness. The fruit crop is also very abundant.

In Maryland and Virginia the crops are generally good, and even in the districts which were visited with such tremendous rains, the farmers have had a tolerably fair harvest.

The Anthers (Georgia) Banner says that the grain crop in that region, judging from present appearances, will exceed those of any year since the settlement of the country.

The Savanah Republican says that the rice crop, on many plantations, promises an unusually early harvest, and that the corn and root potatoe crops are very fair.

Papal Authority.—A case has just occurred in Philadeldhia, which shows the authority that the Romish bishops exercise over their parishioners in free America.—The Philadelphia Sun says, "We have been informed that Bishop KENRICK refuses to permit DENNIS LEATHY to be interred in his own lot, in the burying-ground of St. Michael's church, for which he has paid—and the deed of which lot he held—because Mr. LEATHY was an Odd Fellow and a Mason, and refused to reveal the private affairs of those orders at confession." Such outrages should be checked in the bud, before custom has converted them into law. For a priest to deny a man the right of sepulchre, on his own ground, is something new, we believe, in this country.

Mount Hecla.—The eruption of Mount Hecla still continued, according to the latest accounts of the 15th of April. The pillars of fire rose from three new craters to the height of 14,000 English feet, and were broader than the largest river in the island, the Pierrson. The lava has already formed several high hills. Pieces of punic stone, or scoriæ, weighing 2 cwt., were thrown to a distance of a league and a half. The ice and snow which covered the mountain for many centuaries are wholly melted, and the river Rangen has, in consequence, frequently overflowed its banks.

The First Temperance Newspaper on the principle of total abstinance ever established in the world, was published in 1826–7—just twenty years ago—by Rev. WILLIAM COLLIER, a Baptist clergymen. Of this paper WM. LLOYD GARRISON was for a considerable time the editor, in which capacity he evinced great abillity as a writer. The doctrine of total abstinance has won its way to extensive popularity since that period, but it was regarded as a sad heresy then and subjected its defenders to the charge of "fanaticism," "going to far," "putting back the cause &c. &c.

Terrible.—The Coroner of New York on Saturday and Sunday last held inquests on the bodies of eighteen persons, fifteen of whom died from the excessive heat of the weather.

Congress.—IMPORTANT BILLS PASSED.—The Senate has passed the Independent Treasury Bill, and the House has concurred in the amendment of the Senate, prohibiting the issuing of Treasury drafts as currency.

The House has passed the Warehouse Bill by a vote of 117 to 52. It had already passed the Senate. The Naval Appropriation Bill has also passed the House. An amendment appropriating $100,000 for the construction of a dry dock at Philadelphia was passed by the casting vote of Vice President DALLAS. An amendment appropriating $75.000 to commence was rejected. So that all hope of an oppropriation to this object this session is at an end.

Potato Rot in Ireland.—We are sorry to say the potato disease has made its appearance to an alarming extent in Ireland. Mention is made in the journals, from nearly every district of Ireland, that the potato rot has appeared in this year's crop. The potato crop is entirely destroyed in Crookhaven, and around for miles. The people are in an absolute state of bewilderment. The blast has been nearly universal; and such is the effect, that the stalk and stems thus blasted, break off quite rotten like, and the young potatoes found are mostly black. All the change has taken place within the last fortnight; until then every thing seemed promising.

Gen. Paredes has been re-elected to the Presidency, by the Congress of Mexico. Gen. Bravo has been chosen Vice-president, and will hold the reins of government, while Paredes is gone to meet the Americans as Commander-in-chief of the Mexican army, for which post he is clothed with ample powers, while great exertions have been made to furnish him with the necessary supplies—so that another bloody and desperate struggle may be expected.

Growth of London.—A gentleman residing in London and writing home, states that official data may be found from the fact that within the past fifteen years, no less than 48,000 houses of various kinds have been built; and at the present time there is going on a single negociation for the erection of four thousand dwelling houses on an estate at the extreme west end of the city.

A Lead Mine Discovered in Chester co.—Two gentlemen in passing through Chester county, Pa., near Phœnixville, a few days since, saw a lead mine which was discovered the day before by a laboring man, while digging on the farm of PETER KINSEY. They saw the ore tried, and ten pounds of ore produced six pounds of pure lead, of which they have samples to show.

The Harvest.—From all parts of the country we have the most cheering accounts in regard to the crops. The Wheat crop is mostly harvested and is very heavy. The oats and corn also promises a rich yield.

Think of It.—The New York Sun says that the number of passengers landing in that city from foreign ports, average daily 630, or over 26 an hour. The increase in the last six months over the corresponding period last year is 12,822.

The Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, has received an anonymous letter enclosing $50, the amount purloined by some Government officer thirty-two years ago. Conscience stung him at last.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Religious Decision.

There is no such thing as neutrality in matters of religion. He who had not entered the city of refuge under the law, Deut. xix., was liable to die by the hand of the avenger of blood, although he might be on the road thither. There was no safety but within the walls. So is there no salvation for any soul which has not actually come to Christ, complied with his terms, accepted his gracious overtures. How long will you, dear reader, delay to do this? We are no advocates for precipitancy in matters of religion; but we believe that in regard to the first and the decisive act that of faith in Christ, the duty is immediate. God's commands contain not one word adapted to sanction delay. The urgency of the case is such as, to a right-minded person, renders delay intolerable. Deliberation here can be but a cloak of a mischievous, and perhaps fatal procrastination. Hasten to intrust to the gracious Savior the keeping of your undying soul. Then let it not be long before you proclaim yourself on the Lord's side Exod. xxxii. 26; and yield to his cause, by active devotedness, all your time, your talents your energies, your influence. Be able to adopt the noble confession of the Apostle Paul: "Whose I am, and whom I serve," Acts xxvii. 23. Rememebr that the night cometh, in which no man can work. The grave cannot praise God, death cannot celebrate Him; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for his truth. The living, the living, he shall praise God, Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19. What we intend ever for God must be done now. Awake, awake, then; put on strength, Isa. iii. 1. Be openly decided for God. If ever there were times in which neutrality could be tolerated, these are not such. Consecrate your service this day unto him, 1 Chron. xxix. 5. And may his grace make and preserve you an eminently devoted and useful Christain.

Making Secret Prayer Pleasant.

1. Be regular in the observance of it.—Arrange your affairs with reference to your daily seasons of retirement; and do it with just as much purpose as with reference to your ordinary meals, and if you are ever irregular in the latter, with more. More depends upon this than most are aware.

2, Watch over your life and conversation. If you suffer yourself to be betrayed into any irregularity of conduct, or frivolity in conversation, it will press like lead upon your stomach as you enter your closet. There is meaning in the words of the Apostle—"Watching thereunto with all perseverance."

3. Prepare for it by meditation. The mind that has been engrossed, as it is sometimes necessary that it should be, in secular business, needs time to recall itself, that it may gain a proper attitude to commune with Jehovah. You must labor to secure the conception of a present God. You are alone with a grieved, offended, yet compassionate Friend. The Friend is He, before whom the angels veil their faces. There must be preparation, in order to enter suitably into communion with Him.

4. Read, in connection with your devotions, a few pages of Baxter's Saint's Rest, Kempis' Imitation of Christ, and, above all, devotional portions of the Bible.

5. Let your heart dictate every word uttered in the form of prayer. In other words, do not go to the closet merely to discharge your conscience in relation to the duty, but go there to unburthen your soul of its emotions; and while there, do not utter words significant of desire you do not feel. If you have not the emotion which you ought to have, do not mock God by expressions which signify its possession, but meditate and pray for it till it is awakened; and when it comes, utter it.

6. Pray much to Christ. He can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. He was tempted—tried—in all points as we are, and presents himself before us in a form to meet our sympathies and invite our most confiding approaches. Why did Stephen in the hour of trial, pray, Lord Jesus receive my spirit?—There is a volume of instruction in that prayer. It points us to one who, having trod the path of temptation, suffering, death, bears towards us the heart of a brother—that can be touched; combined with omnipotence to save.

What Education is.

The multitude think, that to educate a child is to crowd into its mind a given amount of knowledge; to teach the mechanism of reading and writing; to load the memory with words; to prepare a boy for the routine of trade. No wonder, then, that they think almost every person fit to teach. The true end of education is to unfold and direct aright our whole nature. Its office is to call fourth power of every kind; power of thonght, affection, will, and outward action; power to observe, to reason, to Judge, to contrive; power to adopt good ends firmly and pursue them efficiently; power to govern ourselves and to influence others; power to gain and spread happiness. Reading is but an instrument; education is to teach its best use. The intellect was created not to receive passively a few words, dates, and facts, but to be active for the acquisition of truth. Accordingly, education should labor to inspire a profound love of truth, and to teach the processes of investigation. A sound logic, by which we mean the science of art, which instructs us in the laws of reasoning and evidence, in the true methods of inquiry, and in the sources of false judgments, form an essential part of a good education.—Channing.

In advance of the world.—Homer begged for bread, and sung for crusts, at the gates of ten cities; which afterward fought for the honor of giving him birth. The merits of his poems, which have excited the admiration of the world, were not appreciated in his own times. The really great and good are seldom appreciated by their immediate cotemporaries.—The reason is, they rise so high above the common horde of mortals, that they are not understood and appreciated, umil society, in its natural progress in succeeding generations, arrives at their attainments.

Butter Making.

Milk Apartments, &c.—The milk cellar should be deep, well ventilated and dry; the bottom covered with stone flagging. Bricks will absorb milk and other liquids that may fall upon them; and will soon contract mildew, the smell of which, like the odor of cheese, vegetables, fish or fowl of any kind, will be imparted to the cream and butter. Over this cellar should be the dairy room, with shelves to set milk upon in cool weather; the cellar to be used during the extremes of heat and cold. The temperature of the milk apartment, if possible, should never be above sixty degrees nor below forty-five, Yet kettles should not stand in the dairy room, neither should churning, cheese-making, nor cleaning milk vessels be done there, but in a convenient room near by.

Cream may be kept much longer if it be kept in a white oak vessel, with a tight cover, and a faucet or tap near the bottom, to draw off the milk when it settles, before the customary daily stirring. The quality of the butter is much improved by this management, If the milk be not drawn off and it be churned with the cream, the butter will be longer in coming, and it will soon become rancid. Butter will come quickly at all seasons of the year, if the cream be of a temperature of from sixty to seventy-five degrees; to this end use hot water in winter, and ice in summer; but never add either to the cream, in or out of the churn.

Salt.—Pure salt crystalized into perfect cubes. All other forms of crystaltzation found in common salt, arise from impurities; those of a needle shape in Liverpool bag, or blown salt, indicate the presence of lime, Magnesia, &c. One great cause of the failure in making good, butter may be traced to the use of impure salt. Rock salt, and the large lumps of Turk's Island, washed, dried, and finally pulverized, are preferable to all other kinds, being highly preservative, and hardening the butter, so that it will be sooner ready to work over in warm weather.—The Liverpool bag, or blown salt, the Salina salt, in small bags from New York, and the fine part of every kind of imported salt, contains a great portion of impurity. Less than one ounce of pure salt is sufficient for a pound of butter; (many put in but half an ounce) in all cases leave out sugar and saltpetre.

In the manufacture of cheese, a preference is sometimes given to Liverpool bag, or blown salt. This contains salt of lime and magnesia, which attracts moisture from the air, and have the desirable effect of softening the cheese; and the pugnant bitter taste which they impast to it, is an improvement in the estimation of some.

General Remarks.—The cream should not rise more than thirty-six hours; it should be sweet when taken off, and sweet when churned; yet there is a degree of maturity to be acquired by keeping.

The kegs for making butter should be made of white oak, bilging in the form of casks, for the more perfect exclusion of air, and convenience of transportation.—If the butter is not to be sent to a warm climate, or a foreign market, let the bilging kegs have moveable covers, to accommodate inspection: they should be soaked in a strong brine, made also of pure salt, in order that justice may be done to the purchasers in tare, and to save the bottom from being spoiled for one or two inches deep all round, from its contact with dry wood. In case the wood is anything but white oak, there is danger of giving an unpleasant taste to the whole. For the convenience of families, the size should vary from twenty-five to fifty pounds. A large keg of butter is exposed to the air for a long time while on broach in a small family, and the bottom in consequence becomes rancid.

The consumer will cheerfully pay an extra price for one hundred pounds of butter packed in four kegs instead of one. No salt should be put on the sides, bottom, or between the layers. If the kegs are made with covers, put a cloth over the top, and cover that with pure fine salt.—Keep a cloth wet with strong brine, over the butter, while the keg is filling, to exclude the air. The practice of washing butter is not approved of in Europe; it destroys its fragrance and sweetness by dissolving the sugar of milk, which it is said is always present in good butter.—It is practiced in Holland, when the article is designed for exportation to India; then the operation is usually performed with cold strong limpid brine, made of pure salt and pure water; water that has lime in it will not answer, as the lime is readily absorbed by the butter.

To exclude the air more effectually during the process of putting down, let a little melted sweet butter be run into the cavity, where the bottom-head and staves come together, then after each layer is completed, let the dairy-woman pass her finger round so as to press the butter hard and close against the side.—Providence Transcript.

English Baptist Missionary Society.—From the report of this society, submitted at its late annual meeting, it appears that its receipts during the past year have amounted to £22,586, being an increase of £2,593 over the income of the previous year. The expenditures were £25,191. The number of communicants, added to the mission churches last year, is 1,866; the whole number of communicants being 39,202. The monthly sale of the Juvenile Mssionary Herald amounts to 45,000.

I love Christ more than this.—A Karen woman offered herself for baptism. After the usual examination, I inquired whether she could give up her ornaments for Christ. It was an unexpected blow. I explained the spirit of the gospel. I appealed to her own consciousness of vanity. I read her the apostle's prohibition, 1 Tim. 2-9. She looked again and again at her handsome necklace, then with an air of modest decision that would adorn, beyond all ornaments, any of my sisters whom I have the honor of addressing, she took it off, saying, "I love Christ more than this." A Family without a God.—A little boy whose father possessed no religion, and neglected family worship, spent some time in a pious family where he was instructed in the simple truths of the Bible. While one day conversing about the greatness and goodness of God, he made this natural remark—"We hav'nt got any God at papa's house."

POETRY.

[From the New York Observer.]

LICENSED? TO DO WHAT?

Licensed to make the strong man weak;
Licensed to lay the wise man low;
Licensed a wife's fond heart to break,
And make her children's tears to flow.

Licensed to do thy neighbor harm;
Licensed to kindle hate and strife;
Licensed to nerve the robber's arm;
Licensed to whet the murderer's knife.

Licensed thy neighbor's purse to drain;
And rob him of his very last;
Licensed to heat his fevrish brain,
Till madness crown thy work at last.

Licensed, like spiders for a fly;
To spread thy nets for man, thy prey;
To mock his struggles—suck him dry—
Then cast the worthless hulk away.

Licensed where peace and quiet dwell,
To bring disease, and want, and wo;
Licensed to make this world a hell,
And fit man for a hell below.

MUSIC.

There's music in the breeze that sighs,
Along the lonely shore;
And still more deep-toned music in
The troubled ocean's roar.
There's music in the thunder-clap,
And in the dreadful crash,
That marks the desolation of
The vivid lightning's flash.

There's music in the thrilling laugh,
Of joyful infancy,
Which bursts from its enraptured heart,
Employ'd in happy glee.
There's music in the wild winds rush.
And in the awful storm,
When the spirit of the tempest shewd
His dark and angry form.

There's music in the worlds that roll
In silence through the sky;
Unwritten, though that music be,
'Tis sweetest melody.
There's music when the spirit bows
Beneath affliction's rod,
Submissively pours forth its prayers,
Before the throne of God.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill; a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And oh to breathe each tale we've heard,
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By chosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but litte good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide,
Would fain another's faults efface:
How can it pleasure human pride,
To prove humanity but base?
No: let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known;
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span:
Then, oh! the little time we say,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

LONG, LONG, AGO.

Shed not a tear o'er your friend's early bier,
When I am gone—when I am gone—
Smile if the slow-tolling bell you shall hear,
When I am gone—I am gone—
Weep not for me when you stand round my grave;
Think what He's done his beloved to save;
Think of the crown all the ransom'd shall have,
When I am gone—I am gone—

Plant ye a tree which may wave over me;—
When I am gone—when I am gone—
Sing ye a song when my grave ye shall see:
When I am gone—I am gone—
Come at the close of a bright summer's day:
Come when the sun sheds his last lingering ray;
Come and rejoice that I thus passed away—
When I am gone—I am gone.

Plant ye a rose that may bloom o'er my bed—
When I am gone—when I am gone—
Breathe not a sigh for the blest early dead—
When I am gone—I am gone—
Praise ye the Lord that I'm freed from all care—
Serve ye the Lord that my bliss ye may share—
Look up on high and believe I am there—
When I am gone—I am gone—

Recruits Wanted.

As the Lord is again reviving His work in sundry places, throughout the bounds of the several Elderships, our agents are affectionately requested to renew their efforts to procure additional subscribers for the Advocate. From one of our exchange papers, we see that a neighboring minister sent on twenty-seven new subscribers for their paper, about the close of a revival of religion. In seasons of revivals is the time to get new subscribers. Let each agent and friend of the paper try what he can do. As pay-day is knocking many off, we want others added.

Christian Union.

The article on this subject is deferred, for several reasons, till our next.

Another Serious Fire.

On Thursday afternoon the 25th ultimo., a serious fire broke out in the Steam Saw Mill, belonging to John McAllister, Esq., situated near the upper end of Second street, in this borough. The weather being hot and dry at the time, and a considerable wind from the East, the fire spread rapidly, and in a very short time, the said Saw Mill, the Burr-block manufactory, attached to the Saw Mill, and belonging to Wm. H. Kepner; the adjoining Smith shop, dwelling and stable, belonging to Mrs. Wenrich; and another small house and stable owned by J. M. Awl, together with a few other stables and out-buildings, were entirely destroyed.

Several other buildings in the neighborhood were several times on fire, and partially injured; but through the vigilance of our active and efficient firemen, the flames were arrested and the properties saved.

Mr McAllister's loss is estimated at three thousand dollars. His insurance on the same was one thousand six hundred dollars. Mr. Kepner's loss is supposed to be about two thousand dollars, and no insurance. Mrs. Wenrick's loss is about ten or twelve hundred dollars, and no insurance. Mr. Awl's loss is estimated at one thousand dollars or upwards, and nearly covered with the same amount of insurance.

The total loss of property is supposed to be about seven thousand dollars, and the insurance on the same about two thousand six hundred dollars.

Sabbath-Schools.

These nurseries of the church are attracting some special attention among the friends of our beloved Christianty, in various places. We hope it will soon be so every where. The leaven is working, and we should feel glad if it were to diffuse itself throughout the whole church.

We are much pleased that the Lord is stiring up the hearts of some of our friends and co-adjutors, to write on this important subject, for the benefit of the patrons of the Anvocate. Our readers will find an excellent article on this subject in this No. We hope our friends of the quill will continue to advocate this and other good and benevolent causes, with becoming zeal and energy.

The World's Convention.

This great and important Convention met in London on the 19th ult. We shall try to give the acts and doings of said Convention, at as early a date as possible. We bespeak the earnest prayers of the church in behalf of the same.

Foreign News.

From the foreign papers we glean the following items of news:

There is a most distressing famine in Jerusalem, and the adjacent country. There are also various kinds of plagues. The inhabitants are said to be in great consternation and distress.

Flour in England is selling at $8 per barrel. Iron has taken a rise since the passage of the late Tariff law by the American Congress. The cotton market has likewise improved.

Another attempt has been made on the life of King Lewis Philippe. This makes the seventh attempt at assassination from which Lewis Philippe has escaped.

The marriage of the Russian Emperor's daughter, the Princess Olga, with the Prince Royal of Wurtemburg, has recently been celebrated with great pomp.

The cholera has made its appearance in various places on the continent of Europe.

The question of a desolation of church and state in the European countries, is now under serious consideration.

The editor of the Lutheran Observer, now in Europe, in a letter to that paper written from Berlin, Prussia, May 16, says:

"The public mind in Prussia, and indeed in Germany, generally, is at present much interested in a general Synod, called by the King, to commence its meeting shortly in this city, and deliberate on the important question of relieving His Majesty entirely, or to a great extent, of the government of the church, and transfer it to the clergy and congregations. The King professes to be anxious to get rid of the royal prerogative of directing and controlling ecclesiastical matters, and of confiding it to the church; and the propriety and mode of effecting this measure, are to be considered and decided at the Synodical meeting of the ministers, to be held in two or three weeks."

Free-Will Baptists.

As some of the writers for this paper are somewhat puzzled to know who the people are denominated the Church of God, and how far they agree with the F. W. Baptists, we beg leave to refer them to an article written on the Church of God, in a work entitled "He Passa Ekklesia;" or, "History of all the Religious Denominations in the United States."

After reading that article, and gaining from it the requisite information, we hope they will see the impropriety of nick-naming the church or people of God, and the propriety of according to others what they wish for themselves.

Railroad Bridge.

This noble structure is now progressing rapidly. The peers are nearly all rebuilt, and the wood-work is fast going on. About one-half is already put up, and the other half is partly prepared and ready for being put up. It is now confidently expected that the bridge will be ready for crossing by the end of this year.

Revival in Harrisburg.

Quite a considerable work of grace has been going on in the "Church of God" in this place, since the late camp-meeting at brother Bowman's, under the ministry of brother McFadden, the present pastor of the church. Some thirty or thirty odd have been hopefully converted: twenty have been addmitted to church membership, and ten have been baptized.

The church here has been much revived, and the congregations greatly increased, ever since brother McFadden has taken charge of the congregation. We hope the Great Shepherd and Bishop of souls will continue to be merciful and gracious, both to pastor and people, and prosper them yet more abundantly.

Revival at Maria Forges.

The revival at Maria Forges, in Blair county, Pa., under the ministry of brother Barlow and others, is still going on. From last advices, about forty professed a change and saving interest in Christ, and about twenty-five or thirty had been baptized and added to the church. We hope our brother Barlow will favor us with particulars, according to promise in his last.

Melancholy Incident.

A man named Henry Thoman, a German, was found in the Susquehanna, on Tuesday the 25th, a short distance above the water-house, supposed to have been accidentally drowned while bathing, as his clothes lay near where he was found.

Harrisburg Bridge.

We understand that a considerable number of proposals for rebuilding the old Harrisburg Bridge, have been received. The company will hold a meeting shortly.

York County Camp-meeting.

This meeting was held near Siddenstown, on brother Joseph Elcock's land. It commenced on Monday the 10th of August, and closed on Saturday morning the 15th.

The meeting was rather small in regard to tents, but the congregations were pretty large, and the "times and seasons" interesting and good. There were some converts, but how many we have not heard.

There were about twelve or fifteen preachers in attendance, and the preaching was sound and spiritual.

We hope that our York county brethren will receive a fresh impulse to persevere in well-doing, and to abound yet more and more in every good word and work. Grace be with them.

Orwigsburg Camp-meeting.

This meeting was held on the premises of brother Fisher, about five miles south of Orwigsburg. It commenced on Monday the 13th ult., and concluded on the ensuing Saturday.

There were about eighteen or nineteen tents; about the same number of converts, and nine believers followed Christ in baptism.

Some half dozen or more preachers were in attendance, and the congregations pretty good.

The meeting, on the whole, it is said, was pretty good, and exerted, it is hoped, a happy influence.

Landisburg Camp-meeting.

The Landisburg camp commenced on the 13th and closed on the 18th ultimo. Like the Cumberland camp, it was small compared with former meetings of a similar kind; there being only about seventeen tents; yet in regard to preachers and people, it was quite as large as in former years.

There were, however, but few converts during the meeting—not more, perhaps, than ten or twelve in all. Still, it is hoped, there was a lodgment made of saving truth in many hearts, that may germinate soon, and result in the salvation of precious souls, not a few. The Lord grant it may be so!

Newport Camp-meeting.

The camp-meeting near Newport, Perry county, Pa., was commenced on the 21st ult., and ended on the following Wednesday.

During the first part of the meeting, the weather was rainy and the congregations small, but the latter part was pleasant and reviving.

There were only four preachers, to-wit:—Brothers M. F. Snavely, Samuel Bowman, Samuel Crawford and ourself, in attendance.

On the whole, however, the meeting, though small, was pretty good. About——were born from above, and added to the faithful. The Lord grant they may be sealed to the day of full redemption, and be burning and shining lights in their day and generation on the earth!

Newburg Camp-meeting.

We have just received a short account from this meeting. Inclemency of weather, like at the Newport camp, operated much against the meeting at its beginning; but the latter end was glorious.

Some——or——were hopefully brought to a knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins. —— happy souls were led down into the water, and there baptized or immersed, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

The Newburg church in doing well. She deserves much credit for what she has done, and is still doing, to promote the cause of God. Small and feeble-handed as she has been, she has, for many years, sustained a preacher: and so far as we know, has done it well. She has, also, held her camp-meeting, and other extra meetings, anually, for some years past, whilst other churches, far in advance of her in means and members, have grown slack and fell short in these duties. But, doubtless, she will not fail to receive her reward. They that sow plentifully, shall also reap, plentifully. God grant that she may never weary in well-doing! but continue to abound yet more and more; and may others, by her example, be provoked to love and good works.

Delinquent Subscribers.

Our delinquent or non-paying subscribers are hereby once more informed, that so soon as they shall comply with our terms and regulations, their back numbers of the Advocate shall be forwarded; provided they do so on or before the 15th of this month: after that, we shall supply those only who have paid for their papers, according to terms.

If any mistakes have occurred in packing and forwarding the back numbers, to those persons who have paid since their papers were stopped, we shall be happy to rectify the same, on being apprized of the fact, free from postage.

We shall also take pleasure in rectifying any mistakes that may have occurred in our list of acknowledgments.

PULPIT DISPOSITIONS--No. 7.

Thema:—The Prayer of Jabez.

TEXT—"And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, Oh, that thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thy hand might be with me, and that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested." 1 Chr. 4: 10.

Introduction:—The History of Jabez—He was an Honorable and Pious Man.

Consider,—

I. The prayer of Jabez;
II. The prevalency of it.

I. Consider the prayer of Jabez.

Notice,—

1. The object of his prayer.
2. The contents of it.
3. Its leading properties.

I. The object of his prayer. Who was it?

1. Not the Idols of the Heathens.
2. Not departed saints; but,
3. The God of Israel. And why did he make Him the object of his prayer?
1. Because He was the living and true God.
2. Because His law required it at his hand.
3. Because His promises encouraged him to do so.

II. The contents, matter or parts of his prayer. What did he pray for? What were the leading subjects of his prayer?

1. The blessing of God: "Oh, that," &c.
2. The enlargement of his coast: "That thou wouldest," &c. This may be taken literally or spiritually.
3. The presence and protection of His hand: "And that thy hand," &c.
4. Preservation from evil to the end, "that it (evil) might not grieve him."

III. The leading properties of his prayer.

1. It was a fervent prayer.
2. It was a pertinent prayer.
3. It was short. Brevity should characterize all prayer. See Eccl. 5: 2 Matt. 6. 7.
4. It was a believing prayer.

II. The prevalency of his prayer. "God granted him that which he requested."

If so, then,—

1. God blessed him, indeed.
2. He enlarged his coast.
3. He bestowed his helping hand; and,
4. He kept him from evil.

Inferences and Reflections.

1. The utility of prayer.
2. The blessedness of the saints.
3. The goodness and mercy of God.
4. The sin and danger of living prayerless.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Benefit of Sunday-Schools.

How shall we estimate the benefits that accrue from Sunday-schools? People, comparatively speaking, generally acknowledge these to be great, as the immediate good produced by them is too efficient; but few only, I venture to say, ever discover or contemplate the more remote and indirect blessings, to which we are indebted to this useful institution. No services, either religious or moral in other branches, are superior to those of a well-qualified Sunday-school teacher. Every little hamlet and village can boast of its two or three meeting-houses, and of supporting about that many preachers, thereby wasting sums of money; while, if these good people were what they profess to be, they could do service together in one meeting-house; and if they would take about two thirds of the money they now give to two or three preachers, and give it to one, it would have the effect of rendering the family of many a poor minister of God happier than it now is, and the community would have a little more to spare for other religious purposes, especially Sunday-schools. This would be wiser and more charitable. Many people think it impossible that such a state of things can ever be effected. In my opinion, Sunday-schools could produce such a harmony among Christians, if they were a little more cherished, and some managed a little better. Art can do but very little at straightening a crooked old tree: with the aid of nature, it may sometimes be done. If this is not plain enough, I will apply it. If a congregation had become perverted and bigoted in their youth, you may preach to them months and years, and it will do them but little good,—now and then you may succeed in straightening an old sinner;—but compared with a well-managed Sunday-school, the benefit becomes almost invisible. What is the remedy? Pay a little more attention to childhood—bend the twig, and you will succeed in every case. I say in every case; for I cannot admit that any person is born so perverted, as to be irrecoverably lost to his Creator. Altogether, I think we are working too much at the wrong end. Send your children to Sunday-schools managed upon the union principle, where no religious disputes are permitted—where the truth, the plain truth, is taught as Jesus taught it; and when they are grown up, religious controversies will cease. We can, of course, not expect them to be all of the same opinion in certain Divine matters; but by proper tuition, something within will always apprize them of the evil consequences of any thing wrong or exciting they contemplate or do: let us tell them that this is their conscience, and that its dictates must be obeyed in all things; and then, however they may differ on particular passages of Holy Writ, their actions and conduct will be marked with more charity and brotherly love, than those of the present generation. If they become accustomed in their youth to kneel together in friendship, and offer their prayers unitedly, depend on it, they will never depart from it. And what will be the consequences of such a union! Happy days! Blessed times! All will be brothers and sisters! Those of Paul, and those of Apollos, and those of Cephas, will all be united in Christ, for Christ is not divided. All bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, will be put away, with all malice; they will be kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, forgives them. This is one benefit calculated to arise from Sunday-schools of the right sort. But, sad to relate, a number of Sunday-schools are not conducted upon the union plan, especially in larger towns and cities. There every denomination has its own Sunday-school or schools. The seed of religious contention is sown into the youthful hearts of the scholars, and a lasting impression is made. What will be the result of this? I have no desire to dwell upon it—hoping God, in His goodness, will give an impulse to His servants to proclaim against such measures.

Another happy consequence of Sunday-school instruction, will be the decrease of crime. Nearly every county in the Union has its jail and poor-house; and besides, there are one or two penitentiaries or State prisons in every State. Immense sums of money are expended for constructing and maintaining these; and all possible pains are taken to render the situation of the inmates comfortable. All these places are filled to overflowing. People are not ashamed to go there, because jails were not built for the dogs. This is a common expression among a certain class of our population. The cause of all this crime and expense, is a want of religious instruction and general education. If one-half of the money expended for erecting prisons, &c., had been applied in time, and to the right place, seven-eighth of the crimes committed might have been prevented. If it had been invested in Sunday-school and other books, and the criminals taught before they were such, in their youth, we could dispense with three-fourth of our prisons. Have I proof for this? Read the following extracts from prison reports, made some ten or twelve years ago:

"Sing Sing State Prison.—The Agent says: 'From very long intimacy with criminals, I have found that a large majority of convicts may be traced to bad habits formed in early life.' Of eight hundred and forty-two prisoners, only fifty had received any thing like an education. Four hundred and eighty-five had been habitual drunkards—a habit which Sunday-schools tend much to obviate.

"Auburn State Prison—Six Hundred and Seventy Prisoners.—Of these two hundred and fifty-eight were excessively intemperate; two hundred and forty-five moderately intemperate; total intemperate, five hundred and three. Of the rest, one hundred and fifty-nine were temperate drinkers, and eight total abstinents. Four hundred and two of the prisoners were under the influence of spirituous liquors at the time of committing their crime. Only nineteen of the six hundred and seventy had ever been at Sunday-school.

"Connecticut State Prison—One Hundred and Eighty Prisoners.—The Warden says: 'There is no convict here who, before his conviction, could read and write, and who was of temperate habits and followed a regular trade.' Of the convicts who could read and write, and were intemperate, there were two in one hundred, and seventy-five in one hundred were habitual drunkards."

From these tables we can readily discover that a want of education and religious instruction, is at the bottom of the mischief. This soon leads to intemperance and vagrancy; theft and murder follow, and the penitentiary and gallows close the scene. All this comes to pass under the immediate observation of Christians. The remedy is plain and simple; but a twelve and a-half or twenty-five cent piece, annually, is an enormous sum for some people to expend for Sunday-school purposes. They will rather pay a dollar towards punishing a criminal, than twenty-five cents towards preventing the crime from being committed. I hope some more competent pen than mine will explain this matter to our fellow-citizens. Tell them that nearly all the county tax they pay, is expended at the poor-house and jail, and at court for trying quarrels, fights, thefts and murders. The poor misguided criminal, who, had pains been taken in time, might be a useful member of society, is now thrown into prison—there, too often, to contemplate vengeance. Tell me of a single convict who ever left the prison any better than he entered it. I repeat, we are working too much at the wrong end. A person who is wicked enough to tipple, curse and swear, and profane the Sabbath, thinks nothing of taking his winter quarters in the penitentiary!

I must conclude, lest the length of the communication will prevent it from being read. I would merely add, that it is a duty to God and to society, to promote the extention of the religion of Christ, and, as a consequence, the temporal as well as the eternal happiness of humanity. He who adds to the intelligence of a nation, adds to its happiness; he who pours an additional ray of light upon the human understanding; he who gives a single penny towards the promotion of our welfare, is a public benefactor; but he who does all in his power to promote these purposes, and no other, will be "great in the eyes of God." I write plain, that all may understand it. It is intended for instruction—not for applause.

H. J. BEYERLE, M. D.

Linglestown, August, 1846.

Letter from Brother David R. Shelly.

Jackson Township, Ashland county, Ohio, July 30, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I feel to inform you and the brethren in Pennsylvania, where I had the pleasure of visiting in June last, that I arrived at home in safety, and found my family in good health, and we are still enjoying the same blessing at present.

We are blessed with abundance of crops in Ohio this season, more so than has been known for some years. We had no rain here since last May to raise any of the streams of any account, yet there has been rain enough to keep things in growing order.

I must inform you and the readers of the Advocate, of the doings of brother E. West. He came to my house on Saturday the 25th of July, to fill an appointment which he had made in my absence on a visit to the East. For various reasons I was induced to tell him that I thought we would dispense with the meeting for the present. He desired to know my reasons. I told him, one among others was, that he had left the church without cause. He replyed that he had not left the church, but the Eldership, and that he could not conscientiously retain his connection with the Ohio Eldership any longer—that he was opposed to the licensing system, as practiced by that body, &c. I asked him why he could take license in Pennsylvania if not in Ohio? He replyed, that he would make a wide difference between Pennsylvania and Ohio—that there he would expect fair play—that the brethren there would do what was right, and that what they promised they would fulfill. Thus intimating that the Ohio Eldership was not honest; yea, and plainly said that the brethren in Ohio would not support him—that the church at Vermilion, at Jeromesville, and at Gills, had said thus and so, and this was the treatment he was getting.

I then stated that he was in the fault more than anybody else, if anything had been said or done amiss—that he knew very well, that ever since he had come to Ohio, his course had been selfish and arbitrary—that he never would take a circuit, or do as the brethren wished it, but always wanted to travel as a missionary, or have an appointment in his own way. And as to a support, I knew of no preacher in the Ohio Eldership that got as much as he did. But now, since he had left the church and the Eldership, I could not see with what propriety he could still claim a support from them. That this railing out against the church for not supporting him—his leaving the church on that account, and yet looking back for support, I could not understand. It was a mysterious course to me.

There were many other things spoken by both of us, which I deem unnecessary to mention. One thing, however, I would like to know. Was brother West received into membership by the East Pa., Eldership last fall? If so, did he ever apply for a dismissal? If not, has he, or has he not, the right of withdrawing or dismissing himself?

Yours, in the bonds of Christian love,

DAVID R. SHELLY.

REPLY TO THE ABOVE QUESTIONS.

Elder E. West did apply to the East Pa. Eldership for an appointment. The Eldership gave him an appointment; of course he was considered a member; for without membership, he could not have expected an appointment. That membership has never been dissolved. He has never asked for it. Until he does that, and is regularly dismissed, we shall hold him answerable. Membership implies a covenant. A covenant implies two parties; and mutual agreement between the parties in the covenant, is always necessary to constitute church membership. Hence, we hold that the power that confers membership, is, and ought to be, the power, and the sole power, to dissolve it. The party that has no power to create membership, has none to dissolve it.—But that party that has the one, has the other.

If, then, brother West had no right and power to create his membership in the East Pa. Eldership, without the consent and approbation of that body, of course he has none in himself alone to dissolve it.

Precisely analogous is the case of every individual church member. Admit the opposite of this doctrine, and you open the door at once for every apostate, hypocrite and disorderly walker in the church to escape from all church power and discipline, than which nothing can be more absurd and dangerous. Tell brother West that it is more than likely he will be called to an account by the next Eldership, for his disorderly and unlawful course.

Editor.

The reproaches of a friend should be strictly just, and not too frequent.

Support of the Ministry---No. 2.

1st. A minister's salary is not a gratuity, but a just obligation on the part of the church among whom he labors in word and doctrine: it is that which could not be withheld without manifest injustice, not to say impiety. Of course, each individual, contributing his or her part, should not say within themselves: "I give this as a charity;" but "I do it in discharge of an obligation to God and the minister."

2d. If a minister be entitled to a support at all, he is entitled to a full support. He is entitled to live of the Gospel; (i. e.) to a living or support. I will not specify the amount. If an expensive education; if talents, industry, laboriousness; if moral worth and exclusive devotedness to the public good, were to be made the basis of the calculation, he would be entitled to as good an estate, as the same qualities might secure to him in another profession. But the minister's reward is not of this world; it is not in the affluence and pomp of this world; such as splendid edifices, or extensive tracts of land, or fine herds or flocks, but "in crowns of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus." It is not desirable, probably, that he should be wealthy, but he should not be absolutely poor. "Give me neither property nor riches," may the minister say, as well as other men. A comfortable support is actually essential; something more than this is reasonable. He should be provided for, not only as long as he is able to preach, but as long as he lives; and his children also, (if children he have) till they are of an age to be above dependance.

3d. It is the practice of some to withdraw, or keep themselves from any legal and scriptural connection with the church, because such connection subjects them to a share in the support of the minister, and other current expenses appertaining thereto. Let such reconcile their course if they can with honor, justice and the Bible. They ought to consider that there is both impiety in it towards God, and a three-fold injustice as it regards man.

1. It is manifestly unjust to their minister. But that is the least consideration.

2. It is unjust to their neighbors, who, in addition to their own share of the common burden, are forced to assume that which these delinquents refuse. And,

3. It is unjust to themselves and families, who, of all concerned, are in reality the greatest sufferers. This is not only a crying sin in the eye of a holy God, but it is actually niggardly on the part of those who criminate themselves to such an extent.

4th. We see how much reason there is for the cry of hireling against salaried ministers. This insidious cry is often raised by the iron-hearted infidel, and many of the ungodly: but not exclusively by them; it has also often been raised by mistaken (but I would charitably hope by well meaning) Christians. But all the prejudice they can raise, is quelled at once by common sense and the Bible. Call it hire if you please: what does the Bible style it? It styles it: "The laborer (meaning the minister) is worthy of his hire." Let no Christian make use of this unscriptural, illiberal language, till he or she is wiser than the Bible; and who would have their minister more disinterested than the blessed Apostle to the Gentiles. All genuine Christians have found it necessary, notwithstanding some experiments to the contrary, in some mode or other, to provide for the support of their ministers. The Presbyterians, Episcopalians and others, do it by certain sums specified among themselves. The Methodists support their ministers liberally, but in a manner peculiar to themselves. And why do not those who have assumed (the scriptural title) "Church of God," act in a similar manner? The example given by different sects is worthy of imitation.

5th. The consequences of the non-fulfilment of this duty. Whatever these may be, as they effect the minister personally, they are more disastrous, as they effect the church and the people generally. The minister is a man of like infirmities as others; he is as naturally cheered or depressed, stimulated or disheartened by circumstances, as other men. And it should be remembered, that whatever loss of vivacity, or efficiency, or time the minister suffers, in consequence of the churches' neglect, (for such we conceive it to be) to provide for him comfortably, the loss is eminently their's. The work of the ministry, his proper work, is or should be considered by them far the most important, and certainly the most responsible work in which he can possibly be engaged. If the deficiency of a too slender support be the cause of his desisting from the work of the ministry, the responsibility lays upon the church exclusively, and not upon the minister. Therefore, those who wish and pray for an efficient ministry, should sustain the minister in his arduous undertakings, in a just and proper manner. It must be alone by them, (the church) for it is impossible for the poor minister to sustain himself, and devote himself exclusively to the ministry.

If I hire a laborer to do an important work for me, which shall require his entire attention to attend to my business, of whatever kind it may be, it is just and right that he should receive an honorable remuneration for his services. If he should agree to serve me for a support, or for food and raiment, were it not better to give him his meals and his clothes, than to compel him to earn them elsewhere at the expense of half his time, and a neglect of his business?

THOMAS H. DESHIRI.

Lanniseurg, Perry county, Pa., July 9, 1845.

Letter from Elder George U. Harn.

Pittsburg, Pa., July —, 1846.

Brother J. W——:

This is to let you and your readers know that brother J. Hickernell and I commenced a meeting in the Window Gap school-house, (Greene county) on Friday evening the 26th of June; but the house being small and the weather very warm, we removed it to a little grove close at hand. On Lord's-day morning, it fell to my lot to preach. I endeavored this, from 1 Thes. 2: 4. After I closed, a gentleman from among the audience arose and asked the privilege of asking me a question. I replied I did not approve of controversy in times of protracted meetings; but if it was only a question for information, I would endeavor to answer it. He then asked my motive for leaving the sentence, "but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire," out of a quotation I made from 1 Cor. 3: 10—15?

I replied I quoted from memory, and that was not the only one I had quoted that day in a similar manner; but even then I was not certain that I did not quote ver batim. He attempted to quote it, but could not. I then read it and paraphrased it. Still he appeared dissatistied. I then discovered that I was in contact with the boasted champion of the Universalists and Hell-redemptionists of those parts. He is known by the name of the Rev. Dr. William Baldwin, and is a clever citizen of the State of Virginia, from the "Flats of Grave Creek." I now, also, learned it was not all talk that the Universalists had formed an intention to draw us into a religious skirmish, or cause us to "tortull." Accordingly, I stated my friend had observed he did not want a debate; but I thought otherwise, and that if he would meet me in the grove next day at 10 o'clock, I would give him a chance to prove "that the wicked shall not go away into everlasting punishment, but that they shall ultimately go into life eternal, as well as the righteous." We met again in the evening for worship, and had a pleasant meeting.

At the appointed time, we met the next day for the interchange of views with the Restorationists. Dr. Baldwin made choice of Esquire Phillips, and I of brother Thomas Hinneman, the elder of the church, for our moderators, and they brother Silas Ayres, a Presbyterian, for the presiding one. By the decision of the moderators, we were to be governed by the ordinary rules of debate, and the Doctor to have the opening and closing speech. We agreed to speak twenty minuets a piece at a time; but I soon found that a-half hour would have been better for me, as my opponent could, with difficulty, fill up his twenty minutes, and I was several times stopped in the middle of my address, though I spoke full three words to his two. The debate lasted five hours, and I give it as my firm and honest conviction, that I never before thought Universalism, in any sense of it, so weak and futile, as I did during this debate and since.

This signal discomfiture of my antagonist, led his friends to raise a report that I come there prepared for the discussion, knowing that it would take place, and that their champion was not equipped for battle, though he is always training on that field. Now, so far as I was concerned, I pronounce it absolutely false; for I do not know that I have read five pages on Universalism for the last two years; and certain I am, I did not for that number of months before the meeting.

I may give you a synopsis of the arguments offered on both sides, at a future period.—Meanwhile, I would ask, is it true that the Rev. Mr. Todd has renounced his renunciation of Universalism, and is advocating that doctrine again! My opponent positively asserted it, and staked his reputation for veracity on the truth of it. I have but little to lose or gain by it, as I neither affirmed nor denied it. Yet inform us, if you can, whether it is true or false.

That night we attended to the ordinances, and had a joyful time. Next evening I preached my last sermon, and left in company with brother H. for brother Gier's, in the border of Washington county. Here we preached to a pretty large and orderly audience, who had been collected by a notice of about thirty hours. After meeting, some of the folks were quite rude and frolicksome on their way home. This is very wrong, and evinces a little mindedness, and a want of both mental and moral improvement. How silly such things are in the view of thinking persons!

The day following, we passed on to brother Henry Sherick's, and that night I preached in the United Brethren meeting-house, to a small audience, and was followed by brother H. by way of exhortation. Not far from here the Disciples are pretty numerous, I learn.—Friday we were conveyed to near the beautiful little town of Washington, by our kind and interesting brother Sherick. He is a thoroughgoing liberty man, and advocates the unconditional abolition of American slavery. Well, this may be an ultra position; but who can wonder at it, when a servant of God can be allowed to linger out his life in damp cells, shackels and heavy chains, for the surpassed crime of telling his fellow-man how to flee into a land of liberty, as the Rev. Torry was compelled to do in the penitentiary of my native city? Yes, sir, and that, too, notwithstanding the tears and affecting appeals of a loving and doting wife, that he might be permitted to breathe out his soul in her fond embrace. I blush for my place of nativity, and shudder for it in view of the day of final reckoning. I fear that Sodom's sins are virtues to some of thine!

Some of the country we passed through, south of Washington, is very good; but it is not cultivated as it should be. There is far too much graising done for the good of the land. By this the product of the land, whether grain, grass or hay, is removed from it, and no return rendered. Also, the yeomanry of those parts take but little care of their barnyards; and you know that that is a point of particular attention among our eastern husbandmen.

Parting with brother Sherick, we proceeded in our usual way, riding and walking by turns. We soon passed through Washington, which, as before stated, is quite a handsome little place, on the National road leading to Wheeling, about 32 miles east of it. I would suppose it has about six thousand inhabitants. It contains a College and Female Seminary; but I did not learn particulars about either. From thence we directed our course to father Hess', not a great distance from Monongahela city—six miles I think. About that distance from Washington, we were overtaken by a very heavy thunder storm and rain, which cooled the intensely hot atmosphere, and rendered some relief of pain to our much blistered or gaulded "understandings." I think I have never known but once, in my few days that have flown by as the morning dew glides away before the rising sun, severer or more awful claps of thunder, repeated with quick succession, than that day. But it may appear singular to you for me to say, that I would rather sit and listen to the oft-repeated claps of the loudest peals of thunder rolling through the black and lowering clouds, that sable deck the vault or concavity of the blue etherial, at most any time, than to spend the same space in listening to the best strung violin and Accardian, or the completest piano touched by the nimblest lily-fingers of the most accomplished fair one, who has emerged from our fashionable schools of modern etiquette for years, though I am not a hater of melody, aud yet it is no more singular than true. Near father H's., we met in the Methodist meeting-house, at five o'clock, and I preached to a few hearers, after having travelled thirty miles that day. Next day father H. conveyed us a part of the way, and at Elder Knouff's, about four miles from Pittsburg, I parted with brother Hickernell, who preached in that neighborhood next day. The land between Washington and Pittsburg, the way we come, is under a much better state of cultivation than that mentioned before, and the harvest is more forward. The first grain I saw cut this year, was on Saturday the 20th. Our wheat crop is quite abundant wherever I have travelled on this round; and so it appeared it would be down the Ohio river, in the parts of Steubenville, where I had been about ten days before I went this trip.

Brothers Hickernell, Cook and myself, contemplate going again to Ohio, about the first week in August, to aid Elder Richmond in holding a camp-meeting near Athens, Athens county, about two hundred and twenty miles from this place. Of the time of the appointment of it, we are not yet certain.

On arriving in sight of the "smokey cities" again, I could discover but little change in appearance, except the splendid Monongahela House, which had gone up more than a story since I left. It will be recollected this noble building was consumed in the great conflagration of the 10th of April, a year ago, and is now rebuilt to the fourth story on the old cite, on the corner of Front and Smithfield streets. It has the most commanding appearance and position in the cities, in full view of all the steamboats, just as they end their watery furrows in ploughing our river. It is intended to be the best and most imposing structure of the kind, west of the proud Alleghenies.

Our own affairs here are about as they have been for near three months past—not much doing; and I do not flatter myself a great deal can be done this summer. When fall or winter comes, and there is less strugling for worldly gain, people may pay more earnest heed to the things which they hear. Brothers Meyers and Wertz filled my place during my absence: the former is still unwell, and is not able to fill his appointment on the circuit.

Fraternally yours,

G. U. HARN.

Letter from Brother J. S. Hostetter.

"Why standest thou afar off, O, Lord?" Psalms 10: 1.

What is it that makes Heaven? Is it not the knowledge, the love and the presence of God? On the other hand, is it not the absence of the Almighty's presence that causes the mind to become gloomy, dark and blind to heavenly things, that causes the heart to become hard, cold and stupid, and the soul barren and lifeless? Hardness, indifference, coldness, deadness, darkness and blindness, appear to exist among the religious world at present. Iniquity appears to abound, and the love of many is waxing cold. Sinners are careless and impenitent, and seem to be getting harder and harder in sin. The church seeing and feeling the effects of these things, the inquiry and cry is made: "Why standest thou afar off, O, Lord?"

The query now rises, why does the Lord stand afar off? Has not the Lord promised to be always with His people, even to the end?

We answer, God has promised to be with His church and people, and to be with them always, even to the end; yea, He has promised never to leave them nor forsake them. But let it be remembered, that He has given these and all other promises on certain conditions. If these are complied with, He will not fail to make good his promises. But who does not know that the people are fallible?—that they often have followed God afar off? And if they do so, why may not God stand afar off? He never done so without a cause. That cause is not in Him, but in the church. If ever God withdraws His influence and stands afar off, it is for some fault, error or delinquency on the part of His people. A few of these I will name.

1. Division, or schism. This is one cause why God stands afar off—why He is no more present with them as "in ancient times, in generations of old." O, that this great evil was utterly uprooted and done away from among His people!

2. Apathy and luke-warmness. This is another cause why Jehovah stands afar off.—God's people are to be a zealous people. But if they grow cold and become at ease in Zion, God withdraws his influence and gracious presence from them. "Wo! to them," says God, "who are at ease in Zion."

3. Heresy, or a departure from the faith, is a further cause or reason why God stands afar off. Christians are to be sound in the faith—and to strive together for the unity of the faith—to be of one mind, and that mind is to be the mind of Christ. But, alas! how double-minded and sectarianized are many in these latter days. No wonder did Christ ask the question: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"

4. The neglect of the use of the appointed means of grace, is anothor reason of God's leaving His people, or of standing afar off.—What meat and drink are to the body, the means and ordinances of religion are to the soul. They that would enjoy health, must eat and drink. They that would grow in grace, must use the means God's love has given. They that neglect these, cannot expect to prosper in religion, but may have cause to weep, and weepingly to exclaim: "Why standest thou afar off, O, Lord?"

5. Conformity to the world is another reason of God's absence. God's people are commanded to come ont from the world, and to keep themselves unspotted from it. But in these evil days, there is a great and criminal conformity to the world. And when professors drink in the spirit of the world, and conform to its vain, idle and sinful habits and customs, where is that light and example that is to reprove and convince the world? Where are those works and frnits which are to convince sinners that there is a reality in religion? O, that the God and Father of His church would help His dear people to walk by that rule which He has laid down, so that His followers may, in one solid, combined and united band, go forth and fight the battles of the Lord, scatter light and snbdue darkness, destroy satan's progress, and extend Zion! Then we shall see the Lord not standing afar off, bnt near. Then we may expect former days to return, sinners to be gathered in, and Zion to prosper. Reader! pray, live, and act for this with thine whole heart, and you shall see it. Farewell! Yours, in bonds of Christian love,

J. S. HOSTETTER.

Shippensburg, August 1, 1846.

Ashamed of Jesus!

Oh! lamentable fact. Oh! direful truth, that puny man is ashamed of God! God who created, who preserves, who blesses, and who will, most assuredly, bring him before His flaming bar. Yet so it is, and Jesus Christ was well aware of it: hence the awful, yet reasonable truth which fell from His immutable lips: "Whosoever is ashamed of me and of my word, of him will I be ashamed before my Father and the holy Angels."

From the foregoing solemn and impressive truth, what right has man to be ashamed of God? None; and yet that many are ashamed to serve Him, is evident from the fact, that so few espouse His cause. Had Jesus Christ, or did He even now, assume the character and sway the sceptre of an earthly monarch, then there would be a rushing to His standard; and then "His righteousness would spread, and soon cover the earth as the waters do the face of the deep."

Could many, like Nicodemus, go to Christ privately, and become His favored sons and daughters, and keep it concealed from the great and mighty men of the day, me thinks the narrow path would then have far more travellers than it now has. But Christ has otherwise ordered it. "Except ye take up the Cross daily and follow me, ye cannot be my disciples." Man must bow to God, and not God to man. He, as the great Creator of all things, has the prerogative to make requirements of His creatures, and of inflicting such punishment as He sees proper for their not acceding to them. And He will do it. He must do it. His perfections demand it. And every true Christian will approve of it and say, Amen. Let the Creator be clear,though every creature should be damned. And for this very sin, His vengeance will be poured out upon all who are found guilty.

Many tell us that they are not ashamed of God. Oh, no! But then there are so many things commanded in His word, and practiced by His followers, that they are really ashamed of; yet they acknowledge such things to be taught in the scriptures by the God of Heaven Himself. What does all this prove? Why that they are liars, as John says, and the truth is not in them: for, if they were not ashamed of Christ, they would not be ashamed to follow in His footsteps.

But what are those things which they neglect and even detest? We shall mention only a few of them.

The first is Immersion. This, they think, is too low, too degrading for a gentleman or lady of standing to attend to. No; they would almost rather go to hell than to submit to this Christian duty. This will appear true, from the fact, that many wait until stretched on a dying bed, and then console themselves with the hope of Heaven, without baptism, because they are now too weak in body to be immersed.

The second thing they are ashamed of, is the washing of the saints' feet. Oh! what a humiliating and debasing ordinance is this! It goes hard for men of high respectability to stoop so low as to attend to it. It may do for the low and illiterate, say they, but we who have houses and lands, wealth and education, can get to Heaven without it. Who art thou, Oh! vain man, that disputes with God?—Does He not emphatically declare, that unless you keep His commandments ye cannot be His disciples? And if you cannot be His disciples, you must be damned, for none but such are saved.

The third and last thing that we shall mention is, that they are ashamed of shouting. We do not wish to be understood here as intimating that this is expressly taught in the scriptures as a duty, yet we have no hesitancy in saying, that the word of God contains examples so numerous, as to warrant its practice; and those who are ashamed of it, are, in fact, ashamed of Christ's word and work.

There is but one way to Heaven, and that is by conversion and obedience to the will of God. But, alas! alas! how many forget this and try to get to Heaven in some other way. All the preparation they have, is the knowledge of having performed a few charitable acts. This preparation their money has perhaps purchased for them, and is worth nothing.

There are others, however, more to be pitied than these: when they were in adverse circumstances, they, like sincere penitents, entered in by the door and attended to all the ordinances of God's house, without partiality.—But now, since prosperity attends them, they are exalted above measure, and must seek a smoother, a more refined, and a more popular way of getting to Heaven.

And here let me say, that I know such characters, some who were converted to God, of which we had no reason to doubt. Accordingly they were immersed, attended to the ordinance of feet-washing, and perhaps, (nay, I know it,) shouted occasionally. They associated in church fellowship with their despised brethren and sisters, and lived consistent.—But now, alas! where are they now? Why, they have got cold, proud and haughty, ashamed of God, His service, and His children, and are now following after the teachings of the prophets of Baal, without a spark of God's grace in their souls, and ten-fold more fit objects for hell than ever they were, notwithstanding the profession they yet continue to make. They despise the means they once employed to improve the graces of God's spirit. They look with contempt upon those with whom they once prayed and sang praises to God. The time is, however, fast approximating, when, if not before, they will find that there is but one way to Heaven, which way we repeat again, is a submission to the whole will of God concerning us.

Then, in conclusion, let me exhort all vain professors and unconverted men and women to repent, believe, be born again, live a life devoted to God, and then, yea, then I say, you shall be saved; otherwise you must be damned. God has said it, and His words can never be reversed.

Power of Religion.

Religion, like its Author, has suffered all manner of persecution, and like Him it triumphed over all its enemies. Its march is still onward, and in its train follow all the innumerable and invaluable blessings that a designing Providence intends bestowing upon man. Wicked men and nations have often and long tried to effect its eternal overthrow; but in the accomplishment of this unholy design, they have but prepared a way for their own destruction. Look at Voltaire, Paine, Hume, and a host of other infidels. What is the sequel of their history? In what condition or state of mind did they exchange worlds? Let intelligent and impartial witnesses answer the question. As an example of nations, look at France. For her rejection of the Bible, the wrath of an incensed Deity gathered thick and fast upon her, and she was drenched in blood; and since which time, she still seems to be in an unsettled state, and ever rife for rapine and revolutions.

But the chief object in view, in this composition, is to try to show the power of religion, as exemplified in the conversion, life and death of the people of God. For an example, let us take the case of the Apostle Paul. How wonderfully is the power of religion exemplified in his conversion, life and death! especially in his death. When his frail bark hove in sight of the eternal world, with what composure of mind, and holy triumph of spirit, did he meet death? In writing to Timothy, in reference to his final exit in triumph, he exclaimed: "I am ready to be offered; the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; and henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me at God's right hand." Undoubtedly, it was nothing but religion that gave the Apostle this great superiority over death. Religion is stronger than death. It will rob him of his sting, and strip him of all his terrors. When the Christian is brought to grapple with death, the King of Terrors, how easily is his last enemy subdued? And with what a song of triumph does he enter the eternal world? Such was the end of him who embraced religion as the power of God to salvation. Such, also, was the end of many Christians; and such will be the end of all good men and women.

On the other hand, what has been the end of some of those who regarded religion as a cunningly devised fable, who treated it, as well as its Author, with he utmost derision and scorn? Look at Newport, when dying; how bitterly did he curse himself, his God, and the day he was born? But the man, under the influence and power of religion, meets death in quite a different manner. Death is to him a welcome messenger. He meets him with a smile, and when sinking into his arms, his song is: "O, death, where is thy sting; O, grave, where is thy victory? Thus the Christian meets his fate. Well might Dr. Young exclaim: "The chamber where the good man meets his fate, is favorable above the common walks of life." Quite into the verge of Heaven, the most timid Christian will stand firm, secure and undaunted, when, for fear, the islands and hills shall flee away, and the mighty men of the earth shall be calling upon the mountains and rocks to fall on them, and hide them from the face of Him who sitteth upon the Throne!"

No more at present, but still

And devoted brother,

Letter from Elder J. M. Klein.

Grass Hill, Cambria county, August 12, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I shall once more take up my pen to give you and the friends of the cause of God, a short history of the good cause in this country. For some time back, there appeared to be a dark cloud hanging over us, and a great barrenness prevailed in the church. But little interest was taken in meetings anywhere, until a few weeks back, the clouds began to disperse, people are now beginning to awaken out of sleep, and some ere feeling the need of a Redeemer, and salvation by faith in His name.

I commenced a meeting in the Bethel, on Grass Hill, on the 30th of July last, during which time I endeavored to hold forth the Word of Life, and not altogether without effect. On Saturday night, many were cut to the heart, and were almost constrained to cry out, "What must we do?" But none came forward. On Sunday morning the brethren and sisters came together for the purpose of prayer, and while they prayed and spoke to each other concerning the good dealings of God, many of them were permitted to rejoice from a feeling sense of the presence of their Prince and Saviour. After which, I endeavored to preach to the people again, but with considerable difficulty, having been very unwell, and no ministerial help. We then dispensed with the services until evening, when we met again for prayer and preaching. During prayer, the Lord was truly in the assembly of His saints, and that to do them good. After preaching, an invitation was given to penitents to come forward to the altar of prayer; but none of them appeared to have moral courage enough to break the ranks of the enemy, and enlist for Prince Immanuel.—On Monday night we met again, for the purpose of commemorating the death and sufferings of Christ. This was truly a solemn and a feeling time, while the friends of Christ realized the truth of his saying, in John 13th chap. and 17th verse: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." The unconverted were constantly seen to weep and mourn. After the ordinances were over, I give an invitation to penitents again, when one alone came forward and requested the prayers of the brethren and sisters. She labored for several hours, but did not appear to be satisfied. She is still seeking Him whom her soul loveth. Others are seeking the Lord in their closets, and I think all that is wanting is an effort to be made; for I believe things are looking up, and I hope this drop of mercy may increase to rivers of joy. We think all that is wanting in particular, is ministerial aid.

As our dear brother, J. Meyers, says in a communication in the Advocate, out of a number of preachers, but few are actively and constantly engaged in the ministry; and those who labor in word and doctrine, appear to be unwilling to come to these wilds. Will not some of our eastern brethren say: "I will go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel!" Remember, there are souls hear that must be converted, or else they will be lost, and lost forever. The broad way is thronging with blood-bought souls, and we may be instrumental in their salvation; and shall we not feel for them, and labor for their good?—Come, brethren, let us think of the responsibility under which we are placed. If God has called us to the work of the ministry, let us try to be faithful, and labor with respect to the recompense of reward. There are some who might be useful if they would. There appears to be a great call for help at present.

Revivals are going on in various parts. I am just now informed that Elder Rockafellow, a Baptist minister, is laboring with abundant success in the borough of Ebensburg. A number of the Roman Catholics have become obedient to the faith, and have been baptized.—This work of grace commenced about ten days ago, and is still in progress. A gracious revival is now also going on at the Three Forges, in Blair county, under the care of Elders Barlow, Lininger and Glenn. This meeting has been in progress for more than two weeks. A number have been converted and baptized. May the Lord continue to work and beget himself many witnesses in that place. From these circumstances we would infer that the door of mercy is not yet shut, as some have said. O, that we could all feel more interested in this, the best of all causes! I wonder why there are not more camp-meetings published in the East. Surely the brethren are able to hold them, and much good might be done in that way.

I shall now close for the present. I hope ere long to be able to give you more cheerful news. If you think this worthy of a place in the columns of your respectable paper, the Advocate, you may give it room.

Yours, in the kingdom
And patience of Christ,
J. M. KLEIN.

Letter from Elder A. Megrew.

Dalton, Wayne county,
Ohio, August 12, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I herein send you the names of three new subscribers for the Church Advocate, and expect by and by to send you more. I am truly sorry to hear that there are so many who will be likely to have their papers stopped. This will make it necessary for the friends of the paper to exert themselves still more in getting new subscribers. However, I am aware, brother W., that there are many of those who have come behind, who will not give up the paper. I found several of the brethren, when I called on them, not prepared, from the fact, that they had forgotten that the time was so near expired. There are, no doubt, others who have not thought of it; others who have wanted an opportunity to pay; others who have paid to agents, who have not yet sent it on; and those who do not intend to pay, (as I believe there are such, who will take a paper just as long as they can get it for nothing) we will try to get others in their place who will pay. Brother W., fear not, the paper, with God's blessing, will and must be sustained. We cannot well do without a paper. The brethren seem to be more and more convinced of this fact: they will, therefore, I believe, do more now to sustain it than they have ever done before. May the Lord help us and send us prosperity!

Yours, truly,
ARCHIBALD MEGREW.

News from Mexico.

Recent advices from the South, inform us that Mexico is likely to have wars WITHIN and wars WITHOUT.

General SANTA ANNA, it is said, has returned to Mexico, and that a great revolution is likely to take place in the civil affairs of the country. A detachment of our army, sent by General TAYLOR, has taken possession without resistance, the town of Camargo, situated on the Rio Grande, a considerable distance above Matamoras.

General WORTH has been ordered to lay out a camp for ten thousand men at Camargo, and establish a depot, sixty miles from there, on the road to Monterey.

The YELLOW FEVER and the DYSENTERY have prevailed to a considerable extent in the American army. A hospital is about being built at Point Isabell for the accommodation of two thousand sick. ED.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Abolition of Slavery in Peru.—Slavery is approaching its extinction in Peru. The 162d article in the Constitution declares that no one shall be born a slave in the Republic, and extends this provision back to 1820. Consequently for the last 26 years all have been born free. The Constitution also declares that every slave imported from other countries, shall be free the moment he touches the soil of Peru; and it deprives of citizenship any one who shall engage in this traffic. This provision of the Constitution has been enforced with more energy, perhaps, than any other. No aspirant or usurper has dared to trample on it.—Cor. Jour. Com.

Arkansas Penitentiary Burnt.—The Little Rock Democrat of the 31st of July, announces the destruction of the State Penitentiary, on the evening previous. It was fired by some of the prisoners for the purpose of effecting an escape; but in this they were disappointed, as all were got out safe and put under guard. One fellow by the name of Morgan, attempted to rush out, knife in hand, but he was shot down and instantly killed by one of the prisoners who had been employed as a guard for some time past.

Temperance in Sweden.—In Sweden fines are rigidly enforced against such as are intoxicated, and for the fourth offence a man is exposed in the parish church the following Sunday, deprived of his elective franchise, and disqualified from appearing as a representative. A great Congress of Temperance Societies is now holding in the Swedish capitol. One hundred and thirty-two national and foreign associations are there represented, and the King, as President of the Stockholm Society with his Queen, were present at the opening meeting.

New License Law in Maine.—The Augusta Correspondent of the Christian Mirror gives the following synopsis of the New License Law, which has just been enacted by the Maine Legislature:

"1. No domestic liquors of an intoxicating nature shall be sold directly or indirectly at wholesale or retail, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes.—Foreign liquors to be sold only in such quantities as U. S. laws admit, and then the seller must prove the fact of importation which the bill makes no easy matter.

"2. The officers of the several towns may license from one to three persons under the bonds of $600 each, for one year, to sell as above specified. All others who sell are fined from one to twenty dollars for first offence, from $5 to $20 for 2d, with a bond of $50 to abate the nuisance for six months, and forfeiting all money received for liquor thus sold."

Gas on Steamboats.—Some thirty steamboats on the Western waters are now lighted with gas, made by apparatus on board of each vessel, from the grease of the kitchen.

Remarkbble Coincidence.—It is remarkable that one vote carried the tariff of 1824; one vote the tariff of 1828; one vote in each house carried the tariff of 1842, and by one vote in the Senate the tariff of 1846 has become a law.

Elections.—North Carolina.—Governor Graham is re-chosen by 7,000 majority, and the Whigs have a clear majority in both branches of the Legislature. Two United States Senators are to be elected by the Legislature chosen at this election.

Indiana.—The Whigs have a majority in the House, and the Democrats in the Senate. Gov. Whitcomb, Democrat, is re-chosen.

Illinois —The Governor and a majority of the Legislature are Democratic.

Missouri.—Ditto

Kentucky.—The Whigs have chosen majorities in each branch of the Legislature.

The California Expedition.—The New York Sun, of Saturday two weeks, says: "The California regiment will encamp on Governor's Island this morning, preparatory to their departure for the shores of the Pacific. It is well understood that every man going out in this expedition, is to remain in California as a permanent settler, and the law of that country now guaranties a square league (1920 acres) of land to each of them. They will find a very small population there; but by next year, ten or fifteen thousand Mormons will join them, and no doubt large numbers from the States.

United States Lands.—It is computed that the quantity of land owned by the United States, exclusive of the unsold Texas and Oregon lands, is two hundred and fifty-two millions of acres. There is in addition to this an immense tract of land, to which the Indian title is not extinct. The average sale of the public land is something less than two millions of acres annually. The sales of the past year have amounted to a little over two millions of dollars.

Factories at Pittsburg.—There are now four cotton factories in Pittsburg, which manufacture sheetings to the amount of 40,000 yards per week. A new factory is nearly completed, which, with the others, will swell the weekly product to 80,000 yards.

Influx of Emmigrants.—On Tuesday, 2000 steerage passengers reached New York by arrivals from foreign ports, of whom were 160 Prussians on their way to Ohio; and up to noon on Wednesday, the arrival of 715 more was reported.—The week will be good for 5000 at least, perhaps more.

Whiskey and the Gallows.—An old woman in Ireland had contracted to have a gentleman shot as he passed her cabin, for a certain sum of money, and as the gentleman approached, she put the gun into her son's hands and directed him to fire—but his heart relented.

"Oh! mother, I cannot shoot the gentleman."

His mother called him a miserable coward, and put the whiskey bottle to his lips—

"Drink," said she; he did drink, his courage came, the poor gentleman was shot dead, and the mother and son were hanged for it.

Postage.—The following is the comparative postage in the different countries:

England, 1d; Prussia, 2¼d; Spain, 2½d; the United States of America, 2¾d; Sardina, 3¼d; Austria, 3½d; Russia, 4d; and France, 4¼d.

The Potato Rot.—Everywhere in this vicinity, we hear of the progress of this disease in the potato. The new corp, it is feared, will encounter even a worse fate than the crop of the last year.—Albany Argus.

It is said that potatoes may be saved from rot by cutting off the vines when they are half-grown, which will, almost without exception, keep them sound; while those which are suffered to grow in the usual way, will mostly rot.

Another Victim.—Kirkham, the distinguished grammarian, was found in an old distillerry, on the 2d inst., in the last agonies of delirium tremens. He died about five minutes after he had been discovered by the passers by. How have the mighty fallen.—Hickman (Ky.) Stan.

The Printing of Congress.—It appears from a report made to the House of Representative, from the committee appointed to investigate the cost of printing public documents, that, upon six jobs of work ordered to be done, the public printers realized a profit of $91,047,74!

Mosquitoes.—People enquire how they are to get rid of those tormentors, who in hot and moist weather are so troublesome. Burn brown sugar on a shovel of coals in the bed room before going to rest.

Large Circulation.—The Sunday School Advocate, published at 200 Mulberry street, New York, for the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, circulates eighty-five thousand copies regularly.

Population of the United States.—Estimating the increase at 3 per cent. per annum on the census of 1839, the population of the United States will amount to 20,140,370, on the 1st of June 1846.

New Jersey.—The peach crop in this State promises to be more than usually abundant this season. The Editor of the Bunker Hill Aurora has recently visited an orchard of 185 acres, which is calculated to yield 20,000 bushels of fruit.

The nomination of Judge Grier, of Pa., to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court, occasioned by the death of Judge Baldwin, has been confirmed by the Senate.

Canal Tolls in New York.—The amount of tolls received on all the canals in New York, up to August 1st, in 1846, was $1,107,269. In 1846, $1,228,987. Increase, $121,718.

Laborers Wanted.—One thousand laborers are wanted at Lockport, Ill., to work on the Illinois and Michigan Canal, from Chicago to Lasalle—also, one hundred stone cutters.

Life of General Taylor.—The Appletons are to publish, immediately, a life of General Taylor.

Baggage Wagons.—The Government has contracted for the construction of 400 baggage wagons at Newark, N. J. A contract has been made at Philadelphia for 400 more.

In New York city, according to the directory just published, there are 204 churches, 91 different newspapers, and 57 other periodicals.

"The Bible.—The Bible has been translated into, and is now printed or written in, one hundred and fifty languages."

MISCELLANEOUS.

PROCLAMATION.

By the President of the United States.

Whereas a treaty between the United States of America and her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was concluded and signed by their Plenipotentiaries at Washington on the fifteenth day of June last, which treaty is word for word as follows:

The United States of America and her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, deeming it to be desirable for the future welfare of both countries that the state of doubt and uncertainty which has hitherto prevailed respecting the sovereignty and government of the territory on the north-west coast of America, lying westwardly of the Rocky or Stony Mountains, shall be finally terminated by an amicable compromise of the rights mutually asserted by the two parties over the said territory, have respectively named plenipotentiaries to treat and agree concerning the terms of such settlement, that is to say: the President of the United States of America has, on his part, furnished with full powers James Buchanan, Secretary of State of the United States, and her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, has, on her part, appointed the Right Hon. Richard Pakenham, a member of her Majesty's most honorable Privy Council, and her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

Art. 1. From the point on the 49th parallel of north latitiude, where the boundary laid down in existing treaties and conventions between the U. States and Great Britain terminates, the line of boundary between the territories of the United States and those of her Brittanic Majesty shall be continued westward along the said forty-ninth parallel of north latitude to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver's Island, and thence southerly to the middle of the said channel and of Fuca's straights to the Pacific ocean: Provided, however, That the navigation of the whole of the said channel and straights south of the forty-ninth paralell of north-latitude remain free and open to both parties.

Art. II. From the point at which the forty-ninth paralell of north latitude shall be found to intersect the great northern branch of the Columbia river, the navigation of the said branch shall be free and open to the Hudson Bay Company, and to all British subjects trading with the same, to the point where the said branch meets the main stream of the Columbia, and thence down the said stream to the Ocean, with free access into and through the said river or rivers, it being understood that all the usual portages along the line thus described shall in like manner be free and open. In navigating the said river or rivers, British subjects, with their goods and produce, shall be treated on the same footing as citizens of the United States; it being, however understood that nothing in this article shall be construed as preventing, or intending to prevent the Government of the United States from making any regulations respecting the navigation of the said river or rivers not inconsistent with the present treaty.

Art. III. In the future appropriation of the territory south of the forty-ninth parallel of north lattitude, as provided in the first articele of this treaty, the possessary rights of the Hudson Bay Company, and of all British subjects who may be already in the occupation of land or other property lawfully acquired within the said territory, shall be respected.

Art. IV. The farms, lands, and other property of every description belonging to the Puget's Sound Agricultural company, on the north side of the Columbia river, shall be confirmed to the said company. In case, however, the situation of those farms and lands should be considered by the United States to be of public and political importance, and the United States Government should signify a desire to obtain possession of the whole, or any part thereof, the property so required shall he transferred to the said government, at a proper valuation, to be agreed upon by the parties.

Art. V. The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate therof, and by her Brittanic Majesty; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London, at the expiration of six months from the date hereof, or sooner, if possible.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

Done at Washington, the fifteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

JAMES BUCHANAN, [L.S.]
RICHARD PAKENHAM, [L.S.]

And wheras the said treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at London, on the seventeenth ultimo, by Lewis McLane, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, and Viscount Palmerston, her Brittanic Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the part of their respective Governments.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, JAMES K. POLK, President of the United States of America, have caused the said treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be fixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this fifth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred [L.S] and forty-six, and of the Independence of the United States the seventy-first.

By the President: JAMES K. POLK.
JAMES BUCHANAN, Sec. of State.

My Mother's Tear.

How wonderful are the workings of Providence! The feeblest instruments are often selected to accomplish the mightiest ends. When hope has well-nigh forsaken the human breast, the slightest circumstance, interposed by infinate wisdom, reanimates its warning influence, yea, heavings of dispair frequently become dispensers of thrilling joy. Of this fact, my own ease is a verification.

I had a mother once, a fond beloved parent. Oft she pressed me to her bosom, and kissed the tears from my cheeks.—Her soft lullaby hushed me to slumber; her gladsome smile greeted my waking eyes. I loved her with all the strength and ardor of youth. In return, I enjoyed the fulness and tenderness of a mother's affection. I was happy. My light heart fancied that she too was happy. But 'twas not so; a secret canker gnawed; an unknown sorrow filled the avenues of joy. Her boy was a rebel to God! She prayed for me, talked to me, pointed me to the bleeding Saviour. Reverently I listened, but hearkened not to her warning voice.

She took me to the sanctuary, and bid me heed the man of God. I saw him open the Book Divine. Gracious words fell from his lips. His eyes swam with tears, and his own heart melted at the tale of love he told. He spoke of the glories of Eternity, of angel-music, such as well might 'wander down to this dim world, to fashion dreams of heaven.' He imaged man a seraph, mighty in grandeur, unsurpassed in brightness, Anon he mentioned a hell, an awful place of torment, where damned souls are overwhelmed in gulfs of endless wo. Nothing moved, I heard him; yea, my stout heart did rise superior to those thunder-peals of wrath, and pass unheeded the winning softness of heaven-born compassion.

My mother, full of direfull sadness, led me home. Scarce restrained she those scalding tears, which hopeless anguish starts. In a few days she pressed the couch of suffering. Death, the loveliest of seraphims to the weary pilgrim, drew near. The wavings of his downy wing fanned her flushed cheeks. I was called to bid her farewell. She clasped my hands in hers, and gazed a moment intently, as if to read my inmost soul; then upward turned her streaming eyes, and besought Almighty God to pity her erring child. 'Twas enough. The sight of a dying mother shedding tears for me, had melted my heart, though it had been adamant. I felt my ingratitude and heartlessness in a moment weigh upon me like a mountain. I dwindled to conscious insignificanee. I seemed a mass of iniquity, detestable, abhorrent. Pride of mind fled terrified; and my heart of stone became pliable as wax. I wept. I threw my arms around her neck, pressed my parted lips to her now pale cheek, and gave full vent to the gushing tears of penitence.

She died. Oft have I visited her tomb; as oft hath memory recalled the parting scene. That manifestation of deep affection is indelibly fixed in the mind; nor time, nor eternity can efface it. My mother's tear converted me, and saved my soul from hell. How wonderful its power! It succeeded where impassioned eloquence and deepest pathos failed. It immediately accomplished, what the horrors of an eternal hell, and the raptures of glory essayed in vain. Let parents learn a lesson of confidence in God.—Banner and Pioneer.

To make Hens lay Perpetually.

Hens will lay eggs perpetually, if treated in the following manner:—Keep no roosters; give the hens fresh meat, chopped up like sausage meat, once a day—a very small portion—say half an ounce a day to each hen, during the winter, or from the time insects disappear in the fall till they appear in the spring. Never allow any eggs to remain in the nest for what is called nest eggs. When the roosters do not run with the hens, and no nest eggs are left in the nest, the hens will not cease laying after the production of twelve or fifteen eggs, as they always do when roosters and nest eggs are allowed, but continue laying perpetually. My hens lay all winter, and from seventy-five to one hundred eggs in succession.

If the above plan were generally followed, eggs would be just as plenty in winter as in summer. The only reason why hens do not lay in winter as freely as in summer, is the want of animal food, which they get in summer in abundance in form of inseets. I have for several winters reduced my theory to practice, and it proved its entire correctness.—Ex. paper.

To Destroy a Church.

1. Refrain from attending prayer meetings, church meetings, and concorts.

2. Read religious publications but little, and the Bible no more.

3. Be irregular in your attendenee on publie worship on Sabbath, and regularly engaged in every (lawful?) way to make money on week days.

4. Enter your closet with an unburdened heart, and retire confused by the rush of worldly thoughts through your mind.

5. Converce not with your family on religion, or with any others.

6. Pray not with your family.

Those professors who observe these rules, will do more harm to destroy the church, than Fourierities, Jews, Universalists, and Deists. If you disbelieve this, read Rev. 11. 16; I Kings xiii, 18; Judges v. 23; I Cor. v. 58.—Vt. Chronicle.

Good—Better—Best.

The sands run on, Time turns his glass.
And winged moments swiftly pass.

Are you seeking knowledge, gaining knowledge, giving knowledge! If so, it is well. Are you aiming at good, getting good, and doing good? If so, it is better. Are you loving God, obeying God, and glorifying God? If so, this is best of all. Keep up this course, you cannot do better; keep it up, ill or well, day or night, winter or summer. Oh! it is an excellent thing to seek knowledge, to gain knowledge, and to give knowledge; to aim at good, to get good, and to do good; to love God, to obey God, and to glorify God.

THE JUDGEMENT.

Gabriel's trump has borne afar
The signal from Jehovah's bar;
Confusions seize the heavenly train,
That shakes creation's vast domain.
Earth heaves a solemn, awful sigh,
Whilst thunders rend the livid sky,
And lightnings wing their curling flight,
Wrapping the clouds in robes of light.
Elemental flames pervade the whole,
And terror reigns from pole to pole.

A voice is heard—it speaks to all,
And mortals heed the judgement call.
Angels hear with majestic dread
The dire summons that wakes the dead;
Whilst slumb'ring myraids, from the tomb,
Stalk forth to meet their final doom.
The sea heaves up her wat'ry store,
And millions press to gain the shore.
The sound revives the peopled dust,
And death restores her countless trust.

Lo! from heaven the Judge decends;
His court an angel band attends.
Glory enshrouds His scept'red brow,
And triumph waits His coming now.
The nations view in dread dismay
The wonders of the judgment day;
And meet with awe their soverign Lord,
Who comes to prove them by His word.
Before His throne they all appear,
With tremblings vast their doom to hear;
But yet the righteous calmly wait,
And learn entranc'd their joyful fate;
Whilst sinners gaze in dread despair,
With haggard looks and hopeless pray'r,
That rocks and mountains might obey,
And hide them from that awful day.

The truth is told—the sentence pass'd,
That bars them from the Christian's rest;
Ye living learn,—the warning take,
Nor dare delay your peace to make;
Choose Christ, in life, the morning star,
And then thou wilt not dread His bar.

THE LIFE-CLOCK.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

There is a little mystic clock,
No human eye hath seen,
That beateth on—and beateth on,
From morning until e'en.

And when the soul is wrapped in sleep,
And heareth not a sound,
It ticks and ticks the livelong night,
And never runneth down.

O! wonderous is that work of art,
Which knells the passing hour;
But art ne'er formed, nor mind conceived,
The life-clock's magic power.

Nor set in gold, nor decked with gems,
By wealth and pride possessed;
But rich and poor, or high and low,
Each bears it in his breast.

When life's deep stream, 'mid beds of flowers,
All still and softly glides,
Like the wavelet's step with a gentle beat,
It warns of passing tides.

When passion nerves the warrior's arm
For deeds of hate and wrong,
Though heeded not the fearful sound,
The knell is deep and strong.

When eyes to eyes are gazing soft,
And tender words are spoken,
Then fast and wild it rattles on,
As if with joy 'twere broken.

Such is the clock that measures life,
Of flesh and spirit blended;
And thus 'twill run within the breast,
Till that strange life is ended.

Ohio Camp-meetings.

We have received a letter from brother Megrew, giving an account of the Ohio camp-meetings. The letter being too late for this number, will appear in our next.

Christian Union.

We promised in our last to resume and continue the article on this subject, in this number: but finding the paper partly "made up" on our return from the Adams county camp-meeting, we shall be obliged to defer this subject a little longer.

A Word to the Wise.

Christians are wise, but not always as wise as they might be. There is room for improvement. By diligent study and fervent prayer, they might grow wiser and better. It is written, "be wise." This injunction makes wisdom a duty; and if a duty, then Christians should be teachable and carefully study the science of heavenly wisdom: and besides its Divinely authorized Teacher, should not only be apt, diligent and persevering in teaching all the principles and duties of the heaven-born science, but also point out and expose the errors and discrepancies that may have crept in among the people of God, and become incorporated with their faith and practice.

To the wise children of the kingdom we wish, therefore, to speak a word "for correction in righteousness," that they may learn to be still more "wise and harmless." We have latterly observed some discrepancies and unseemly things among some of the brethren of the "Church of God," in sundry places, which we could heartly wish were "set in order." We mean,—

I. Promiscuous Praying.

By promiscuous praying, we mean a confused and indiscriminate mixture of different prayers, at one and the same time. In other words, the praying out of a number of persons, at once, in an indiscriminate manner. We have heretofore frequently borne our testimony against this unscriptural and hurtful practice. We should like to see the brethren set in order and reform this custom,—

I. Because we believe it to be unscriptural;
II. Because it is unreasonable; and,
III. Because it is injurious or hurtful.

I. We believe the practice of promiscuous praying to be unscriptural.

1. Because the scriptures require union and agreement in praying. "When ye pray, say our Father," &c. Luke 11: 2. We understand the Saviour to mean, pray together to your Father in Heaven, and ask jointly and unitedly for the same things, after the manner He there taught them. If, in this opinion, we are correct, then for one to say, "my Father," and another, "our Father," and a third something else, &c.; and so the whole assembly pray promiscuously, instead of jointly and unitedly; this, we say, is wrong and unscriptural. Again: Christ says, Matt. 18: 19, "If two of you shall agree on earth, as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven." This text clearly shows that agreement in prayer is required; and if so, then Christians should be careful to avoid promiscuous praying, and observe agreement and union in prayer. And mark! brethren, mark this promise well. If the joint prayer of but two shall not fail to be heard, how much less the united prayer of many.

2. Because the scriptures show agreement in prayer among the primitive Christians. "They lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God," &c. Acts 4: 24. "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also; else, when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say, Amen, at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest." 1 Cor. 14: 15, 16. These, and other passages, show agreement. Primitive Christians prayed with one accord. One lead in prayer, and the rest said, Amen, to his petitions and giving of thanks. Of course they did not frame different prayers of their own at one and the same time; for had they done so, they could not have said, Amen, understandingly, to each others prayers.

3. Because the scriptures make edification the end of all social acts and exercises of religious worship. "Let all things be done to edifying." 1 Cor. 14: 26. Promiscuous prayer cannot edify; therefore, promiscuous prayer is not scriptural.

4. Because the scriptures declare that God is not the author of confusion, but of order. 1 Cor. 14: 33. Hence the Apostle exhorts: "Let all things be done decently and in order;"—chap. 14: 40. Unity and agreement in prayer, as we have seen, is the order of God; therefore, a promiscuous mixture of all kinds of prayers is unscriptural.

II. Promiscuous praying is unreasonable, because it is destructive of edification; and because, on most occasions, it is disapproved of by its warmest advocates. For instance: who approves of it at meal-time, at a funeral, or in a sick room? Why nobody. And why not! Because reason dictates a better course. Reason and revelation always agree and harmonize with each other. Revelation may surpass reason, but it never contradicts reason. What, therefore, is clearly and manifestly unscriptural, is likewise unreasonable. Hence, if promiscuous praying is the one, it is also the other. We say it is both.

III. Promiscuous praying is injurious and hurtful. It is so, both to saints and sinners.

1st. It is hurtful to saints or Christians. But how so? Why in many ways.

1. It wears them out; especially in seasons of revivals.

2. It deprives them of the benefit and edification of each others prayers.

3. It makes the delightful duty of prayer an erksome task, and begets a weariness and surfit in the service of God: and this frequently manifests itself by a loathsome gapping and yawning, even in time of prayer. But,

2dly. It is hurtful to sinners. Some it drives away from meeting; others it confuses and bewilders, so that they can derive no benefit; and others, again, it fills with levity, prejudice, and other hurtful feelings and passions.

Now all these things are stubborn facts, which cannot be denied. We hope our young and unexperienced brethren will seriously weigh and ponder these things in their hearts. We have long wished for a reform in this matter; and the reasons we have so earnestly desired it, are those we have here briefly given. Search, then, dear brethren, and see whether these things are so. And if you find them so, then begin the work of reform in good earnest.

In our next number we shall point out a few things more, which, we think, greatly stand in need of some rectification.

New Societies.

The Christian Chronicle, a Baptist paper, published in Philadelphia, contains a letter from D. W., the editor of the Bible Student, at Hagerstown, Md, requesting the Baptists to send a minister to establish a Baptist church in Hagerstown.

He states, among other things, "that there are many people through that country holding Baptist principles, who are like sheep without a shepherd." He further states, "that the people there are FASTIDEOUS, and on account of the ODIUM attached to the NEW SOCIETIES, "DISCIPLES," "CHURCH OF GOD," &c. stand aloof, notwithstanding they are convinced of the truth of Baptist principles."

Will Mr. D. W. please to tell us by what authority he calls the "Church of God" a new society? who, about Hagerstown, attaches odium to her? and the whereabouts of those many professors who are like sheep without a shepherd?

If the "Church of God" is a new society, what are the Baptists? If the "fastideous people" of Hagerstown attach odium to the "Disciples" and "Church of God," what will they do to the Baptists, provided D. W. and others should form such a new society in that place? Why does not D. W., and other ministers with Baptist principles in that section of country, pity those "many destitute professors of religion, who hold Baptist principles," and let them have the Gospel, or minister to them in holy things, so that they may not remain as sheep without a shepherd, till the Baptists get to Hagerstown.

Again, D. W. says, "he has no doubt, should a regular Baptist church be started in Hagerstown, it would flourish and do well; that some eighteen or twenty persons in town, of good character, would fall in, besides a considerable number in the country."

If these assertions be true, then may we be permitted to ask, why do not those eighteen or twenty persons of good character in Hagerstown, and that considerable number in the country, fall in with the "Church of God?" Is it because of the odium attached to her! If so, we question the goodness of their character, and the Baptists had better beware of them. Again: if a Baptist church may flourish and do well at Hagerstown, why not the "Church of God!" Howbeit, if the people there are so fastideous, that neither the "Disciples" nor the "Church of God" can please them, we very much question whether the Baptists can, should they even have D. W. at their head.

Once more D. W. says further, "that HAGERSTOWN contains a population of more than seven thousand souls—that the people are emphatically a religious people—and that it is surrounded by a country of as much wealth and intelligence, as any in the State of Maryland."

Now all this may go for what it is worth; but we think it needs some rectifying. The people there can judge for themselves. But be this as it may, sure we are that the "Church of God" is no new society. See Acts 20: 28.

Correspondence

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

Much has been said and wrote concerning the destruction of the wicked, which has had a tendency of leading away from the truth some unstable souls, through a gross perversion of the truth as it is in Jesus; and which has also led the writer of this to the examination of the subject, and through conversation with some of its advocates, was led to a controversy, by letter, with one of the advocates of Destructionism.

My first letter was written after the prediction of the 22d of October failed, and wherein I stated that, while G. Storrs and the advocates of the 22d of October were disappointed, they must have been in error, &c. Then I received an answer from the person professing himself a believer in Storrism, and afterwards another, and in both letters the doctrine of Destructionism was advocated with different other points. I then undertook to refute them, and answered both letters in one; but as both letters contain in part the same things, I shall try to arrange the different items in order, and treat them separately.

1st.—Storrite: I caution you to take care, that in digging a pit for G. Storrs and others, that in the end you fall not in yourself.

Believer in Bible Truth: I cannot answer for others, but I answer for myself—that I never was concerned in digging pits for others to fall into. The bottomless pit is prepared by the Eternal Jehovah for the Devil and his Angels, and where all those who despise God's immutable word, and who live and die in their sins, shall receive their portion.

2d.—S. You know that you defended the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ in times past; but from your letter I conclude that you are now more of an enemy than a friend of the same.

B. B. T.—Herein you are greatly mistaken. I cannot see how you can come to this conclusion. I never said any thing verbally or in my letter, in opposition to the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ, and I defy you to prove the charge. What I said and wrote, was concerning the doctrine of G. Storrs, for denying the immortality of the soul!

3.—S. Take the doctrine of the Second Advent out of the Bible, and there will not be much more left of the doctrine of Christ and His Apostles.

B. B. T.—Strange, indeed, to think that there is not much more in the Bible beside Adventism. But I am determined to leave the doctrine of the Second Advent in the Bible, and believe in it as firm as ever I did; but not so with the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked! This I can take away without altering one single syllable of the word of God. It is true the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ is a glorious doctrine to the Christian, but so likewise is death, and the happiness of the soul hereafter in glory, especially in seasons of temptations, persecutions and trials, for then it causes joy to think that soon all these troubles will be over, and we shall be with the Lord.

4.—S. I cannot conceive that I committed so great a sin in believing that Christ would come on the 22d of October, as you believe me to have done.

B. B. T.—I did not say anything about you sinning in believing that Christ would come on said day; but I said you were disappointed, and if there was any sin committed, it was committed in the act of censuring and condemning all others who did not believe it.

5.—S. I often wonder that you call yourselves the Church of God, and are not united among yourselves.

B. B. T.—If disagreement in opinions destroys the right of assuming the name, which the mouth of the Lord has given, then surely you are not entitled to that name; for who differs more than Advent believers?

G. Storrs and others believe in the destruction of the wicked, and W. Miller, with some others, are opposed to it. Some are Unitarians, others Trinitarians—some are infant sprinklers, others immersionists—some are Calvinists, others are Armineans, &c. &c. The "Church of God" is agreed in all the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ. But I admit that there are some minor parts wherein they do not fully agree.—Now if you are not united among yourselves, why censure others for not agreeing fully and in all things? Physician, heal thyself. Remember, likewise, Christ says, (Matt. 7: 5) "Thou hypocrite! first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

6.—S. Christ says: "If a kingdom or house be divided, it cannot stand."

B. B. T.—True, but you will please to apply this to yourselves, before you apply it to others: for, I say again, there is no body of people, to my knowledge, more divided in sentiments than you are.

7.—S. You have much to say about the life of God in the soul, but I told you before that the life of God does not consist in much noise and rejoicing, but in keeping the commandments of God, and in an upright walk and conduct.

B. B. T.—We never said, and we do not believe, that much noise makes the life and power of God, or else that cry, concerning the Great Goddess Dianna, would have been the life and power of God: but if we examine the word of God, we find that when the prodigal son returned home to his father's house, there was music and dancing; and do you not think where music and dancing is, there is also noise?

Further, I believe that if God's people live holy and keep His commandments, there will be more or less joy. The Apostle speaks of "rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory." A holy walk and a chaste conversation, and the keeping of the commandments of God, is the duty of every Christian; and only in proportion as he dies to things of a worldly nature, so he becomes alive in heavenly things. John says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him: for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." John 2: 15, 16. If, then, the man of God dies to all those things, he lives to God, and his life is hid with Christ in God.

What I understand about the life of God in the soul, consists in man's entire resignation to the will of God, and is possessed of the same spirit that our Lord and Saviour has.—The Christian can say: "Lord, not my will, but thine be done." And his privilege it is to feel a sweet repose within; and when he approaches God, either in public or private prayer, God hears and answers prayer, and blesses his soul, and this with some causes such joy, that they rejoice aloud and leap for joy; and this, we say, is the production of the life and power of God; and no person but a formalist, an infidel, a scoffer, or a self-destroying sinner will oppose it.

ALETHES.

The Importance of Sabbath-Schools.

The importance of a well-regulated Sabbath-school to a community, will be acknowledged to be great by all possessing a common share of good sense. And whenever we hear persons, professing Godliness, opposing this noble institution, our charity is prone to trace the cause of their opposition to their ignorance of its benefits to the rising race; for apart from this, we cannot possibly believe such to be in any other state than that of moral darkness; and our counsel to them is, examine your hearts, for we greatly fear they are not right in the sight of God. Indeed, until very lately, we wist not that the vilest depraved wretch on earth, had aught to say against Sabbath-schools, but have since sorrowfully learned that some, making high pretensions to religion, vehemently fight against this plan to bring souls to Christ. Shame on such canting professors of religion! Are such persons better than heathens, maugre their profession of piety? Will not the heathen rise up in judgment against them at the judgment day?

In giving in our testimony in favor of this religious institution, we are led to retrospect our school-boy days, and remember with pleasure the Sabbath-school. There, at the appointed hour, we assembled with our teachers, ready to recite our lessons, and to hear pious admonitions from their lips: there we were taught to sing praises to God, and there we learned to kneel and pray to God; and, although to man's week judgment, the seed sown at that time, might have seemed to fall on unfruitful ground, yet it was not so in a few years after it sprang forth to glorify and serve God. Many of the regular attendants at that Sabbath-school, are now hopeful converts of the Cross of Christ, and are engaged in trying to lead others to the narrow way that leads to eternal life. As for myself, I can well remember the tears I shed over my depraved state, while reading the instructive and interesting library books, in some sequestered corner, apart from my companions and the world.—Many good thoughts and pious resolutions flitted before my mind in these heart-softening seasons. No one knew the effect thus wrought on my then young and tender heart but God: no one knew of the tears, the sighs on account of my sins: no one heard the prayers that I uttered for forgiveness but Him, (and I praise His matchless name,) that my prayers were finally heard. I shall always look upon that Sabbath-school as one of the grand means that contributed to lead me to God. And the testimony of every candid and discerning person, taught in a Sabbath-school, will be the same. In view of these things, we are determined to advocate Sabbath-schools, fearless of denunciations from any quarter whatever; and though some men may act like devils in opposing them, we will defend them. Let them rave and rail, but we will not yield an inch until we gain the victory over those of whom the Saviour said, "Ye are of your father the devil."

A word to parents, and we shall conclude for the present. Would you see your children pious, and walking in the right ways of the Lord, give them pointed religious instruction at home, and send them regularly to the Sabbath-school. But would you see them, in a few years, inmates of a jail, penitentiary, or worse, perhaps in a brothel; let them stroll over the fields on the Lord's-day; let them do as they please about going to the Sabbath-school; put no check upon their evil inclinations; and tho' you profess to know God, yet by your works you deny Him, and are, demon-like, letting your offspring rush to disgrace here, and Hell hereafter! For it is a notable fact, that men and women that were in youth punctual and attentive Sabbath-school scholars, are not to be found in our penitentiaries, or jails, or any other disreputable place, but form the religions and moral portion of the world. This is irresistable truth. More anon.

Support of the Ministry---No. 3.

A people who are not willing, or are not careful, duly to provide for their minister, are not, in a state of mind, to be much profited by his labors. There is evidence given at once that they do not "esteem him very highly in love for his work sake." Such as have the means of support, and not the soul to give, ought not to have the audacity to ask for the services of a minister. And such have no right to expect the blessing of God to attend his ministrations to their benefit, if it be covetousness or indifference, which causes their neglect. These are not the feelings which come from above, but from beneath. The neglect of his duty is diametrically opposed to the scriptures of Divine truth. The Eternal God considers it a wrong done to himself. He has remarkably shown himself interested in the just claims of the laborer, and expressed His holy indignation at those who withhold their wages. "Behold, the hire of the laborers, which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." Does God concern himself thus for the wages of the laborer of the field, and is He indifferent to the sustenance of His ministers? Nay; doth God take care for oxen, for the faithful laboring animal, and not for His faithful ministers, who toil day and night, warm and cold, wet and dry weather, in His vineyard? He has called them to their work with a scripture provision before their eyes for support. If this is withheld, He will take care of His servants; but it will not be for the advantage of those who starved them from the walls of Zion. God calls it robbery—a robbing of Him, and declares it to be a reason of His withholding His blessings. Mal. 3: 10.

6th. It is no less the interest than it is the duty of the church to sustain her ministers. It is their privilege to do whatever is necessary to make his ministry among them unembarrassed, cheerful and efficient. This could be done, and well done, in a pecuniary view, if proper means were resorted to. But the Elders wait for the Deacons, and the Deacons wait for the Elders, and both classes of those official brethren wait for the preacher to say something about his salary, his small pittance for his years' services. Thus the matter is deferred from one quarter to another, finally the year expires, and the preacher is dismissed from his appointment with scarcely enough money to defray his expenses to another appointment. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

There is no devoted minister who does not benefit even the pecuniary interests of the church and community greatly beyond the amount of his stipend. All that his influence does to save them from sin, saves them from that which is more expensive than Godliness. Look at the station or circuit that is blessed with an efficient ministry, and the place or country which has none. Compare the sobriety and reputation of the former, with the innumerable vices which prevail in the other—its inebriates, its frolicks, its extravagances, its litigations, and many other tax-levying iniquities, more exhorbitant than the publicans of old. And does not this settle the point, that the Christian ministry is worth more, in a pecuniary view, than it costs? But what is it worth in a religious view? If it hath pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe; and if thus you and your children be saved; if, you spare something of your temporal substance for the support of your minister, while he is instructing you in that wisdom, whose fruit is better than gold, and leading you to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, how immeasurably are you the gainer?—how much is received beyond what is given?—and how blind, how miserable the policy, which prefers the incomputable costs and losses of sin, pecuniary and moral, temporal and eternal, to the trifling burden of a minister's salary!

THOMAS H. DESHIRI.

LANDISBURG, PERRY COUNTY, PA., July 9, 1845.

Letter from Brother John Reis.

MIDDLETOWN, BUTLER COUNTY, OHIO, August 20, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Enclosed you will find three dollars for subscription to the ADVOCATE. I am pleased to know that there is again a paper established, and I hope that therein "THE TRUTH" will be advocated.

In the sixth number of the ADVOCATE, I saw and read two articles on subjects which ought to be understood and practiced by all who profess to be the people of God: I mean the articles on "Union" and "Contributions."

All men who think aright will say, that one of the attributes of the Almighty, is INFINITE WISDOM. Hence we naturally conclude, that in all things appertaining to His creatures, He has adopted the best plan. Now as the Lord has inspired His Apostles to found or organize His Church, He naturally, through the Apostles, laid down the plan which suits the human family in the present circumstances best: to say the contrary, would be blasphemy.

Hence, the Apostolic precepts and practice must be the great regulating law to the human family in all times.

And we must ever remember, that ALL points or doctrines of scripture must be EQUALLY regarded; and by consequence the doctrine of the unity, title, or name of the church, which is one of the most necessary and fundamental of all that is taught in the scriptures, must be understood and regarded by all those who would found or organize churches. Whenever the Apostles speak (in the Acts or Epistles) of the people of God or saints, in their church capacity, they denominate them the "CHURCH OF GOD."

The pretending reformers, or originators of sects, since the days of the Apostles, with few exceptions, have always over-looked this point. And this, I believe, has been the prime means of introducing or begetting the various contending sects; for had they understood and regarded, and attended to this one point, namely, that as people became believers, they (the reformers or originators) would in every place have united, or organized the believers into a church or congregation, and called such a society of disciples the CHURCH OF GOD, as the scriptures plainly teach, then the unity of the church would have been preserved, (see 1 Cor. chap. 1, to end of chap. 4—chap. 10, 32 and 11—verses 16, 22, 15 & 9. Gal. 1: 14. Acts 20: 28. 1 Thes. 2: 13) and there never could have a sect arisen in the world. No matter how heterodox in their notions, there could have been no sect formed, (while the professors all held the same name, or church title) because in all towns, cities and places, there would have been no name assumed or known by professors of the Christian religion, but the scriptural one—the "CHURCH OF GOD."

But how lamentable it is, that the pretending reformers, or originators of sects, did assume human sectarian names and titles; and then, also, begin to glory in them. How often can we even hear it said from the pulpit: "Thank God for—ism." This, in my opinion, is glorying in their own shame. And then, as a consummation of this mystery of iniquity, the sects made their creeds and confessions of faith, and now glory in them, rely more on them than they do on the word of God; for if they did not, they would surely abandon them.

Now the only remedy that can heal the divisions amongst professors of the different sects, is making the scriptures the only rule of faith. Some sects plead for "the scriptures, as they would make us believe, as their only rule of faith and practice;" yet they permit themselves to be deceived and prejudiced by the over-weening reverence for the opinions of some "great man," (whom they call the originator of their ism) and the same obsequious submission to his authority, influences and binds them as sectarian creeds, confessions of faith, &c., do other sects. Thus they will tell us that the Bible alone is their rule of faith and manners; but they have the sentiments or notions of the originators of their sect interposed between them and the Bible: they lean more to what such have said than what the scriptures teach: hence, they are as much sectarian as those who hold to written human creeds and confessions of faith.

The reason why the Saviour did succeed but partially in reforming the Jews, was not that His plan was imperfect, but because of their traditions. Mark 7: 7, 8. By holding to them, they made the word of God of none effect, &c. The Gospel is the "power of God to salvation to every one that believes," and obeys the truth as contained in the Bible, or acts according to the teaching of Christ the Saviour. Traditions made the Jews oppose the Saviour more than all their other sins.—Read the Gospel carefully, and see why the priests, &c., opposed the Saviour. Holding to traditions was the great sin of the Jews; and the same is the great sin of us Gentiles in our sectarian age.

The first step in a reformation is, we must learn, believe, and feel the truth of the Gospel, as infallibly as we know that two and two make four; then we will naturally act accordingly. For to talk of believing a certain fundamental doctrine or sentiment, and act the contrary, is mere mockery and hypocrisy! When we thus act consistent with our knowledge and belief, we will naturally try to the utmost of our power to make it known to others. For instance: If a person knows and feels once the necessity of the union of the "CHURCH OF GOD," he will at all times, when opportunity offers, do what is in his power to make others know and feel the necessity of that subject: so with every thing that wants reforming in the church. The professed teacher of the Gospel, especially, has most opportunity to enlighten the people on all such subjects that want reforming.

But then here stand great obstacles in the way,—self-interest, preconceived opinions, prejudice and bigotry, (which have neither eyes nor ears) shut up the avenues of reason, and blind the understanding.

While a person does not fairly and honestly search, clearly understand, and, in a God-fearing spirit, feel a subject, he cannot, he will not act; the opposite interest influences him to the contrary.

Those persons and sects that are the nearest right, are the most guilty before God, if they receive not the whole truth, because they have the least to renounce and turn from to become right: they ought to be a pattern for those more deeply traditionized.

There must much sectarian rubbish be paired off before the church will be ONE united body, as she ought to be. Small sandbars will be washed away through the wave of love; but the wall between sprinkling and immersion is a mountain of adamantine rock, which can never be broken down but by the Word understood and believed.

It is vain for sectarians to talk of reformation, while they continue to retain their sectarian peculiarities, and seek to combine truth with error. It is impossible to reform error—it must be abandoned; and until they do this, they themselves cannot be reformed. Hence the necessity of free discussion on all subjects that want reforming.

We perceive from the scriptures that every church of God, or congregation of Christians, if scripturally organized, is a benevolent society. And, surely, if the church was what she ought to be, Christians need not be put to shame, as they now are, by the world. But as the church has become deficient in her duty, the world, which is wiser in her generation than the (professed) children of light, has got up all kinds of selfish mock-benevolent societies, to the disgrace and reproach of the professed people of God.

All the lovers and imitators of Jesus, in every place, ought to unite in forming a benevolent society to relieve the poor, &c. &c. Every member ought to contribute weekly, as the Lord has prospered him. In a world like this, nothing can, either in church or state, be done so well by individual exertion, as by combined effort. A few individuals might exhaust their all, beggar themselves, and do but little good; hence the necessity of combined effort, which makes the burden light for all.

These subjects ought to be discussed freely, so that people would understand and be constrained to act; for without the union of Christians, and a combined effort to spread the Gospel, there is no hope of the world's regeneration.

My sheet is full, and I have no more room at present—I must therefore conclude.

I remain yours, &c.,

JOHN REIS.

Letter from Elder F. N. Barlow.

MARTINSBURG, BLAIR COUNTY, PA., August 26, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Having promised in my last to write to you again, I accordingly embrace the present opportunity to fulfil my engagement. I closed the meeting at the Forges on the 16th ult., which resulted in the conversion of thirty-seven souls. During the meeting, I buried twenty willing lambs with their precious Lord in baptism, and some others are to follow the Lord in this ordinance on the day of my next appointment at that place.

The little church, which consisted of but six members when the meeting commenced, now numbers twenty-nine; most of whom are warm and zealous in the cause and service of their Holy Redeemer. "Despising the shame," they seem with the Apostle, to delight only "in the Cross of our Lord and Saviour." It is an interesting sight, indeed, to behold their love one for another, and with what affectionate, grateful earnestness they cling to their Divine Lord and to His truth. Some of them have been beset on every hand, by those who would draw them from the obedience of the truth; but trusting in the Lord, and in the guiding influences of the Holy Spirit, and through the searching of the word of truth, they have been led by Divine grace to triumph in obedience. And, notwithstanding some of them were persecuted by their friends, yet believing the promise of God, that when these forsake them, "the Lord shall take them up," they have trusted in Him solely, "and proved to a gazing multitude their strong attachment to their beloved Lord, by following Him in all the ordinances of His appointment blameless," and have truly found that "obedience is better than sacrifice."—Some others, I understand, are prohibited from obeying the truth, and following the Lord fully, (by their parents, who are professors of religion*) and one of these has gone back again to the world, in consequence of such prohibition. O! how much will such parents have to answer for in the day of God's retribution!

You recollect when I wrote before, I informed you of the union which existed then between Christians; but I am sorry to say, that before the meeting closed, this union, for the most part, seemed to have ceased. Still, there are some few of the Methodist brethren, whose souls are so filled with the love of God and love to their perishing neighbors, that no place for bigotry and prejudice could be found in them. These have continued to labor with us as before, and we rejoice in their society.

* O! shame, where is thy blush?

May the Lord ever comfort, sustain and bless them! But a large majority of them became offended at me because I gave out an appointment to baptize, and to give our views, or rather the views of the Bible, on the subject of baptism. One of their preachers told me I had insulted the ministry. I asked him in what respect. He said that I had no need to baptize these people till the meeting closed, then let them go where they pleased. I replied that they were at perfect liberty to go where they pleased; but as they had for more than a week been wanting to be baptized, I felt it my duty to baptize them. He then came down from the stand, went to the leading members, talked with them, and then appointed a meeting for his brother, (who was with him) at the same place for the next day. But not succeeding very well, he removed it two miles away, where, in the language of another of their ministers, they started an opposition line. But they soon found that the Lord did not bless with prosperity opposition lines, especially when they run against His interest, and to the injury of His cause; and that He would and did bless, in spite of all opposition, His true cause to the salvation of many souls. O! that the Almighty God would pity such men, and lead them to unfeigned repentance before God, for all their wickedness and evil doings. We hope that the brethren will pray for us, and especially for the little ones, that the hand of the Lord may be upon them—that they may be kept from falling, and that they may increase more and more in the love and favor of God.

In Christian love, I remain
Yours in Christ,
F. N. BARLOW.

Letter from Elder Jacob Brewer,

Giving an account of the Orwigsburg Camp-meeting.

ANNVILLE, PA., August 20, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I thought proper to write a few lines through the ADVOCATE, and let the friends of Zion know what God has done for us at our late camp-meeting, which was held on the land of brother FISHER, about five miles south of Orwigsburg.

We had nineteen tents. Preaching commenced on Monday evening August 10. The brethren appeared to be much revived, and truly we had a glorious time.

Preaching commenced next morning at ten o'clock—congregation small—also, in the afternoon and evening of the same day. But we had five mourners that night: four embraced religion.

The next day we likewise had preaching three times, and a very good time. The next day brothers STROHM, STAMM and BRADY arrived. Brother STROHM preached in the evening, and after preaching an invitation was given to mourners, when four came forward to be prayed for, and also found the pearl of great price.

On Thursday the congregation was large, and that evening there were six that came out to be prayed for, and all six embraced religion. We had a powerful time that night.

Friday the congregation was about the same as day before. In the evening six came out to be prayed for: one found peace.

Nine believers were baptized during this camp-meeting. May the good Lord bless them and keep them faithful! May the Lord have mercy on us all, and prosper His cause among us, and at last save us for His name's sake.

Yours, &c.,
JACOB BREWER.

Letter from Elder Samuel Angle,

Giving an account of the Ockwick Camp-meeting.

SHIPPENSBURG, August 29, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

By request I take up my pen to give you a short account of brother LIXINGER's camp-meeting, which commenced on the 21st of August, and closed on Wednesday the 26th.

Brothers STRAWBRIDGE, LIXINGER and myself, were in attendance, upon whom all the preaching rested. The labors were rather too much, but we done what we could for the people of Ockwick; and, thank God, not without some good effect; and I hope the good seed sown there, under God, may bring much fruit many days hence.

There were about fifteen tents. We had, for the most part, good meetings. Many were convicted and enquired the way. How many obtained peace, I am not able to state—perhaps five or six. None made application for baptism before we left. I was much pleased at the good order among the people of the mountains, and much built up and encouraged, seeing the love and union among the brethren. I hope the Lord may abundantly reward them for their labor of hospitality and love, and keep them faithful in His cause till death.

Yours, in Christian love,
SAMUEL ANGLE.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Religious Destitution of the City of New York.—The Union Missionary says:—"The population of New York in 1845, was 371,000, and it probably amounts now to 385,000. From the Directory of the present year we learn that there are 177 Evangelical churches in that city.—Allowing that each church on an average will accommodate 800 persons, which is probably a large estimate, there will be left a population of 243,000 persons without religious privileges. But 116,000 of these are children under five years of age, and after deducting this number, there still remains a vast population of one hundred and twenty-seven thousand souls within the sound of the church bells, who, if they desired it, could find no place in which to hear the gospel preached.

In view of these facts, is it wonderful that the city prison is crowded with wretched inmates, and that the Penitentiary or Blackwell's Island contains nine hundred degraded criminals of each sex and almost every age, and that there are in the city ten thousand abandoned women who are rapidly journeying to the prison and the prostitute's grave? This is not the age to relax endeavors for the spread of the gospel among the heathen, but surely it is time that strenuous efforts were made for the salvation of these souls."

Important from the Pacific.—CALIFORNIA PROCLAIMED INDEPENDENT FROM MEXICO!—In the Kingston Journal of the 22d ult., the New Orleans Delta finds an article copied from the Despatch of the same city, which begins "Important from the Pacific," and goes on to say.

"We learn on good authority that accounts brought by H. M. brig Daring, announces the important fact that the inhabitants of Upper California had pronounced themselves independent of the Republic of Mexico, and placed themselves under the protection of the United States. It is said that in consequence of this movement on the part of the Californians, the officer in command of the American squadron had hoisted the flag of the United States on this portion of the Mexican territory.

Another time Predicted.—The Second Adventists, in Connecticut, have commenced a paper, called the "Bible Advocate." We give the following extract from the fourth number:

"There is more evidence that the 'days' end in the fall of 1846 or 1847, than there was of their ending in 1843 or 1844. We publish to the world our most solemn conviction, that our Lord will come between this and the close of 1847.—Some of our number preach their unwavering faith that the Lord will come the present autumn. They believe that it should be proclaimed to the world, and especially to believers. Those who look to the spring of 1847 are equally zealous to give a reason of their hope and faith."

All we have to say is, let all Christians live for the glory of God, in the full sense of the term, and then they will be ready for the second advent, whether it should occur now or a thousand years hence.—W. C. Advocate.

Steamboat Building in the West for 1846.—We find the following statistics in the Cincinnati Advertiser, giving the number of steamboats built at the places named:

	BOATS.	TONNAGE.	COST.
New Albany,	11	1,959	$118,500
Louisville,	16	4,152	270,000
St. Louis,	10	2,912	180,500
Cincinnati,	29	7,269	505,500
Pittsburg,	42	5,428	325,500
	108	21,660	$1,400,000

There are at this time not less than seven hundred and fifty steamboats on these rivers, whose tonnage will not fall short of one hundred and sixty thousand tons, and which have cost, in their construction and equipment, not less than twelve millions of dollars. What a magnificent picture of western progress is presented in these facts! Our steamboat commerce is only thirty years old, and a single large boat out of these seven hundred and fifty vessels, could have taken the whole annual produce to New Orleans, which, forty years ago, floated from the West to that port.

Pennsylvania College.—The annual Catalogue of the officers and students of Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, has been published. The whole number of students is 183, divided as follows:—Seniors 16; Juniors 19; Sophomores 20; Freshmen 19; Partial course 11; Preparatory 108.

Tooth-Ache.—We copy the following simple receipt for the cure and prevention of this most excrutiating complaint from the city paper. "Put a piece of lime, about the size of a walnut, into a quart bottle of water; with this rinse the mouth two or three times a day, and clean the teeth, using this water every morning. If it tastes strong, dilute it, for it should be just strong enough to taste the lime and no stronger. I was tormented with the tooth ache for several weeks, till I used this mixture, and never had it since.

An Earthquake at Boston.—The Boston Traveller of Tuesday evening, gives the particulars of an earthquake that occurred in Boston, thus:—"This morning, a few minutes (say three minutes) before 5 o'clock, an earthquake of very considerable violence was experienced in this city and vicinity. We have heard from Cambridge, Newtown, Lynn, Nahant, Salem, Beverly, Westboro' and Worcester, and in these places the houses were shaken, windows and doors rattled, bells were rung, and the slumbering were waked up.

Valuation of Lowell.—The amount of property assessed in Lowell for the year 1846, is, real estate, $9,695,346; personal, $5,443,580—total $15,138,926, being an increase of about half a million over 1845. The tax is $115,627 98—70 cents on the $100. Number of polls, 7437, an increase of 1040 over 1845. One hundred and forty individuals and firms pay a tax of fifty dollars and upwards. Total valuation of the Corporation is $9,222,600—tax, $64,558 20.

Immense Trade in Peaches.—The steamboat Mohegan, Capt. NEWBURY, arrived at New York on Saturday morning last from Delaware City, having on board three thousand six hundred baskets of peaches, from the orchard of Messrs. Peter Reybold & Sons, of Delaware.—The whole cargo was disposed of in an hour after the boat arrived, at the low price of fifty cents per basket.

A Newspaper Printed on Silk.—In Pekin, China, a newspaper of an extraordinary size is published weekly on silk. It is claimed to have been in existence more than one thousand years. It is said that in 1726, a public officer caused some false intelligence to be inserted in this newspaper, for which he was put to death. Several numbers of this paper are preserved in the boys' library in Paris, which are ten and a quarter yards long.

What Effect on the Temperance Cause?—Speaking of the loss of revenue by the new Tariff, the New York correspondent of the Intelligencer says:—

"Take, for example, the article of brandy, of which it is said there is now a million of gallons in New York city. This brandy, under the present law (of 1842) has paid one dollar per gallon duty. By the new bill it will pay a fraction less than one-half dollar per gallon. Consequently, the Treasury will thus sustain an actual loss of five hundred thousand dollars."

Presbyterian Munificence.—Immense bequests have been made in England, Ireland and Scotland, to the Presbyterian Church. The late Mrs. MAGEE, of Dublin, left $88,000 for a college, $111,000 for foreign missions, and $22,220 for home missions in Ireland.

Slavery in England.—Our correspondent states that in England Scotland and Ireland, "more than one half the FIELD labor is performed by WOMEN, who work for ten pence per day!"—TEN HOURS HARD SERVICE FOR TEN PENCE! This single statement gives us a picture of a galling servitude and social degredation, more grinding and oppressive than anything ordinarily known in the annals of American slavery.—Cum. Pres.

The Sunday-School Advocate, published at New York, for the Sunday-School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, circulates 85,000 regularly. This perhaps exceeds the circulation of any other weekly paper in our country. It is stated that every subscription is PAID FOR IN ADVANCE, the only rule by which a newspaper can prosper.

Great Wealth.—A letter from Rome in the Constitutional states that the fortune left by the late Pope to heirs, is estimated at about eleven million of Francs.—Is this the vicegerent of Him who said, "the foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

The Tea Trade.—During the last half of the year 1845, the Tea exported from China to the United States was 8,922,834 pounds, of which 7,250,992 pounds were green tea. The quantity exported to Great Britain in the same time was 37,-853,740 pounds, of which 5,518,907 pounds only were green tea. So says the Merchants Magazine.

Temperance Movement.—The legislature of Maine has enacted a law forbiding the sale of intoxicating liquors at wholesale or retail, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes. Penalty for the first offence, from $1 to $10, second offence $5 to $20, with a bond of $50 to abate the nuisance for six months, and forfeiting all money received for liquors thus sold.

Important and Valuable Invention.—A scientific and practical mechanic, of Baltimore, has just invented an improvement on the paddle-wheel, to be appplied to steamers of the largest class, by means of which the Atlantic may be crossed with the greatest east, and in perfect safety, in six days.

A Saving.—The Post Office Department has saved in one year sixty thousand dollars, by discontinuing certain mail routes on the Sabbath. If the sense of religious obligation were strong enough in the people of this country, we could save much more by stopping all the Sabbath mails.

Real Aristocracy.—Trinty Church, New York, cost $96,000; while the pews have been sold for $103,000. It is said that there is but one mechanic pew-holder in the concern, and that great efforts have been made to buy him out. He won't go, having money enough to maintain his standing.

Won't be a State.—The people of Iowa are much opposed to coming into the Union, with the State lines prescribed by the act of Congress. A new vote was recently taken on the subject, and the few returns received indicate that the proposition has again been defeated.

Elections.—State elections were held on Monday, August 3d, in Alabama, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri; and took place in North Carolina and Tennessee on Thursday, August 5th.—The remaining elections this year will be held as stated below:

Georgia,	Monday,	October 5.
Arkansas,	Monday,	October 5.
Maryland,	Wednesday,	October 7.
South Carolina,	Monday,	October 12.
Pennsylvania,	Tuesday,	October 13.
Ohio,	Tuesday,	October 13.
Mississippi,	Monday,	November 2.
Michigan,	Monday,	November 2.
New York,	Tuesday,	November 3.
New Jersey,	Tuesday,	November 3.
Massachusetts,	Monday,	November 9.
Delaware,	Tuesday,	November 10.

Appropriations by Congress.—The Washington correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser gives the following summary of the appropriations made at the last session of Congress—FIFTY-ONE MILLIONS OF DOLLARS!

For the regular army,	$6,873,000
West Point military academy,	121,776
Prosecution of the war with Mexico,	10,000,000
Pay of volunteers,	11,957,000
Fortifications,	1,440,000
Certain defences,	170,000
Deficient appropriations for 1846,	1,700,000
Support of the navy,	7,450,000
	$39,711,976
Expenditures on account of the Indians,	1,141,000
Pay of members of Congress and wild Indians,	239,000
Civil and diplomatic service,	4,034,000
Post Office department,	4,068,000
	$51,144,000

The expense of the session were upwards of a million; the printing being a quarter of it. Of the whole about forty millions are for the war and will not cover half its expense.

The Public Works of Ohio.—The returns of tolls on the Public Works of Ohio, for the current year, from November 15, 1845 to July 1846, exhibit an increase of $20,-000 over the corresponding period of the previons year.

New Missions.—Seven new missionaries sailed from Boston to India the past week, under the direction of the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary society, after appropriate services and instructions from Hon. Walter Lowrie, Secretary of the Board.

Cotton Crop.—The New Orleans papers contains very discouraging accounts of the cotton crops. The army worm was committing sad havoc in every direction.

Lewes Presbytery.—SECESSION—This Presbytery has withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Triennial Assembly, because of the agitation of the slavery question in that body, and its adoption of Dr. DUFFIELD's paper on that subject.

To Light Matches in Damp Weather.—It may be useful to our readers to know that matches, when too damp to be used in the ordinary way, can be readily ignited by rubbing them gently for a few seconds upon a piece of cork.

The Division of Texas.—The Houston Telegraph refers to a proposition to divide Texas without delay, into two States, the Brasos being the boundary between them, and adds that application has been made, on the suggestion of members of Congress, to the Texan Senators and Representatives, to bring in a bill for that purpose.—Exchange paper.

Breach in the Canal.—The Indiana Republican of the 19th inst. says that there has been quite an extensive breach in the canal between Freeport and Pittsburgh, that will interrupt navigation for a few days.

The Potato Rot.—The Albany Argus says: "Everywhere in this vicinity we hear of the progress of this disease in the potato crop of the present year."

Yale College.—The corporation of this institution have supplied the vacancy occassioned by the resignation of Hon. President Day by electing Professor Woolsey to the Presidency.

Cost of the Telegraph.—The telegraph line from Baltimore to Boston, it is estimated, will be 515 miles in length, and will cost about $230 per mile.

Oregon.—There are now in this country over 6,000 Americans, 3 grist mills and 8 saw mills, and a large surplus of agricultural productions.

Temperance.—Massachusetts has more than 300 towns where not a drop of alcohol can be bought, except from physicians.

Lead.—This article was selling at Galena, some time ago, for $7 for 1000 lbs. It now brings $16.

The Great Fair.—The Great Fair of the American Institute will commence at Niblo's Garden on the 5th of October next.

Fruits of Babel.—The number of known languages now spoken in the world has been estimated at 3664.

☞ The university of Leipsic founded in the year 1400, by German Seceders from the Bohemain university, is the oldest in Germany, except that of Prague. It has 60 professors 70 private teachers, and about 1,000 students. It still retains its own landed estates, and is therefore one of the best endowed institutions in Germany.

☞ We rejoice that Gen. Taylor, while operating against the Mexicans, has also declared war against King Alcohol, and all his agents and worshippers in Matamoras. His proclamation has made sad confusion among the rowdies in that place, and carried death and destruction to the grog shops.

☞ The Rev. T. H. BARNES, a Methodist minister of some celebrity in Crawford co. Pa., has become a Baptist by attempting to defend infant sprinkling.

☞ A New Printing Press has been invented in England with which one stout boy can work off 1500 sheets per hour.

☞ Gov. SLADE, of Vermont, has accepted the presidency of the Oberlin Institute, at Oberlin, Ohio.

☞ The Washington Railroad Company have determined to discontinue Sunday travel.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Return of the Wanderer.

Some years ago a pious widow, who was reduced to great poverty, had just placed the last smoked herring on her table to supply her hunger and that of her children, when a rap was heard at the door, and a stranger solicited a lodging and a morsel of food, saying that he had not tasted bread for twenty-four hours.—The widow did not hesitate, but offered a share to the stranger, saying: "We shall not be forsaken, or suffer deeper for an act of charity."

The traveller drew near the table; but when he saw the scanty fare, filled with astonishment, he said: "And is this all your store? and do you offer a share to one you do not know? Then I never saw charity before! But, madame, do you not wrong your children by giving a part of your last morsel to a stranger?" "Ah" said the widow weeping, "I have a boy, a darling son, somewhere on the face of the wide world, unless Heaven has taken him away; and I only act toward you as I would that others should act towards him. God, who sent manna from Heaven, can provide for us as he did for Israel; and how should I grieve if my son should be a wanderer destitute as you, and should find a shelter, even as poor as this, and be turned unrelieved away?"

The widow stopped, and the stranger, springing from his seat, clasped her in his arms; "God, indeed, has provided just such a home for your wandering son, and has given him wealth to reward the goodness of his benefactress. My mother! O my Mother!"

It was indeed her long-lost son, returned from India. He had chosen this way to surprise his family. But never was surprise more complete or more joyful. He was able to make the family comfortable, which he immediately did, the mother living for some years longer in the enjoyment of plenty.

A Thought for the Churches.

Says a correspondent, "The Church must become willing to give up her Pauls and Peters to the Pagan world before it can be converted to Christ; for there are twenty devils the reto contend with to one at home. I have no partiality for heathen ground as a field of labor aside from a sense of duty." Will Christians form a sense of duty to the heathen, both in Christian and Pagan lands, exercise the self-denial required to effect the world's conversion? Until this is done, the angel flying in the midst of Heaven will not proclaim—that the kingdoms of the world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.

LACONIC REPLY.—A short and comprehensive answer is usually called "laconic reply." The origin of this name is as follows:—A province of Poloponcsus was called LACONIA: the Spartans, who inhabited this province were called LACONES, and were very remarkable for the brevity of their answers. Hence a short answer is called LACONIC.

Secret Creed of the Jesuits.

This Creed is by the Rev. A. Lord, Catholic Reformer, converted by reading the Holy Scriptures, with a multitude of Priests, Monks, Jesuits and Bishops in Canada, Germany, Spain, France and Italy, with a multitude of others that I could mention, but think it not necessary; and we testify to the truth of this:—Rev. Priest Murphy, converted in Montreal; Rev. Priest Cooney, Montreal; G. Lord, Canada; and Bishop Clermont, France.

When we assemble we cross ourselves, saying we acknowledge these our articles in the presence of Christ's Vicar, the Lord God the Pope, and in the presence of the Holy Primates, Bishops, Monks, Priors, and Priests.

1st. We acknowledge they can make vice virtue, and virtue vice, according to their pleasure. They all fall flat on their faces, beginning the articles in this manner, and speaking to the Host, saying—"holy, glorious and admirable host, we acknowledge it according to our great Father the Pope's mind. We must all fall down before the great effigy of our Lord God Almighty."

2d. We all acknowledge the supremacy of the holy Father the Lord God the Pope, and that he is Peter's lawful successor in the chair.

3d. We acknowledge that holy Peter has the keys of Heaven, and will receive all those who acknowledge his supremacy.

4th. We are bound to believe no salvation out of our holy Church.

5th. We are bound to believe that the holy massacre was lawful, and lawfully put into execution against the Protestants, and likewise we are to continue the same, provided with the safety of our lives.

6th. We are bound to curse, ring the bells, and put out the candles four times a year against heretics.

7th. We are bound to believe a heretic can never be saved, unless he be a partaker of that holy sacrament, Extreme Unction.

8th. We are bound to believe that those who elope from our holy religion go into the power of the Devil, whom heretics follow.

9th. We are bound not to keep our oath with heretics, though bound by the most sacred ties; for, say our holy Fathers, they have followed damnation, and Luther and Calvin.

10th. We are bound not to believe their oaths—for their principles are damnation.

11th. We are bound to drive heretics with fire, sword, faggot and confusion (out of the land,) as our holy Fathers say, if their heresies prevail, we will be their slaves—O dear Father keep us from that—(Here the holy water is shaken, and they say "Hail Mary" three times.)

12th. We are bound to absolve, without money or price, those who imbrue their hands in the blood of a heretic.

13th. We are bound to believe that Christ's Vicar, the Lord God the Pope, can absolve all men, heretics excepted, and those given to all clergymen under inspection to do the like.

14th. We are bound to believe the Virgin Mary has more power in Heaven than any other angel.

15th. We are bound to pray to the holy angels that they pray for us.

16th. We are bound to believe in the holy cross, holy spittle, holy water, holy earth, holy bones, holy people and heads, and that they are to be used on certain occasions.

17th. We are bound to celebrate the holy Mass in Latin, having ourselves clothed in holy vestments and shirt, bearing the holy cross on our shoulders, signifying we are Christ's.

18th. We are bound to believe every time Mass is celebrating, there is an expiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead.

19th. We are bound to believe there are four places in Purgatory, viz: Limbus Infantum, Limbus Patrum, Meadows of Ease and Purgatory.

20th. We are bound to believe that Christ was three days in Limbus Patrum, where the souls of holy fathers go till they go to holy Peter.

21st. We are bound to believe that the souls of children unbaptized, go to Limbus Infantum, until original sin is well paid away by the help of holy Masses said for them.

22d. We know that the souls of Christians go to Purgatory, and remain there till we pray them out of it, that we may have power to walk the Meadows of Ease with safety, till it pleases holy Peter, to open for them where no heretic shall ever enter.

23d. We are bound to keep Lent according to our clergy's pleasure, and to maintain the work of supererogation.

24th. We acknowledge the Lake in the North to be holy, called Lough Derg.

25th. We are bound to pray to no other Saint on that day only to whom it is dedicated.

26th. We must baptize bells, consecrate chapels; and no man to enter into the holy office of a priest, only he who is known to be a man.

27th. We maintain seven Sacraments essential to salvation, viz: Baptism, Eucharist, Penance, Extreme Unction, Holy Orders, Conformation and Matrimony.

28th. We maintain that we can transubstantiate the bread and wine into the real body and blood of Christ.

29th. We believe that heretics eat their kind of sacrament to their eternal damnation.

30th. We believe that Christ is everywhere, but particularly in our Church.

31st. We maintain that we cannot marry any heretic woman, without being in danger of judgment.

32d. We maintain that heretics know neither the will of the Prophets nor of Christ.

33d. We maintain and acknowledge that the Rosary of St. Bridget is to be said once a week.

34th. And lastly, that our holy Church can never err.

I shall add to these the second article of Romish Faith.

"I believe in a multitude of intercessors and mediators between God and man, such as the holy martyrs of old, the saints of the Church of Rome, the angels and Arch-angels, but more especially our Lord Jesus Christ and his mother the Virgin Mary, the Queen of Heaven. I believe that I am bound to honor the saints, pray to them and venerate their images and bow to them; but more particularly to invoke most fervently the Blessed Virgin Mary, to whom are due glory and honor forevermore.

Petition for stopping the Mexican War.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY JAMES K. POLK,
President of the United States.

Sir:—Permit us, as citizens of the Republic over which you preside, and as friends of peace and good will among men, respectfully to address you concerning the war now waging under your direction against the Republic of Mexico.

We will not here retrace this war to its origin; but, even if our government was from the first to last right in annexing the Republic of Texas to our own, we still object to the continuance of the present war, and earnestly entreat you to take measures for its immediate termination by recalling our troops from Mexico, and then offering to adjust with her all matters now in dispute either by renewed negotiation, or by reference to umpires mutually chosen.

1. Because such a course alone can open the way honorably for Mexico to renew negotiations for an amicable adjustment of the difficulties between us.

2. Because the continuance of our troops upon the Mexican soil can serve only to keep us in the wrong, to goad Mexico into a more desperate resistance, and thus aggravate the evils of the conflict, as well as postpone the final adjustment.

3. Because we depreciate the growing evils of this war. You called for 50,000 troops. Congress voted $10,000.000 to begin the war; it has been said by some of the ablest statesmen to cost for a time about half a million a day; nor can it continue much longer without wasting many millions more. Meanwhile it is deranging business, demoralizing the community, and threatening to flood no small part of our land with its malign influences.

4. Because it depends entirely on ourselves whether this war shall continue or cease. Withdraw our troops, and there will be the end of it.

5. Because in no other way can the difficulties ever be adjusted. It is idle to talk of settling them by the sword; for war, as Vattel says, never settles any thing, but merely leaves the points in dispute just where it found them, and can at best only force one of the parties into an unwilling adjustment by negotiation. A fair and generous proposal to Mexico, preceded by the withdrawal of our troops, would do more than a score of battles, if each were a victory, to hasten a satisfactory settlement.

6. Because we should hazzard nothing by a course so magnanimous. We can well afford it. We have nearly three times the population of Mexico, and more than ten times her resources; and, with this superiority over her, it would be the extreme of meanness to harass and exhaust a Sister Republic already distracted and impoverished by intestine broils.

7. Because we can obtain by negotiation or reference all our just rights; and, should we by the sword wrest more than these, it would only prove a curse.

8. Because, if we want from Mexico more than we have a right to claim, we can get it by fair purchase far cheaper, as well as more honorably, than by war.

9. Because we dread the reflex influence of this war upon ourselves, if continued much longer. Already it is contradicting our settled policy of peace and justice. Our troops, first an army of observation, and next an army of occupation, have now become confessedly an army of invasion. The experiment is full of danger. We see what a whirlwind of war-excitement swept at a blast over the Great Valley of the West; and when once the old Roman passion for conquest and extended dominion is fully kindled among us, it may spread like a hurricane of fire on a western prairie, and burn on until it has burnt over the last acre on this continent. Let such a spirit get full possession of our people; and our doom, as a free and prosperous republic, is sealed beyond all ordinary means of redemption.

We know not, Sir, why this war should be continued any longer; and we, therefore, request that an immediate stop be put to it by withdrawing our troops from Mexico, and offering to adjust all the difficulties between us by negotiation or reference.

On behalf of the Amer. Peace Society,
GEO. C. BECKWITH,
Cor. Secretary.

Boston, July 20, 1846.

President Polk's Testimony.

The Washington Union, speaking of the industry of the President, says he is not a man of robust constitution, and his good health and ability to endure confinement and intense labor, are to be attributed to his regular and temperate manner of life, and to the fact that the Sabbath is to him a day of rest. On that day his doors are all closed, and he refuses to see all company however distinguised may be the visitor. He always attends church. He has been often heard to remark since he has been President, that all the institutions of Providence were wise, but none of them more so than the institution of a Sabbath; and that on every Monday morning he entered upon the duties of the week refreshed and invigorated from the rest of the preceding day.

Secret for a Farmer's Wife.—While the milking of your cows is going on, let your pans be placed in a kettle of boiling water. Strain the milk into one of the pans taken hot from the kettle; and cover the same with another of these hot pans, and proceed in a like manner with the whole mess of milk, and you will find that you will have double the quantity of good rich cream, and that you will get double the quantity of sweet, delicious butter.

Why the rich should be Liberal.

Riches are the gift of God; they should be used, therefore, according to his will. "Freely ye have received; freely give."

Prosperity is very dangerous. Hence the caution addressed to Israel, "Lest when thou hast eaten, and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied; then thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."

Judicious liberality is invaluable as a means of grace. "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

Many have fallen into great spiritual darkness in consequence of forgetting the declaration of Chirst, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The possession of riches is very dangerous to children. This is proved by our daily observation. In this way God is constantly showing that money is to be judiciously expended, not hoarded up.

The example of Christian liberality is very salutary. Those who see a man of wealth crucifying that "love of money is the root of all evil," acknowledge the Gospel over his heart and life.

The call for money at the present time is very loud. Many young men have been kept out of the missionary field, and many heathens have perished without hearing of Jesus Christ, because the rich were not more liberal. Shall it be so hereafter?

In the case of many rich men, their property is their principal talent. If this therefore is "kept in a napkin," wherein do they honor God!

Rich men, as they approach a dying hour, often regret they have given so little. For one who is soon to appear in the eternal world, it is a sad reflection, "I am going to meet the heathen, and how few will have been saved by my liberality?"—Day Spring.

—o—

Next to the Bible we would place a good religious newspaper. Some may be disposed to smile at such a classification, but we make it deliberately. Could we put but two publications in the hands of any community, family, or individual, they should be the Bible and a religious newspaper. A well conducted paper keeps us informed of the present state of the world, and of the subjects most deserving attention. To a family its value is beyond expression, and they had better make almost any other sacrafice than be without one. The children may be easily interested in it, and this done they are provided with one of the surest and most lasting sources of improvement.—Morn. Star.

Adieu.—There are comparatively few who think when they use this word how much of pious beauty it possesses—conveying as it does the sentiment:—"To God I commit you; may God guard you."

—o—

Virtues are the habits of mind by which we perform duties. The transgression of duty, considered as a habit, is vice. And virtue used generally, includes all special virtues: so vice in general includes all special vices.

Religious Ultraism.

Its sources are: 1 An ardent temperament. 2. Mistaken views of religion.—3. A restless desire of change. 4. The love of distinction. 5. The force of external circumstances.

Its elements are: 1. Self-righteousness. 2. Sensoriousness. 3. Disengenuousness. 4. Inconsistency. 5. Fanaticism.

Its manifestations. It manifests itself: 1. In respect of that which is wrong, by opposing it with an improper spirit. 2. In respect to that which is comparatively indifferent, by urging it beyond its real claims. 3. In respect to that which is right, by promoting it at the expense of integrity and charity.

Its tendencies: 1. It has a tendency to throw open the floodgates of error. 2. To drive many into the opposite extreme of inactivity and formality. 3. To weaken the moral energies of the Church. 4. To supply to the world an apology for the neglect of religion. 5. To absolute infidelity.

The remedies: 1. Careful discrination. 2. Moral courage. 3. Eminent piety.

—o—

The Mormons.

This fanatical and anti-christian people are now divided into three parties, viz:—

1. The "Twelveites," or those who adhere to the twelve prophets who assumed the government of the church after the death of Joe Smith. These are moving to Oregon or California, with the most corrupt, abandoned, licentious, low and groveling portion of the church, now called the "Camp of Israel."

2. The "Rigdonites," who are locating their Zion near Greencastle, Pa. They acknowledge Sidney Rigdon, Esq., as their leader and prophet. Among them, it is said, are many excellent men, who left the 'Twelveites' in consequence of their 'spiritual wife doctrine,' and other abominations.

3. The "Voree Mormons," who acknowledge James J. Strang, Esq., as their prophet, and who consider the 'city of Voree,' upon the borders of Racine and Walworth counties, Wisconsin, as the El Dorado of their hopes. This portion of the church is said to be the most law-abiding, and includes most of the talent and virtue of that people. Most of the churches out of Nauvoo have declared for "Strang and Voree;" and "Voree, Wisconsin," is to be the "great gathering place" of the "Latter Day Saints."

—o—

Traffic in strong Drink morally wrong.

1. It inculcates falsehood.
2. It perpetuates intemperance.
3. It promotes panperism and crime.
4. It diminishes the wealth of the nation.
5. It increases the public burdens.
6. It impairs the health of the people.
7. It deteriorates their intellect.
8. It corrupts the public morals.
9. It shortens many lives.
10. It ruins the immortal soul.

No vender would dare write on his sign board one-half of the evils which he knows his traffic must accomplish, and say, if I do not cause this destruction, somebody else will.

Methodist Camp-meeting in Md.

Baltimore August 21, 1840.

My Dear Brother:—I am just from the Liberty circuit camp-meeting, held at the Bethel meeting-house on the borders of Carroll and Frederick counties; and have the pleasure of communicating the cheering intelligence that, on calling for the names of the converts on the last morning of the meeting, (a practice which ought never to be discontinued,) one hundred and one professed to have found redemption in the blood of Christ, the forgiveness of sins. Doubtless there were others whose names were not received.

But for you, personally, I have tidings of special gladness, which will serve to cheer and refresh you amid the anxieties of your responsible station. Your son, Lennox, after a powerful struggle of nearly twenty-four hours' duration—refusing bodily rest or sustenance until he was comforted—found peace in believing, and loudly proclaimed the joys of delivering grace.

Truly, Doctor, we had a season somewhat after the olden sort.

Yours, rejoicing, S. A. Roszel.

Starting in the World.

Many an unwise parent labors hard and lives sparingly all his life for the purpose of leaving enough to give his children a start in the world, as it is called. Setting a young man afloat with money left him by his relatives, is like tying bladders under the arms of one who cannot swim; ten chances to one he will loose his bladders and go to the bottom. Teach him to swim and he will never need the bladders. Give your child a sound education, and you have done enough for him. See that his morals are pure, his mind pure, his whole nature subservient to laws which govern man, and you have given what will be of more value than the wealth of the Indies. You have given him a start which no misfortune can deprive him of. The earlier you teach him to depend upon his own resources, the better.

—o—

Burnt Rhubarb in Dihaœrrea.—It may be useful to know the value of burnt rhubarb in dihaœrrea. It has been used with the same pleasant effect for more than twenty years. After one or two doses the pain quietly subsides, and the bowels return to their natural state. The dose is from five to ten gains. The manner of preparing is, to burn rhubarb in an iron pot, stirring it until it blackens, then smother it in a covered jar. In no case has it failed where given. It may be given in port wine, milk or water.

—o—

The Difference.—A noble mind is always ready to forgive an injury, and ask forgiveness of an injured friend. A groveling mind never forgives, neither asks to be forgiven.

—o—

Laziness grows on people; it begins on cobwebs, and ends in chains. The more business a man has, the more he is able to accomplish; for he learns to economize his time.

Scene in a Distillery.

Mr. Frederick Walk, a Colporteur in Pennsylvania, gave the Tract "Alarm to Distillers," to a German who was engaged in manufacturing ardent spirits. On visiting him again, he found that he had read it, and was anxious for a German Bible, as he could not read the English version with which he had been supplied. Mr. W. read to him from his Bible, and as he preached Christ and him crucified to him, he seemed affected. "Such a meeting," said Mr. W., "was never before held in that old distillery. It was a wretched place for any one to live in. While I was talking and praying with the family, the poisonous liquor was running into the barrels below, and sending its perfumes through the cracks of the floor. The wife could read English, and purchased the 'Saint's Rest.' I then gave them some more appropriate Tracts, and left them to consider what had taken place."

Righteousness creates a heaven in every man's house in which he enters, and it becomes the glory of the family circle.

EMBARKATION HYMN,

Sung at the Wharf in East Poultney, Vermont, at the departure of sundry Missionaries to the Heathens, in July last.

Fare ye well, O friends beloved!
Speed ye on your mission high;
Give to lands of gloomy error
Living truths, that never die;
Tell, O tell them,
Their redemption draweth nigh.

Bear abroad the gospel standard,
Till its folds triumphant wave,
And the hosts of sin and darkness
Find forevermore a grave:
Till, victorious,
Jesus reigns, who died to save.

Fearless ride the stormy billows,
Fearless every danger dare;
Onward! in your steadfast purpose,
We will follow you with prayer.
Glorious mission!
'Tis the cross of Christ ye bear!

Though our parting waken sadness,
'Tis not all the grief of wo;
There are tears of Christian gladness
Mingling with the drops that flow.
'Tis for Jesus,
That we freely bid you go.

Yes! we would not here detain you,
But our daily prayers shall rise,
Earnest with the love we bear you,
While you toil where error lies:
Fervent pleadings,
For rich blessings from the skies.

Man of God! once more departing,
Hence to preach a Saviour slain;
With a full, warm heart we give thee
To the glorious work again.
Faithful servant!
Thou with Christ shall rest and reign.

Fare ye well! till toils are ended,
And on earth we cease to dwell;
Till around the throne we gather,
Rapt in bliss no tongue can tell:
Friends in Jesus!
Precious kindred—fare you well!

POETRY.

HYMN.

CORRECTED AND IMPROVED BY ELDER M. F. SNAVELY.

When the last trumpet's sound,
Shakes the earth all around,
Then the saints shall arise,
And ascend to the skies—
There to praise Him who died,
For His glorious Bride—
There to praise Him forever,
By Immanuel's side!

Chorus:—
Hallelujah to Jesus, again and again!
We'll praise Him forever—Amen and Amen!
To the Lamb that was slain,
And that liveth again,—
Hallelujah, Hallelujah, forever He reigns!

There the Patriarchs all,
And the Prophets, great and small,
In one company join,
Singing praises Divine,
To the Lamb that was slain,
But from Death rose again,
And ascended to Heaven,
In triumph to reign!
Chorus:—Hallelujah, &c.

The Apostolic bands,
With their uplifted hands,
Giving Jesus the praise,
For salvation by grace,
While the martyrs that bled,
Shall have crowns on their heads,
And from glory to glory,
By Jesus be led!
Chorus:—Hallelujah &c.

There a Peter doth stand,
In the midst of his band,
With his bright shining face,
Praising God for free grace
While a Stephen unites,
With the true Israelites,
Giving glory to Jesus,
In rapt'rous delight!
Chorus:—Hallelujah, &c.

Now arrayed all in white,
Saints and Angels unite,
And in ecstacy gaze,
On the Ancient of days,
In melodious lays,
All their voices they raise,
And all Heaven is fill'd,
With Immanuel's praise!
Chorus:—Hallelujah, &c.

Now redemption they sing,
To their glorious King;
How their voices they raise,
While the Angels sing praise:
O! it rolls o'er the plains!
In what glorious strains—
Hallelujah to Jesus,
Forever He reigns!
Chorus:—Hallelujah, &c.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

BY REV. D. S. WARDEN.

Where shall I go? each mortal cries,
To find this valuable prize,
'Tis something which I long to gain,
May it be found in liberty?

No, cries the man that's long been free,
No happiness do I enjoy
That's permanent without alloy.

Well cries the man where shall I go,
To wealth?—the rich man answers no,
For long I've sought to find the prize,'
In heaps of gold and merchandize,
Still ask the youth what shall I do,
For happiness I must pursue,
Can I in honor find a balm,
You cannot, says the honored man.

Pray, says the student, let me hear
If knowledge will this pearl secure,
For other sources seem to fail,
Perhaps great wisdom will prevail,
But to the sanguine youth replies,
The old and venerable wise,
Tho' knowledge all men should possess,
Yet it will not yield true happiness.

But says the wise, the Christian man,
Let me reveal to you the plan,
Seek first true holiness of heart,
Then happiness will be your part.

Post Office Complaints.

There are various complaints, from sundry quarters, about Post Office irregularities. But some of our subscribers are disposed to think that we alone are in fault, touching these irregularities, so far as the Advocate is concerned; at least they censure us hard to that effect. We beg leave, however, to state that we try to be careful in packing and forwarding the papers; then, if they are mis-carried, the Post Office Department must take the blame: and if they are not lifted in time, but returned because of it, (as it has been the case in several instances) then the subscribers themselves must take the blame. We should feel pleased if all these vexatious irregularities could be remedied. If, however, they are not, we hope our disappointed patrons will bear in mind that there are others in our world, who can make mistakes, besides ourselves. We are for equity and fair play. Hence we want every wrong-doer to bear his own burden.

Camp-meeting Reports.

We publish in this number several interesting accounts of different camp-meetings held in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland.—A spirit of union and harmony seems to have marked and characterized all these tabernacle feasts during the past season. How good and how pleasant it is, when brethren thus dwell and worship together in unity!

It seems, also, that upwards of one hundred precious souls were happily converted to God at the several camp-meetings we have thus far heard from. We hope to be furnished with some further accounts of other similar meetings, by the time our next number is issued. Write, brethren, and let us have all the good news within the bounds of our Lord's heritage. Past contributions inspire a hope of future supplies. Slack not, but drive your pens with accelcrated motion.

Relief Subscription.

It is time this subscription should be paid. We gave notice heretofere that the subscribers would be called on shortly, and we requested them to hold themselves in readiness to make prompt payment. We hope this request will be borne in mind, and that the money subscribed will all be paid between this and the Eldership.

Hot Weather.

In this latitude the weather of the past month was unusually warm. There has been no such hot weather in the month of September since the year 1818, and then it did not continue for so long a period. The thermometer ranged from (in day time) 75 to 91 degrees. The mean of the whole month was about 86 degrees.

Offer of Mediation.

Great Britain has offered its service as a mediator for the settlement of the difficulties between this country and Mexico.

But our government, it appears, has declined the offer.

Mexico offers negotiations for peace, on condition that our government will withdraw our Land and Naval forces. This offer is also declined. Our government is willing to negotiate, but not withdraw the forces.

The Telegraph.

We understand that the line of Telegraph, between this place and Philadelphia, will soon be in successful operation. The line is now finished and in operation between Philadelphia and Lancaster. Who in former ages could have believed that lightning would be employed in conveying news?

Harrisburg Bridge.

The stockholders of this bridge held a meeting recently, to consider the proposals handed in by different architects, for the rebuilding of the bridge, and the propriety of putting the bridge under contract. The result of the whole proceeding was, that it was inexpedient to do anything towards the rebuilding at present.

The citizens have also held a meeting on the subject of rebuilding the bridge, but done nothing, save to appoint a committee to promote the sale of stock.

Nauvoo War.

There have been two battles fought recently at Nauvoo, between the mormons and the Anti-Mormons. The first on the 11th ult., and the other on the 12th. Both skirmishes lasted for several hours; yet few, on either side, were killed.

Great suffering exists at Nauvoo, in consequence of the scarcity of provissions.

To keep Cider Sweet.

Take a pint of pulverized charcoal, put into a slender long bag, or several small slim bags, (such as can easily be put into the bung-hole) then put the bag or bags into a barrel of new cider, and it will never ferment, have no intoxicating qualities, and become more and more palatable the longer it is kept.

Mind this, cider-makers and others. On trial you will find it worth the cost of a paper a year.

The Anniversaries.

The Anniversaries of the "Church of God" will be held this month. See notices on the last page.

We hope the church at large will not forget to pray for these meetings.

Doings of the World's Convention.

This august body met pursuant to appointment, at Exeter Hall, in the city of London, on the 19th of August last.

There were nearly two thousand delegates in attendance, from various nations, and representing different denominations. There were about sixty delegates from the United States.

Sir CULLEN EARDLY SMITH, a relation of the Duke of Wellington, was Chairman of the Convention.

They established a General Evangelical Alliance, to meet every seven years.

They recommended the establishment of Branch Alliances, in different countries, auxiliary to the General Alliance. These are to meet annually, exchange annual reports of proceedings, and maintain official correspondence.

The Alliance agreed on the articles formerly proposed, as the basis of union. They resolved that the parties composing the Alliance, shall be such persons only as hold and maintain what are usually understood to be evangelical views, in regard to the matters of doctrine understated, viz:

1. The Divine Inspiration, authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.
2. The unity of the Godhead and the Trinity of persons therein
3. The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall.
4. The Incarnation of the Son of God, his work of atonement for sinners of mankind, and His mediatorial intercession and reign.
5. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.
6. The work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.
7. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.
8. The Divine Institution of the Christian ministry, and the authority and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.
9. The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.

The great objects contemplated by the establishment of this Evangelical Alliance, are to ensure a larger amount of Christian sympathy, to promote the exercise of Christian charity towards each other, pledging themselves to avoid all rash treatment of each other, and to maintain the meekness and gentleness of Christians, by speaking the truth only in love.

A resolution was adopted recommending the observance of the first Lord's-day in each year, by all the members and friends of the Alliance throughout the world, as a season for concert in prayer, on behalf of the objects of the Alliance.

The deliberations were conducted with closed doors, a proposition for the admission of reporters having been formally discussed and negatived by a large majority.

REMARK.

We hope to be able to give the proceedings of the Convention more fully in our next, together with some strictures on the same

A Word to the Wise.---No. 2.

Another malpractice, which needs to be regulated, is,—

II. Doggeral Singing.

By doggeral singing we mean,—

1. The use of irregular, light, loose, and rapid tunes, sung with vociferous, shrieking and boisterous voices.

2. Bungled, incoherent, irreverent and ranting ditties, songs and chornses.

3. Silly and useless bodily exercises; such as stamping with the feet, clapping the hands, swinging the body, and various other unseemly and rantipole gestures, in time of singing.

These different things, then, in part, or taken together, constitutes what we call doggeral singing. And this kind of singing we consider highly unbecoming and hurtful to the cause of God. It is destructive, on the one hand, of a serious and devotional spirit, and on the other, a fruitful course of levity and irreverence. All persons of reflection, sound judgment and ordinary observation, have readily discovered this to be its uniform and invariable results.

We hope, therefore, that those ministers and members of the "Church of God," who have erred, by falling into the habit of doggeral singing, will try to reform, as well as those who have contracted the habit of promiscuous praying, and learn both to sing and pray with the spirit and with the understanding.

What we want, and what we ought always to strive for, is a serious and heavenly frame of mind. "Our God is a spirit, and they that worship Him acceptably, must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Singing, therefore ought to be so ordered, that it would inspire this state of mind, and make melody in our heart to the Lord.

There are some old hymns and tunes that cannot easily be improved on. Hence the love of novelty ought never to be so much indulged, as to set aside the use of these.

We have often lamented the rage for novelty, and the vitiated tast of modern times; especially in matters pertaining to the worship of God. Old wine is the best. Old landmarks are the truest. Let us, then, my brethren, cleave to things that are excellent, and hold fast to that which is good.

The good old church tunes, and the old psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, are somewhat like the "Gospel;" they will never wear out. Them, therefore, let us never supplant with things inferior.

In the meantime, let us not oppose improvements. We are living in a renowned age of improvements. Every thing around us is going on to perfection. If, therefore, a new or improved hymn or tune, can be introduced to advantage, let it be done; but let care be used—let wisdom and discretion guide us, least "our good be evil spoken of."

Christian Union---No. 2.

We have shown before what Christian union is not, and also what it is. In this number we purpose showing some of the best means for promoting Christian union.—Among these, we reckon,—

1. The exclusive use of scriptural names.—God has the best right of naming His children and church. This right He has exercised.—His children He has called Saints, Christians, Righteous, Friends, Disciples, Brethren, &c. His church He has called the "CHURCH OF GOD."

Now, who has a right to change these names? By what authority do men call the people of God, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, &c. &c., and the church by the same unwarranted nick-names! The same power that changes names, may change laws and ordinances; all which resolves itself into "little hornism."—For the little horn presumes to change "times and laws;" and he that presumes to change the names, which the mouth of the Lord has given, is no better.

It is a sin to nick-name the people of God. This sin must be abandoned. The people of the Most High must be satisfied with, and confine themselves to, the exclusive use of scriptural names, if they wish to promote primitive and scriptural Christian union.

2. Another grand means for promoting Christian union, is the general adoption of a perfect and infallible rule of faith and duty.

But where shall we go to find such a rule? Not to Rome, nor to London, nor to this sect or that sect; for all human creeds and confessions, are imperfect and fallible. Not one of these inventions, therefore, will ever gain general adoption. Where, then, must we go to find a perfect rule, and one that is every way adapted for general use? We answer, to the Bible. The Bible, and the Bible only, contains a perfect and infallible rule of Christain faith, experience and practice. Here, then, is common ground—here is an all-sufficient platform where all may rally, and where all may stand united in one—perfectly in one.

Human names and human laws are separating instruments. They tend to divide, and to keep divided, the people of God. We go, therefore, for the entire abolition of both, and for the general adoption and exclusive use of the names and laws of Christ's house. These we regard as two great and grand means for securing and perpetuating Christain union.—But,

3. The early and frequent inculcation of the doctrine of union through the pulpit and the press, is another prime means for its promotion.

The importance of this doctrine is universally admitted. And the more important any doctrine is, the more carefully it ought to be inculcated. But who is it that inculcates the doctrine? What pulpit and what press is employed in its defence and propagation? Alas! there are few to be found in this noble employment. Many, indeed, have done more to promote division or disunion than its opposite.—Others again stand neutral, and do nothing for or against. All this is wrong.

If the doctrine of Christian union is from Heaven; if it is important for the cause of God that Christians should be united, then none can stand opposed, or stand neutral, and be guiltless. Every one that would stand approved, must stand up for the doctrine.

Parents, Sabbath-school teachers, schoolmasters, ministers, professors, editors, and all who are concerned for the peace, happiness and prosperity of the "Church of God," should lend a helping hand, in disseminating and inculcating this glorious doctrine. Nor can it be commenced to soon. The sooner the better. It is a fundamental principle. A kingdom or house divided against itself cannot stand. Hence the unity of the church, or kingdom of God, is of the utmost importance. And hence, too, its early and constant inculcation through both the pulpit and the press, ought to be carefully maintained.

No sooner than this is done, the cause of Christian union will be greatly promoted. A more efficient means cannot be employed.—Give us the aid of the pulpit and the press, and, under God, we will sweep the world.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The Missionary Cause.

The more we think about this important topic, the greater its importance appears to us. And when we reflect that some are so indifferent about it, we are the more incited to advocate its claims upon the people. Upon this lever hangs the salvation of scores and multitudes of souls. Think of it! Think of it!! When we see a person suffering the sharp pains of disease in his body, if the world contains a remedy it is obtained, no matter at what cost of trouble, of time, of money; but yet here are thousands upon thousands of our fellow-beings writhing in the keenest pain of sin, who desire relief from their load of guilt, and are crying aloud for the knowledge of saving grace, and yet the means to send aid to their suffering minds is withheld. What mean ye? Why so selfish, mean, and miserly? Why not give some of your money towards the best of purposes? Jesus gave His life to save them; cannot you give some of your world's goods to send this salvation to them? If you have but a spark of the Zeal of a Paul you will, you cannot help but do it. But if you are like Ananias and Saphira, then pray to God not to let you die before you repent, and lend your aid to this project.

Friends, let me assure you, though your profession of piety and holiness reaches, in point of pretention, its acme, and you still persist in keeping back your money from aiding this cause, your religion is vain; you are yet on the road to Hell; you are deceived; and the sooner you are made acquainted with your true state, the better. Smoothed words will not suffice, since we desire to clear our skirts, and give you a friendly counsel ere it is too late. Hell is full of such professors! And our design is, to warn men to steer clear of this stygian gulf. And let me tell such professors that, in this particular, they do not equal the Pharisees. Christ says: "Except your righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of Heaven."—Matt. 5: 20. The Mosaical law made it obligatory upon every Jew, as a part of his religion, to pay one-tenth part of the income of his trade or occupation to the church; that is, if his labor amounted to one thousand dollars, he gave one hundred dollars to the church a year. How ye fail in this point!! This was under the Old Testament dispensation. But under the New Testament dispensation, no boundary is prescribed; its whole tenor is liberality. Jesus fully knew that his true disciples would be liberal in all things pertaining to His kingdom. And so they are. Hence, we would like to see more real whole-souled and liberal Christians.

"A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of Heaven." This saying has some bearing on this subject, because they grasp and hoard up treasures on earth, and yet never give aught towards the prosperity of Zion: or if they do, it is generally less than some poor, but very pious person gives, and then they bestow it unwillingly. The truth is, you must coax it out of them. The man that acts thus, sets a poor example. Judge ye of his piety? "Judge righteous judgment." "For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." Mistaken souls, your present course is transgressive and your doom will be woeful if you persist in this demon-like conduct: it may do while alive, provided your consciences are seared with a hot iron, but the dying hour and the judgment day, will reveal another and a fiercer truth. What good will your riches do you then? You cannot take any of them along to Hell! You have robbed God; yes, you have robbed God, and "ye are cursed with a curse." Let every one, then, that says, "I am of Christ," shew it by not robbing the Lord, by withholding that which is necessary to carry forward this work, but give, and give freely, as the Lord has prospered you, and you shall prosper more. Begin to organize your missionary societies; if they should be small at first, organize, and it will go on prosperously. More anon.

Letter from Elder George U. Harn.

Pittsburg, 1846.

Brother J. Winebrenner:—

Sir: As a short description of the location of our coal-fields may not prove uninteresting to some of your readers, I will therefore send you this brief account.

About sixty-five miles down the Ohio, a strata, or bed of this bituminous fuel, lies quite low in the hills, so that it cannot just be brought out of its rest, and placed in a vehicle to be conveyed off for use. These strata lie imbedded between two slate rocks, from three to four feet apart. But as you ascend the Ohio, at the rate of five inches a mile, these beds are lost beneath the surface of the river, so that when you get to Pittsburg they are so deep, that they are of no use at this time. Yet, in the course of time, they will be sought after by generations unborn, and yield immense wealth to the subteraneous adventurer.

In the neighborhood of the "Iron cities," another layer is found in abundance, near the summits of the highest hills, and especially on the southern side of the Ohio and Monongahela rivers. "Coal hill," opposite Pittsburg, was removed for its quality and abundance in days of yore; yea, even when the swarthy Frenchman and the hooping and yelling red-man of the forest, were bonnding over our hills and valleys as fleet as the wild buck they were in chase of, and reigned as sole lords of these rich and now thickly populated regions. There the byped animal, (I wish no disparagement by the comparison) that bores his black hole, sometimes for the distance of a mile, into the bowels of "terra-firma," commences on the side of the hill near its top, throws away the rubbish and earth, forms an entrance of about five feet square, and so continues somewhat rising a level in various directions through the hills in pursuit of the rocky fuel. He fills his little two-wheel wagon, containing about twelve and a-half bushels, eight times a day, as his day's task, conveys it to the mouth of his hole, then empties it into a small car attached to the end of a rope somewhat on the plan of the inclined plains of a railroad, and so lets it down the steepest hill to the boats waiting in the river, while at the other end of the cable, another empty car is drawn to the mouth of his cave by the wait of the loaded one; both having somewhat the appearance of the cangaroo as pictured off in books of natural history, the wheels being much higher at the lower end than the upper. This operation frequently keeps up a continual noise on the sides of our hills, where sometimes hundreds of hands are at work in this business.

The price of coal in our markets ranges from four to seven cents a bushel. That along the Monongahela is much better than that along the Allegheny: the former being the block soft, and the latter the red, rusty hard kind, which soon becomes all slacked when exposed to the damp. This layer extends nearly to the foot of "Laurel hill," but is found at the base of the hill where you get into Fayette and Westmoreland counties. In the latter county, I learn that the distance from the slate rock beneath, to that above, is so much, that in some places teems are driven in for the coal. I presume the layer in the Allegheny and Broad-top mountains, is a still higher one.

As regards the opinion of some of our modern geologists, of the manner of its formation, by the collection of immense qualities of vegetable matter in those strata, and thence being charred, and in the course of time impregnated with sulphur, I have but little to say; yet I am not convinced of the correctness of such philosophy. It is true there is some plausibility in the opinion of Mr. Jefferson, that the great Mississippi valley, extending from the proud and lofty blue Alleghenies on the east, to the eternal snow-capt Rocky mountains on the occident, and from the vast Gulph of Mexico on the south, to the Canada Lakes on the north, was once a mommoth pond of fresh water, abounded with all sorts and sizes of the watery tribes; but even this would not prove the correctness of the former opinion. The manner of its location in the earth forbids me to come to that conclusion. If it were only found in places supposed once to have been caves, such an idea would be more plausible. Yea, then trees, leaves and rubbish of all kinds, might be deposited in such masses; but its being spread over vast fields, and about the same thickness, or so near it, that the difference is but little, and that, too, just so it could be well preserved, and suitable to man's convenience, leads me to suppose a designing mind foresaw that, in latter times, men would stand in need of this product of nature, and so arranged it for the necessities of His creatures. I am well aware, it may be said, it is vegetable matter, and also leaves or prints of them, and of other vegetable substances, are found in the deepest mines; but this no more proves that "stone coal," is formed in that way, than it does that the solidest flints or marbles are formed in the same way; for they are as much vegetable, and nearly as often do we find such prints in the most solid of them. Moreover, the convulsive freaks of old mother-nature, opening her monstrous jaws occasionally, the mighty earth quake, and, terapin-like, swallowing her head, may account for this. But upon the grounds it has been formed, by a regular process of decomposition and transformation, since cosmogony, what evidence is there that a designing operation was not diligently employed in causing an effect for a certain useful and benevolent ultimaterna? Where, then, is the boasted grounds of skepticism drawn from such premises? Notwithstanding all this, the opinion of Mr. Jefferson may bo true, and that in the time of Noah's big rain, the waters of this occidental region were needed to sweep a wicked race of daring skepties from the face of our old matron. So think many wise heads of modern times.

But in addition to this, I would state an opinion of what might have transpired since that time. It is this: that British America, the Russian possessions, and all that part of the Oregon Territory, (which has been such a bone of contention for the politicians of Great Britain and the United States to knaw at, and snap and growl over for the last six months, and about which they have kept up such a "fuss," worse than child's play, for nothing) lying west of the Rocky mountains, were once attached to the continent of Asia, and that many centuries after some of the adventurous and perregrinating Asiatic tribes immigrated to those hunting-grounds, they were detached from the continent by the convulsion of an earth quake, forming Bearing's Straits; or the continual ebbing and flowing of the Pacific and Arctic oceans, washed a channel between.

Yours, as ever,

GEORGE U. HARN.

REPORT

of the Uniontown (Md.) Campmeeting.

The progress of the truth and the rapid extension of Bible principles, should always be hailed by every Christian with joy and gladness, as evidence of a brighter and far more glorious day which is fast approaching, when religion shall shine forth in its greatest splendor, uncorrupted by the doctrines and opinions of men, which at least are only calculated to deceive and lead away the soul from its Maker. For we have reason to believe that the day is not far distant, when the numerous differences that now divide and agitate the Christian world, shall all be done away; when creeds and confessions of faith shall be laid aside, and the Bible, the Word of God, be taken as the only foundation of faith and practice.

But least we occupy too much space, we shall immediately proceed to the object of this letter.

The Uniontown camp-meeting commenced on Friday evening August 28th, under circumstances rather unfavorable. Brother Keller preached from Heb. 11: 8, 9: the meeting was good, and the prospects for the future began to grow brighter; the clouds of doubt and uncertainty began to vanish, and the warm and animated petitions that ascended to the throne of grace, already gave evidence of a successful meeting.

Saturday morning brother Hurley preached from Luke 1: 68, 69.

Saturday afternoon brother Swartz addressed the people from Psalms 37: 37: his sermon was plain and pointed, and produced a deep impression on the minds of many.

At night brother Mullinix preached from Luke 16: 19; embracing the parable of the rich man. After sermon and a pressing invitation, two persons presented themselves as subjects of prayer, and both professed to be converted.

Sabbath morning brother Miller preached from 1 Cor. 13: 1, to a large and respectable audience, most of whom listened with great satisfaction to his highly entertaining address.

Sabbath afternoon brother Swartz preached from Eph. 1: 12, 13.

At night brother Hurley preached from Matt. 22: 11, 12, 13. There were four or five mourners, and two embraced religion.

Monday morning brother Miller preached from Ruth 1: 16.

In the afternoon brother Swartz from Heb. 12: 28. After preaching the congregation proceeded to the water, where six believers were buried with their Lord and Master beneath the yielding wave. An immense concourse of people were assembled on the banks of the stream, exhibiting a grand and imposing scene. So great was the solemnity resting upon the countenances of all, and so forcibly was the power of God displayed, that it caused the most obdurate heart to melt into tears. Some of the older brethren tell us that they never experienced such a time. The power of God seemed to pass through the entire assembly like an electric shock, completely destroying that lightness and frivolity generally manifested by the hard-hearted rebel on such occasions. May God grant the impressions, made that day upon the minds of many, may never be erased until they manifest a willing disposition to obey the prophets of the Bible.

Monday night brother Mullinix preached from John 5: 40. There were three or four seekers, and one professed religion.

Tuesday morning brother Miller preached from John 1: 39.

In the afternoon brother Swartz preached from Rom. 1: 16. After which brother Keller again buried six believers in the rolling stream. The occasion, though not as solemn and interesting as that on the day before, yet it was not altogether destitute of beneficial results.

At night the ordinances of the church of Christ were attended to. Previous to which brother Keller made a few appropriate remarks upon the subject. It was a glorious time for the church, and an awful one to those who stood gazing on with eager attention. I thought, as I looked upon the solemn countenances of the audience, the silent tear giving evidence that the mind was agitated and the heart softened; I say I thought, as I observed this, that the ordinances of the church frequently do more good than the most solemn sermons: and the extent of that good, the day of eternity alone can reveal. O! brethren, let us not be ashamed of the ordinances of the church of Christ. After this was done, mourners were invited out, when eight or nine came forward, and five professed conversion.

Wednesday morning brother Hurley preached from Exodus 3: 3.

In the afternoon brother Swartz preached from Jer. 44: and latter clause of 4.

After preaching brother Hurley baptized six more believers.

At night brother Keller addressed the congregation in a feeling and impressive manner. Five mourners presented themselves, and four embraced religion.

Wednesday morning the camp broke up, and the friends parted from each other with sorrowful hearts. Previous to its breaking up, brother Hurley immersed three more believers. Thus closed the meeting which, to me and to many, was very interesting and solemn.

The whole number that embraced religion was about 15; the whole number baptized was 21, and the whole number who partook of the ordinances was 130. Thus we have seen the work of the Lord prosper in our midst, and we look forward to brighter times of greater glory for the church.

But whilst the work of the Lord was thus successfully going on, Satan was also busy, and seemed determined, by his emissaries, to check its progress. Wicked persons made every exertion to prevent their relatives from getting religion and obeying their Saviour, but it only added a greater stimulus to their efforts, and like it was in days of old, the opposition only tended to increase the flame and fan it into a mighty blaze. Though the wicked derided, and the formal professor treated with scorn the humble followers of Christ, yet they were made to rejoice that they were counted worthy to suffer for their Master's sake.

Thus, amid all the vexations of this world, the humble child of God may wear a cheerful countenance, and be happy in a "Saviours love."

Letter from Elder James Mackey.

Shippensburg, Sept. 19, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I intended to write to you several days ago, but have only now found a suitable time to do so.

You have heard, no doubt, that I have been placed on the Assembly ticket of this county; a thing I little looked for, and am sure did by no means aspire to. I had hoped that my political career was well nigh terminated; but how little is the "way of man in himself," and how little does he know "what a day may bring forth." I can only look upon this event as a link in the chain of that mysterious Providence, which through life has often marked my way contrary to my views and expectations.

The subject of my nomination was merely mentioned to me by a few friends here, a week or so before the delegate meeting at Carlisle. I gave myself little thought about it, and no full grant even to use my name; and, truly, I was no little surprised to learn that my nomination was unanimously agreed upon. What was now to be done! I must either yield, or forfeit the confidence of friends, and subject them to immense trouble to make another selection by assembling another delegate meeting of the whole county. In refusing, I felt I should also violate that sense of honor committed to me. Another consideration with me was, whether God and the people had not a claim upon me, which I was not at liberty to reject! I made up my mind, therefore, not to draw back, but to stand the ground on which I had been placed.

If I am elected, I will go and discharge my duty conscientiously to the best of my abilities; and if not, I shall try to be satisfied. I should be pleased, however, to spend a winter or two with you at Harrisburg, provided my personal and political friends shall see proper to elect me. I think I could do it with more satisfaction to the people, and more comfort to myself, than when I was there before, as my health was then, you know, very bad.

Whilst I write about this, I cannot avoid cherishing a deep feeling of gratitude to yourself and your departed wife, who attended on me as an affectionate friend and sister in the Lord in my distress. I have thought an hundred times of her untiring kindness and attention, and shall never forget it.

My health is tolerably good at present, with the exception of a bad cold I have recently taken. Mrs. MACKEY is still quite weakly. The brethren and friends here are well.—Brother JACOB KNISELY is dead and buried.

You are tolerably hard on brother WINDEN. I expected he would be taken notice of.

Tender my respects to sister WINEBRENNER and your family, and accept of my best wishes and feeble prayers for your welfare.

JAMES MACKEY.

West Pennsylvania Camp-meetings.

HARRISVILLE, BUTLER CO., PA., Sept. 8, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:

My health having somewhat improved, I ventured out during the camp-meeting season, and having just returned, I proceed to give you a condensed report of them.

On Wednesday the 19th ult., brother HARN and I left the city of Allegheny for Harmony circuit camp-meeting, where we arrived on next day about four o'clock, P. M., eight miles west of the borough of Harmony, on Conequenessing creek, and a beautiful spot it is where the meeting was held. All the external natural scenery around being calculated to impress the mind with respect and veneration towards the Supreme Being.

The rainy weather, for a couple of days, somewhat interrupted the building of tents and regularity of Divine service; however, by Friday evening, the 21st, there were fifteen tents on the ground. On Thursday evening the rain impeded the congregation to assemble before the stand. This, however, was remedied by brother HARN and I talking to the people in German and English, in brother SWICK's large and commodious tent.

On Friday noon, brothers WERTZ and JNO. HICKERNELL arrived from the Athenian (Ohio) camp-meeting. On the Sabbath the rain ceased, the weather became favorable, and the worship went on uninterrupted and encouragingly to the friends of religion. Although the Methodists had a similar meeting only four or five miles from this place, we had quite a concourse of folks, especially on the Lord's-day.

Three and four sermons were preached daily, in English and in German, besides many spirited exhortations; the impressions of which, I have every reason to hope, are indelible. The preachers, to a man, seemed to have been especially qualified to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. They were the following, viz: D. WERTZ, (the preacher in charge) JNO. HICKERNELL, G. U. HARN, E. INGRAHAM, H. BARKEY, and, last and least, MYSELF, who, although delicate in health, was, by the blessing of God, able to do something every day. The labors of God's servants and people were signally owned and blessed; for we had several very hopeful conversions—several men and women—that will be a very valuable acquisition to the church in that neighborhood. On Tuesday six believers were immersed by brother HARN, (among whom were two individuals, viz: HARVEY GALLAHER and his wife, which afforded no ordinary interest to me and many others) amidst the shouts of praise, both in the water and on the shore. After candle-light we had a solemn season between talking, praying and singing, and the ordinances of feet-washing, and the communion. Every heart within the camp seemed to feel, and every mind attentive; many joined in the ordinances, even of the neighboring denominations. No wrangling and bitterness seemed to exist in the breast of those who differ with us; but, on the contrary, appeared to feel the force of truth in more than an ordinary degree. After the exercises were over, many presented themselves at the altar, asking the prayers of God's people. Praying and singing was protracted until two o'clock, and the refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, was truly realized by all sincere and upright hearts.

Wednesday 26th.—This morning, after the usual exercises, and a very pathetic farewell address by brother HARN, we came to the trying moment of separation. The breaking up of a campmeeting is always solemn and interesting.

On Thursday 27th, the camp-meeting in Irwin township, Venango county, commenced. Brothor INGRAHAM returned home, but we now had brother J. M. KLEIN; conseqnently, there was not a less number of preachers. This meeting, although it continued the usual time, and the preaching was of the most genuine Gospel kind. There was nothing very encouraging took place—a general spiritual dearth was seemingly felt and complained of, by almost every lover of the good cause. It is true, the outrageous conduct of the wicked coming in a state of beastly ixtoxication on the ground, and to the very altar, with the avowed purpose of disturbing and breaking up the meeting, had no small tendency to sink the spirits of the brethren and sisters. On Saturday and Sunday evenings, the behaviour of the rebels was such, that one had to be bound (not over to court) but with a leather strap, and with him a-half score of associates were arrested, and delivered to the legal arm for correction. After this we had tolerable rest and quietness, and the worship went on unhindered. Would to God that some faithful and zealous apostle of temperance would come this way.

One circumstance I cannot forbear mentioning: You will remember, by a former letter, that I commenced a Sabbath-school in this church, just immediately before ill-health drove me away. This school, by God's blessing, and the unremitted labors of the brethren and friends, has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectation. It now numbers upwards of seventy scholars. Brother HARN and I addressed them on Sabbath morning of the camp-meeting, and read the report handed in by the Superintendent. The progress these children made in four months, is only a proof of what the young mind is capable, when properly trained and cultivated. O! who can estimate the blessings resulting from well-conducted Sabbath-schools? Eighteen scholars have committed more than twenty-six hundred Bible verses to memory in four months. There were twenty tents at this meeting.

We broke up on Wednesday the 2d inst., to proceed to Rockland. After the parting hand had been given, and many tears shed on all sides, a most heart-rending accident occurred. Brother JOHN ROSS, formerly of Andersontown, York county, who had a tent there, and was preparing to haul his effects home, had his son JOHN, an interesting lad of fifteen years of age, almost instantaneously killed, by the horses running off and the wagon running over him. O! it was a sad spectacle to behold the almost frantic and heart-broken parents, and the weeping and shrieking brothers and sisters, losing a promising son and an endearing brother, in so short a time. God grant that it may redound to their good.

On Thursday the 3d inst., we commenced our camp-meeting at Rockland, Venango county, with the same number of preachers as before, and but six tents. Throughout the whole, this was a good meeting, and terminated in the conversion of several souls, and the confirmation of believers. God be praised for his mercies. Here, too, we had to combat with the hydra-monster vice, intemperance.—Young men, that should be an honor to society, were seen staggering under a gale of whiskey. This was the case still in the evening; in the morning before day, they would beg for pickles of the tent-holders to taper off—a drunkard's phrase. Many of the young men of Venango county are bringing themselves to a drunkard's grave. O! will not soon an angel of mercy wing his way here, and snatch them as brands from the fire?

On Wednesday the 9th we broke, and the ministerial corps separated to return to their respective stations.

Yours, &c.,

JACOB MEYERS.

P. S.—Since the above camp-meetings, there have been several very interesting meetings in the Irwin township church. Some conversions, and quite a number of enquiring souls were at the altar. Hopes are entertained that the laborers at that camp-meeting will, in the sequel, be owned and blessed to the interest of that church.

J. M.

Letter from Elder Arch. Megrew.

DALTON, WAYNE COUNTY, OHIO, September 4, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I resume my pen this morning to submit a few lines to you relative to our camp-meetings, which you may publish if you see proper.

The camp in Richland county, was the first. I was in attendance during the first part of this camp, but was necessiated to leave before it closed.

The ministers present were brothers ADAMS, SHERICH, HICKERNELL, MURRAY, BEIDLER and myself. The meeting was very agreeable, but few converted—none baptized.

The next camp-meeting was held in Wayne county, near Wooster.

This was truly an interesting meeting. The brethren come out with their tents quite strong. Love, union and harmony appeared to prevail and abound amongst preachers and people, from the beginning to the end. I do not know that I ever attended so pleasant a camp-meeting throughout; and I heard quite a number of brethren say the same. And, although there were but few convertions, I believe the meeting has been productive of great good.

The ministers present of the "Church of God," were brothers ADAMS, T. HICHERNELL, BEIDLER, HARTMAN, HOLMES, NEIL, MURRAY, and the writer; besides quite a number of ministers of other denominations, back and forward, during the meeting, and some of them took an active part with us.

There were a few converted—one baptized.

The camp-meeting in Stark county. This meeting commenced the 27th of August, and closed on the 3d of September. Hear we had unfavorable weather in the beginning; but from Saturday evening until the close, very favorable. The meeting, upon the hole, was good. There was not a great number of tents, but a great number of brethren attended the meeting, and nothing but peace and union was seen or heard amongst those who took part in the meeting. The order amongst the spectators or people in attendance, was extremely good. The ministers of the "Church of God" present, were brothers BEIDLER, ADAMS, HICKERNELL, NEIL, MURRAY, INGRAHAM and MEGREW; besides some of other denominations who took part in the meeting. The number of converts I do not know exactly, but probably seven or eight. Nine persons were baptized in the Tuscarawas river, according to the ancient manner of baptizing, by immersing the whole body in water, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit: and the Lord owned the ordinance by powerfully blessing the subjects, and his people generally who were present.

Thus, I have given you a brief account of our camp-meetings in Ohio, so far as I attended the same. The number of converts may appear small, and so it is; but we do think there has been a great amount of good affected. I think the waste-places of Zion are about to be built up in Ohio. The brethren appear generally encouraged and I do hope the time is not far distant, when the work of the Lord will again prosper and flonrish in Ohio. May the Lord help us to look and labor for it!

I have had a strong desire of going to the far west next year; but how to get away from my dear brethren here, in conseqnence of the scarcity of preachers to supply the circuits, I do not know. May the Lord send forth more laborers into His vineyard, at least in this part of it, for they are greatly needed.

I expect in a few weeks to visit some of the scattered brethren in the south-west part of this State and Indiana; and if I am permitted to return again, probably I shall write to you again on the state of religion in Ohio.

I shonld be very glad if some of the elder brethren in the ministry, who used to write for the Gospel Publisher, wonld resume their pens again, and let us hear from them through the ADVOCATE. Some that I used to be acquainted with in the east, who used to write in the Publisher very enconragingly, we see and hear from no more. Have they left the walls of Zion? I hope not. Write, brethren, and let us know what you are doing. Good news to us here in the west, from the east, "is like cold water to a thirsty sonl in a desert land."

I remain yours, in the best of bonds,

A. MEGREW.

Elizabethtown Camp-meeting.

THIS meeting commenced on the 24th of August, and broke up on the following Saturday morning. There were only fourteen tents, in consequence of another camp-meeting held by the brethren on the same circnit, a few weeks afterwards. The meeting was well attended all the time, and the conduct of the people pretty good, with the exception of the last night, when there appeared to be a few rowdies about the ground; but we think it was for the want of better instruction on the part of their parents and teachers. The preaching brethren turned out well, and I was never at a meeting where every thing came off so pleasant and, in so good a spirit. The professors seemed to be all of one heart and of one mind. The preaching brethren spoke the word from on High. Preaching was plain and to the point, and not without its desired effect. And I hope the seed sown on the occasion, will yet spring up and bare fruit to eternal life. Six or seven were hopefully converted to God, and on the following Sabbath five were buried with Christ in baptism. Eternity can only reveal the effect of this meeting. The cause of God has become more established at this place, than what it had been before. The brethren appear to be more revived and encouraged to prosecute their way onward and upward. They feel thankful to their kind Benefactor for what he has done for them; and they tender their thanks also to all the preaching brethren that assisted in holding the meeting; and to all the citizens of Elizabethtown and its vicinity, for their kind aid and assistance in a pecuniary way. We hope and trust that many of them will, ere long, become the happy subjects of saving grace.

Letter from Elder Jacob Meyers.

HARRISVILLE, BUTLER COUNTY, PA., September 16, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Since the camp-meeting in Irwin township, times have become very propitious. Brother HARN preached for them on this day a week on his way home; the consequence was, six or seven anxious enquirers at the altar, of whom three or four were hopefully converted. The next following evening, brothers WERTZ and BARKEY preached, and there was again quite an excitement. On last Lord's-day, I had appointed to preach my valedictory. In day time we had a crowded house—a very attentive audience—while I preached from Dan. 6: 10. Many seemed to reflect seriously. At five o'clock, P. M., we again met, when I thought I was giving them my last talk for this time. I felt moved with the deepest sympathy. My soul was in travail, and God be praised we had a good season. Eleven mourners were crying for mercy after sermon; of whom six were blessed before the meeting was dismissed. This circumstance induced me to remain two days longer. Hence I preached for them on Monday and Tuesday evenings: mourners every meeting—one night seven, and the next five, of whom more than half the number were set at liberty. They wished me to stay longer, but circumstances, before agreed, and the return of my hemorrhage, compelled me to desist and return home.

Laborers are wanted here in the work.—Where are brother SNAVELY's idle hands, that he talked of sending out?

No more, but remain your Fellow-laborer, in the kingdom
And patience of Jesus Christ,
JACOB MEYERS.

Linglestown Camp-meeting.

INASMUCH as it is desirable to the people of God to hear from all the various camp-meetings, and being requested to make out some kind of a report, I will be obedient; the camp-meeting having already been noticed, in part, I will give a few more particulars.

The number of tents, I believe, was twenty, including the boarding tent; the number of preachers present was about ten; the number of converts small, perhaps about six or eight, and some backsliders reclaimed; the number baptized two; the number joined in church-fellowship seven. We had prayer-meetings for a few evenings afterwards, when a few came forward as subjects for prayer, and one was delivered from the "power of Satan," and another has since been hopefully converted: thanks be to God.

Our camp-meeting, in general, all things considered, was a good one: things seemed to move along, so far as I know, harmoniously, and good order among the people generally was observed.

M. F. SNAVELY.

Remarkable.

THERE was a remarkable occurrence on Sabbath morning about five o'clock. The morning was very calm, but very misty, when suddenly there was a crashing heard like unto the breaking down of a tree, and suddenly a loud report of the fall of a tree; after which I rose and, lo, about one hundred yards from the tents, there laid a large green maple tree, very bushy and green. On close examination, I found the tree nearly solid where it was broken, and nearly two feet in diameter; although the tree stood in a somewhat reclining posture, yet how many heavy storms it stood, yea, even through this summer, but sustained itself against them all, and at last fell down into the Beaver creek, in as calm a morning as I think I ever saw.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

I am at this time still in Harrisburg, boarding with the amiable family of brother DAVID LINGLE, jr., at the Mansion House, but expect to leave to-morrow morning, God willing.—Farewell.

M. F. SNAVELY.

Letter from Elder Thos. Hickernell.

WAYNE COUNTY, OHIO, September 4, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This is to inform you that the camp-meetings in Ohio are over. We had three camp-meetings—one in Richland county, near brother SHIFLER's—one in Wayne county, near Wooster—one in Stark county, near Bethlehem.—There were probably three or four converted in Richland county, but none baptized. About the same number at the camp in Wayne county, and one baptized. There was harmony, love and union at all the camp-meetings. Brother A. MEGREW intends to write to you, and give you a further statement of particulars. I have collected and sent on a little money for the Relief Project, for which I should like to be credited in the ADVOCATE. Brother MARTIN is just on his way over the mountains, and will take it with him and pay over the money.

I presume you will hear from me soon again. My love to the brethren.

Yours, with respect,
THOMAS HICKERNELL.

These churches to support brother BARKEY, and Harmony circuit to support brother WERTZ.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

THE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

This great Convention commenced its sittings at London, on Tuesday the 5th of day of August. Between two and three hundred delegates were present at the opening of the session. Twenty-eight of these were from the United States; of these five were from Pennsylvania—among them was Rev. Emerson Andrews, formerly pastor of the Baptist Church at Reading; and eight were from New York; eight from Massachusetts; two from Ohio; two from Maine; one from Rhode Island; one from Kentucky; and one from Michigan. Delegates were also present from various parts of England, Ireland, and Scotland, from France, and from the East Indies.

The following officers were appointed:

SAMUEL BOWLEY, of Gloucester, Eng., President.

Dr. Beecher, of Ohio, U. S.; Dr. S. H. Cox, of New York, U. S.; Dr. Mussey, of Ohio, U. S.; Rev. W. Reid, of Scotland; and Lawrence Heyworth, of England, Vice Presidents.

Thomas Beggs, of England; Henry Clapp, jr., of Massachusetts, U. S.; James Haughton, of Dublin; and Edward Crimer, of England, Secretaries.

Speeches, brief and spirted, were made the first morning of the session by Rev. John Marsh, Secretary of the American Temperance Union, Rev. Dr Beecher, Dr. Grindrod, from the Isle of Wight, author of the well known essay, "Bacchus," and others.

On Tuesday afternoon, a resolution was moved presenting tee-totalism, as the only remedy for the evils of intemperance.

On Tuesday evening, a meeting apart from the Convention was held at Finsbury Chapel, at which addresses were made by Rev. S. L. Pomroy, of Bangor, Me., Henry Clapp, jr., of Boston, Mass., and Rev. Dr. Beecher.

On Wednesday, a paper on the statistics of temperance was presented, which called forth many intersting remarks.—It was stated, during the discussion, that in London there are 20,000 drunkards, and 150,000 consumers of spirits. Truly, a sad picture, and showing the need of more effort and more prayer for large cities.

On motion, the following resolutions were carried, with only one dissenting voice:

"That in the opinion of this Convention, as a means of extending the Temperance reformation, the following truths should be spread throughout the world; and the Temperance men and Temperance organizations be exhorted to give the widest possible extension.

"That alcohol, the intoxicating principle, is a subtle poison, and at war with the intellectual, social, and religious interests of men.

"That it is generated by the process of fermentation, and is the same, though existing in different degress, in cider, wine, and malt liquors, as in distilled spirits.

"That it is a perpetual fountain of disease, poverty, crime, temporal and spiritual death, never needful or useful to men in health in any clime, or any employment.

"That total abstinence from it as a beverage, is the only true principle of the Temperance reformation, the only hope of the drunkard and security for others.

"That the whole manufacture and sale of intoxicating drink as a beverage, though a source of revenue to government, is a manufacture of human misery, and highly injurious to the souls and bodies of men, and should not be licensed more than other moral evils by human governments.

"That the word of God often prescribes total abstinence to avoid existing evils, and that the spirit of Christian love directs us to shun wine, or anything whereby our brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

"That a voice comes from every part of the globe, calling upon kings and all who are in authority, upon reflecting and influential men of all climes, upon parents, teachers of youth, medical men, ministers of religion, and all who love their race, to put forth the hand and stay the plague which is filling our world with woe, and, unless checked, will continue to sweep thousands of succeeding generations prematurely and wretchedly to eternity.

On Wednesday evening, another meeting was held in Freemason's Hall, Great Queen street. At this, a very animated address was delivered by Elihu Burritt, followed by one from Rev. Dr. Patton, of New York. We would give the speeches of these and others, but there is nothing in them that would be of peculiar interest to our readers on this side of the Atlantic, removed from the influence and enthusiasm of a great crowd.

Thursday, the regular sittings were resumed.

Dr. LOWELL proposed a resolution by which the meeting pledged itself to use all its efforts for the extension of its principles.

Dr. Cox of New York, seconded it, regretting that they had not the co-operation of the clergy in their exertions, and the resolution was carried.

Another resolution was proposed by Mr. WHEELOCK, of New York, to the effect, that the hope of the Temperance reformation was in the rising generation, and recommending the formation in every country of juvenile temperance associatians, which was also carried.

Rev. E. N. KIRK moved the resolution deprecating the practice of exporting liquors from Christian to Pagan countries, especially in ships which carry out Christian Missionaries.

In the afternoon sitting, Mr. DUNLAP made a few observations on fermented liquors, urging as an argument against their use, the custom of the ancients, whose general drink was an unfermented kind.

Dr. PATTON of New York, moved a resolution expressing the satisfaction of the meeting at the measures taken in some parts of America against the licensing system, and hoping that the example would soon follow in England.

On Friday, a motion was proposed, but withdrawn, recommending a formation of a World's Union.

On Friday evening a meeting was held at Covent Garden Theatre. Rev. Dr. Beecher, Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston, Professor Caldwell of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa,. Rev. John Marsh, Rev. Dr. Cox, and Rev. Dr. Patton, and Frederick Douglass, the escaped slave, all spoke on the occasion.

The remarks of the latter caused some excitement at the time, and called forth some discussion on the following day.

Addresses to manufacturers and venders of intoxicating liquors were adopted at the meeting on Saturday.

Palestine Jews.—A letter has been received in Philadelphia from Rabbi H. Lehren, of Amsterdam, asking aid for the poor of Palestine, who are exposed to all the horrors of scarcity of food. Donations sent to A. Hart, Esq., of our place, will be forwarded to their destination.—[Occident.

Schuylkill Navigation.—The Schuylkill Navigation is now open as far as Reading. Six Union canal boats passed down by Laurel Hill on Friday.

Railroad Improvements.—The New York Tribune speaks favorably of a working model of a recent invention intended to prevent accidents on Railroads. Its object is to arrest the speed of Locomotives and Trains, by a mere touch of the Engineer's hand, whenever danger is to be apprehended. The purpose is affected by clamping the Rail not merely under the Locomotive, but under all the cars in the train, so as to bring the whole from the swiftest speed to a dead stand-still in the course of a few seconds. The aparatus is simple, cheap, and may outlast a dozen trains of cars. The Tribune says, if there be any defects or any objections to it, their discovery must be left to hawk-eyed engineers and men of science to detect them.

Changing Sentiments.—Remember the statements of the papers for your encouragement—that in one hundred parishes in France the Popish churches are forsaken, and the people are calling for Bibles; and in Ireland over 40 Romish priests and 4,000 laymen had come over to the Protestant churches. In France the Wesleyans have 130 places of worship, besides what other denominations are doing. On the other hand, another paper states that Rev. Mr. Hoit, son of Gen. Hoit of Sandwich, N. H., located as an Episcopal minister at St. Albans, Vt., has gone over to the Catholics. Romanism gains no faster in the United States than it loses in Europe.

Christ-ian.—The Christian Palladium, a paper of the Christ-ian denomination, gives the following account of decline in that body: "That there has been a great loss of churches for the last twenty years, no one acquainted with the history of the connection will deny. Between twenty and thirty years ago, large sections of the State of Maine were dotted over with Christian churches, not one of which now remains. Of about thirty churches, in a direct line from Augusta Maine, to Fairhaven, Massachusetts, an extent of less than 250 miles, which were in existence twenty years ago, only five now remain. Some of these churches became extinct. Others of them have been carried over to the Free Will Baptists, and other denominations. Whether out of New England the loss has been as great, is left for others to decide."

The West.—Less than 60 years ago, a long ark-like looking wagon was seen wending its way onward, from Massachusetts to Ohio—it was the wagon of Dr. Cutler, the first settler of Ohio, now the third State in the whole Union, numbering 1,732,000 inhabitants. Michigan 35 years ago contained but 5,000; its population is more now than 300,000; and its ample fields will yield this year more than 7,000,000 bushels of wheat. Such has been the growth of the great west.—Its great lakes are now ploughed by more than 60 steamboats, and it was only in 1818 when the first steamboat made its appearance on these ocean lakes.

Statute of Girard.—The Girard College was thronged on Saturday the 12th ult., by a large concourse of visiters, who came to see Gevelot's statue of Girard.—The work is indeed an admirable one, and the likeness to the original is conceded, by all who knew him, to be correct in every particular.

Iron in England.—An English paper speaks thus:

"During the last hundred years the Iron mines of Great Britain have yielded thus:

	Tons.	Furnaces.
1740	17,000	59
1788	68,000	85
1827	690,000	284
1839	950,000	360
1845	1,550,000	550

From which it would appear that unless the mines be exhaustible, there will be no lack of supply, the working power being so elastic and commanding. We believe it has been ascertained that there is not any risk of the iron-stone failing in England; and as Scotland has unexplored fields of immense extent, the 'golden age of iron' may be looked upon as not yet far advanced in its cycle of developement.

Adventists in England.—J. V. Himes and the two brethren who went out with him as Second Advent Missionaries to England, seem to be enjoying themselves there, whether their endeavors more benefit or injure the Christian religion.—Himes has commenced the publication in London of the 'European Advent Herald,' having issued 5,000 copies of the first number. The design of the European Advent Herald is to utter a midnight cry throughout Victoria's kingdom, and on to the Continent.—P. S. B.

The Prospects of Peace.—Says the Baltimore Sun: "The last letters from sources of the highest respectability in the city of Mexico, and other towns, represent the disposition of the people as altogether in favor of peace. The English merchants and English government desire peace, and as the American people also desire it, it will be seen that influences are very strong in that direction."

Revivals.—A correspondent from Paris, Henry county, Tenn., under date of August 29 states: "There have been so far in parts of three counties, between 4 and 500 professions, and nearly that many accessions. Our Synodical Seminary at McLemoresville, under the superintendence of brother Usher, has been greatly blessed. Almost all the students shared in the revivals at that place.—Cum. Pres.

Appointments by the President.—George Bancroft, of Massachusetts, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States for the United Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, vice Louis McLane, recalled at his own request.

John Y. Mason, of Virginia, to be Secretary of the Navy of the United States, vice Hon. George Bancroft, resigned.

Great Sale of Books.—Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of books were sold in New York for the trade last week. The booksellers meet there twice a year to attend such sales.

Receipts of British Missionary Societies.—The receipts of the principal missionary institutions in England, last year, were as follows: of the British Missionary Society, including grants and donations, £26,398; of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, £112,823; of the Church Missionary Society, £102,458; and of the London Missionary Society, £79,745.

Arrival of Immigrants.—Annexed are the arrival of passengers at New York, during the month of August, 1846—entered at the Custom House: From Great Britain,7184; France, 4570; Belgium, 1300; Bremen, 1060; Hamburg, 961; Holland, 451; Norway, 210; Sweden, 115; Prussia, 97; and other parts, 214;—total, 16,212.

Abolition of Slavery in Russia.—One of the most cheering items of foreign news, by the late arrival, is this: that letters from Warsaw announces that the Emperor of Russia, on his late visit to that city, promulgated his determination to proclaim the abolition of slavery in all the provinces where it still exists.

Departure of the Californians.—The California volunteers, under Col. Stevenson, sailed from New York on Saturday in three ships, Loo Choo, Thomas H. Perkins, and Susan Drew, accompanied by the sloop of war Preble. The expedition comprises some seven hundred and eighty, officers and men.

Jewish Morality.—The list of marriages, births and deaths, lately published at Frankfort-on-Maine, shows a fact equally remakable and honorable to the Israelites of that town. There have been 1282 infants born, of whom 234 have been illegitimate; and amongst the last there is not a single Jewish child.—Archives Israelites.

Every Man his own Lawyer.—The State Convention of New York, on Monday, got as far as the 8th section of the article on the judiciary. The 7th section was amended on motion of Mr. Strong, to permit any citizen over 21 years of age to practice law in the courts of that State, and thus adopted. This is the best thing the convention has done yet.

Railways in England.—The British Parliament have granted a bill for amalgamating the London and Birmingham, the Birmingham and Liverpool, and the Liverpool and Manchester into one concern, which will henceforth be called the "Great Northern Railway." The receipts of this concern already amount to about $225,000 weekly.

Jews in Prussia.—The Jewish population in Prussia amounts to 206,592.—There are at present 863 synagogues, that is to say, a place of worship for every 229 Jews.—Voice of Jacob.

Declined.—It is said Professor Woolsey has declined the appointment tendered to him, of the Presidency of Yale College.

☞ There have been added to the Grant street Baptist Church, in Pittsburgh, during the last year, 208 by baptism, 34 by letter, and 13 by experience—making a total of 255 souls. The diminutions for the same time, by removal and otherwise, amount to 21; leaving a nett increase of 234 members.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Abominations of Romanism.

The Evangelical Society of Geneva, in its fourteenth annual report, has published a few articles to show what popery will do when it can. It appears that about the commencement of the last century, some Hungarian reformers lost their courage, amid the fires of persecution, and abjured their faith. When the mother church received them back to her embrace, she imposed upon them these articles, which were published in 1716, and have been re-printed in the original text by a German theologian.

Holding in one hand a lighted torch, taking the oath with the other, apostates pronounced the following words:

Art. 4. We confess that every new thing which the pope has instituted, whether they are or are not in the scriptures, all which he has ordered is true, divine and beautiful.

Art. 5. We confess that the very holy pope ought to be venerated by every one with divine honor, and with adoration as profound as Jesus Christ himself.

Art. 6. We confess and affirm that the pope ought to be listened to in all points as the holy father. This is why all heretics who live in a manner contrary to his law, ought not only to be exterminated by fire without exception and without mercy, but precipitated, body and soul into hell.

Art. 7. We confess that the reading of the Holy Scriptures is the origin of all schisms and sects, as also the source of blasphemies.

Art. 9. We confess that every priest is much greater than Mary, even the mother of God; for the latter has given birth to the Lord Jesus Christ but once; but a Roman priest sacrifices and creates the Lord Jesus Christ, not only when he wishes, but also in all manner as it pleases him; and after creating Him, he swallows Him whole.

Art. 11. We confess that the pope of Rome has the power to change the Scriptures, to increase, or diminish them at his will.—Boston Eagle.

Recipe for Making Tomato Catsup. —Half Gallon.—Take a gallon of skinned Tomattoes, four table spoonfuls of salt, four do. of black pepper, half a spoonful of allspice, eight pods of red pepper, three table spoonfuls of mustard. Articles ground fine and simmered slowly in sharp vinegar, in a pewter basin three or four hours, and then strained through a wire seive and bottled close. It may be used in two weeks, but improves much by age. Those who like the article may add after the simmering is over, two table spoonfuls of the juice of garlic. So much vinegar is to be used as to have a half gallon of liquor when the process is over. This is said to be superior to any West India Catsup, and withal it is a very excellent remedy for the dyspepsia.

A Whole Sermon.—Beloved Brethren: The Scriptures tells us the wages of sin is death. Now, my advice is, that you leave off sinning and strike for higher wages.

POETRY.

THE CONVERT'S FAREWELL.

BY JOHN FREDERICK WEISHAMPEL.

To all the vain pleasures of Earth's dreary life,
To sin, and its snares, and its natural strife;
To sinful companions the words I must tell:
I'm following Jesus—so friends, fare-you-well.
Farewell, my companions, I bid you adieu—
I'm following Jesus—Oh come along too.

In folly and sinning I long took delight—
I knew all the while I was not doing right;
I turn'd a deaf ear to the offers of grace,
Till Jesus unveiled his beauteous face.
Farewell, &c.

I read in the Bible, but all appear'd dark—
The Spirit would warn me, but I did not hark.
I clung to the world, and indulg'd in its ways,
And never attempted my Jesus to praise.
Farewell, &c.

At last a sweet voice, in accents so sweet,
That Christ had effected salvation complete;
And if I in Heaven with Jesus would dwell,
To sinful companions I must bid farewell.
Farewell, &c.

I thought how the Saviour had suffer'd dread pain;
Had died and the third day had risen again;
And then had ascended to Heaven, that I
Might save my poor soul, and then dwell upon high.
Farewell, &c.

My heart could no longer against him rebel,
And then be condemn'd to the torments of Hell.
I sought for redemption—how sweet the word sounds—
And soon I obtain'd it in Jesus' wounds.
Farewell, &c.

I wept and I pray'd o'er my sin and my guilt,
That I had cause'd Jesus' blood to be spilt.
Oh, "what shall I do to be saved?" was my cry—
"Lord, save, or I perish—Lord, save, or I die!"
Farewell, &c.

He look'd and he pitied, and softly replied:
"For you I have suffer'd, for you I have died;
"Your sins, which are many, I now all forgive;
"Go forth, sin no more, and my blessings receive."
Farewell, &c.

I rose from my weeping, and laugh'd in its stead;
My soul was so happy, I nothing did heed—
'Twas Jesus my Saviour and Jesus my friend—
All glory to Him, from beginning to end.
Farewell, &c.

So now I've resolv'd his disciple to be,
To follow my Savior, who set my soul free.
And you, my companions and friends, bound to Hell,
I'm going to leave you, with Jesus to dwell.
Farewell, &c.

But if you'll repent, and be sav'd from your sin,
We'll travel together, till glory we win—
But if we must part, and in sin you'll remain,
My heart it is griev'd to say: farewell again
Farewell, &c.

BUY THE TRUTH.

LINES ADDRESSED TO A YOUNG FRIEND.

Go thou in life's fair morning,
Go, in thy bloom of youth,
And buy, for thy adorning,
The precious pearl of truth.
Secure this heavenly treasure,
And bind it on thy heart,
And let no worldly pleasure
Ever cause it to depart.

Go, while the day-star shineth,
Go, while thy heart is light,
Go, ere thy strength declineth,
While every sense is bright.
Sell all thou hast and buy it.
'Tis worth all earthly things—
Rubies, and gold, and diamonds,
Sceptres, and crowns of kings.

Go, ere the cloud of sorrow,
Steal o'er the bloom of youth:
Defer not till to-morrow,
Go now, and buy the Truth.
Go, seek thy great Creator,
Learn early to be wise:
Go, place upon the altar,
A morning sacrifice.

—o—

Let sinners take their course,
And choose the road to death—
But in the worship of my God,
I'll spend my daily breath.

LITERARY NOTICE.

The Means of Peace.—The Rev. Dr. RIDDLE has published his sermon on war, in a very neat pamphlet. Many of those who heard him deliver it, will be pleased to be able to preserve it in this handsome form. A discourse which was twice preached, to separate congregations, and then published in a widely circulated daily and weekly paper, needs no recommendations of ours. It contains a large amount of plain truth, enforced by statistics and authentic facts, sufficient, one would suppose, to strike every heart with deep horror at the evils of war. Without endorsing every shade of thought, we cheerfully recommend the work to the notice of the community.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

—o—

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, September 14th, at 1 o'clock, P. M., near the borough of Washington, Lancaster county, Pa., PETER HIESTAND, sen., in the advanced age of 80 years and 6 months.

Father HIESTAND was associated with the River Brethren. He loved and served his God for many years. He bore his last illness with Christian fortitude and resignation; and in truth found that the righteous hath hope in his death. He fell asleep in Jesus without uttering a groan, in view of a glorious immortality beyond the grave. No more is his cheering and admonishing voice to be heard among the friends he left behind, but (in silence) speaks in louder tones: "Prepare to meet thy God." He now rests from his labors, and his works follow after him; and when Gabriel's loud shrill trump shall sound, we hope he shall have "part in the First Resurestion, on whom the second death hath no power." May his death be sanctified to the good of the large number of relatives he has left behind to mourn his loss.

Alas! the pain of parting would doubly painful prove,
Did hope not tell us we shall meet again the friends we love.

J. V. H.

On the 25th ult., in York county, FREDERICK MAISH; aged 76 years and 24 days. His wife died about ten days before him. Both died sudden. We hope some one will give us the particulars.

On the 6th Sept., in Washington, Lancaster county, CATHARINE, daughter of brother Park and sister Sarah Mason; in the 2d year of her age.

Our dearest friends when death shall call,
At once must hence depart;
But there we hope to meet them all
And never, never part.

Then let us love and serve the Lord,
With all our ransom'd powers,
And we shall gain this great reward—
This glory shall be ours.

At Wooster Wayne county, Ohio, on the 7th ult., after a short but severe illness, JACOB, youngest son of Jacob Winebrenner; aged about 4 years.

Elder D. Winder, Ed. 'Bible Student.'

Another letter has appeared from this gentleman in the Christian Chronicle, of September 30th, purporting to be a reply to our queries touching various matters and things contained in his first letter.

If we have time we may notice his responses in our next. For the present we would merely remark, if his last letter be true, his first must be false, for they contain several palpable contrarieties.

Battle and Capitulation of Monterey.

Another bloody battle has been fought between the American and Mexican armies, on the 21st, 22d and 23d ult., near and in the city of Monterey; when, on the 24th, the city was capitulated by Gen. Ampudia, upon the terms required by Gen. Taylor.

In this battle there was a much greater effusion of blood than at the battle of Palo Alto, on the 8th and 9th of May last, and in the capture of Matamoras. About five hundred of the Americans were killed and wounded—(three hundred killed and two hundred wounded.) How many were lost on the Mexican side, is not yet known.

The city of Monterey, (món-tà-ràŷ') which has been surrendered to the American army, is the capital of Nuevo Leon.(nà'-vo-là-ón') one of the original Mexican States, situated on the Fernando river, near the coast of Upper California. It contains a population of fifteen or sixteen thousand inhabitants.

New York State Convention.

This Convention has incorporated into the amended Constitution of the State, the following section touching the rights of married women, to-wit:

"SECTION 14. ALL PROPERTY of the Wife, owned by her at the time of her marriage, and acquired by her afterwards, by GIFT, DEVISE, or DESCENT, or otherwise than from her Husband, SHALL BE HER SEPARATE PROPERTY. Laws shall be passed providing for the Registry of the Wife's Separate Property, and more clearly defining the rights of the Wife thereto: as well as to Property held by her with her Husband." ☞ Since rescinded.

Steam-ship Great Western.

This gallant steamer encountered a tremendous storm on the 20th and 21st ult., on her trip from England to this country.

She had on board 126 passengers; among these were several ministers returning from the "World's Convention" in London. The scenes on board, it appears, were fearful in the extreme. The storm lasted about thirty-six hours, and many of the passengers and crew had given up all hopes of being saved. Portions of scripture were read—exhortations and addresses were delivered—prayers were offered—and the Lord's supper was administered to about sixty of the passengers. A passenger writes:

"It lulled, and then came on again the storm king in his power. Presently it came, a perfect tornado, driving before it the clouds of spray, and as it neared us, fairly lifted up the white foam from the waves, like a shower of rain. As the squall struck us, the ship careened over and buried her gunwales in the ocean, and lay for a few moments stricken powerless, and apparently at the mercy of the savage waves that threatened to engulf us. This was the trial, the last round fought between the elements and our gallant vessel — At this critical moment, the engine was true to her duty — Still went on its revolutions, and round and round thundered her iron water wings. Gradually recovering her upright position, the good ship with head quartering the sea, came up to her course, and all was well. It was the climax of the storm. The last great effort of the whirlwind king, to send us to the sea-gnost's cave below.

The next day the storm abated, and many rejoiced in the prospect of safety, that had fully made up their minds that their career in this life had reached its final termination!"

Society, like shaded silk, must be viewed in all situations, or its colors will deceive us.

Elder Alex. Campbell's Creed.

There is an article going the rounds in the papers, taken from the Western Review, under the above caption, on which it may not be amiss to bestow a passing remark.

Elder Campbell is, doubtless, full able to vindicate his own cause, and to correct the misrepresentations of the public press with regard to himself.

Yet we deem it due to the public and to the cause of truth, to let sober facts be known.

In July last, Elder Campbell undertook to comment on the Doctrinal Basis of the Evangelical Alliance, and after declaring his belief of the articles of said Basis, "when stripped of their metaphysical termenology," he went on to modify and improve the same, so as to make them harmonize with his own views in words following, to-wit:

1. I believe that all scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for teaching, for conviction, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, and thoroughly accomplished for every good work.

2. I believe in one God, as manifested in the person of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit—who are, therefore, one in nature, power and volition.

3. I believe that every human being participates in all the consequences of the fall of Adam—and is born into the world frail and depraved in all his moral powers and capacities, so that without faith in Christ, it is impossible for him, while in that state, to please God.

4. I believe that the Word, which from the beginning was with God, became flesh, and dwelt among us as Emmanuel, or "God manifest in the flesh," and did make an expiation of sin "by the sacrifice of himself," which no being could have done that was not possessed of a super-human, super-angelic, and divine nature.

5. I believe in the justification of a sinner by faith, without the deeds of law: and of a Christian, not by faith alone, but by obedience of faith.

6 I believe in the operation of the Holy Spirit through the word, but not without it, in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.

7. I believe in "the right and duty of exercising our own judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures."

8. I believe in "the divine institution of the evangelical ministry: the authority and perpetuity of the institution of baptism and the Lord's supper.

A Word to the Wise.---No. 3.

Under this caption, in the last number of the Advocate, we descanted on the subject of Doctrinal Sinning, as a malpractice requiring some reforming regulations. We shall now call the attention of the wise and faithful to another great evil existing among professors of religion, viz:

III. Intolerance.

By intolerance, we mean the want of toleration. Toleration is two-fold, civil and ecclesiastical.

Civil toleration is a permission given by the civil authorities, to all persons and denominations, to enjoy a free and untrammelled exercise of religious belief and practice, which does not conflict with the public peace, or the civil rights of the community.

Ecclesiastical toleration is a liberty given by the church, to all her members, to differ in opinons and usages not inconsistent with a profession of religion.

Civil and ecclesiastical intolerance, or intoleration, is the reverse of all this. Both are radically and essentially wrong. Civil governments have no right to interfere with matters purely religious. Such matters belong to another, a higher and a better tribunal. Nor has the church, in her local or collective capacity, any lordly authority over the consciences of the people, in mere matters of opinion, or circumstantials of religion. In these the people are free-born, and ought never to be in bondage to any man. None but the worst kind of usurpers, tyrants and bigots, have ever presumed to invade this temple of freedom, and claimed the right of lording it over God's heritage.

But it may be asked, what is the difference between matters of faith and mere matters of opinion? We answer, that matters of Christian faith are solemn facts and doctrines set forth or declared to us in the scriptures; whereas, mere matters of opinion relate to human things and human interpretations of the things of God. For instance, that Jesus died on the Cross, is a solemn fact—that by His death He atoned for human guilt, is a solemn doctrine. Both are declared and made known to us in the holy scriptures—both, therefore, are solemn matters of Christian faith, which no one can disbelieve with impunity. But whether He died on Friday or on Saturday: and whether, by His death, He procured a limited or an unlimited atonement, &c., these are only matters of opinion; about which men may differ and yet be blameless.

Hence, then, we cannot but perceive that there is a vast difference between matters of faith and matters of opinion. Between these we should always be careful to distinguish.—And having done so, we should show Christian firmness with regard to the former, and Christian toleration with respect to the latter.

By Christian firmness, we mean a firmness becoming the Christian character, or the man of God, who knows the importance of Christian principle and duty.

By Christian toleration, we mean a tolerance which good sense, enlightened reason, maturity of judgment and pure religion, always has accorded, and always will accord, to our fellow-men on all subjects, and especially in matters not connected with the things of God.

To be latitudinarian, with regard to plain matters of faith and practice, is perhaps no less sinful than to be intolerant, proscriptive and righteous over much, with respect to sheer matters of opinion. Which of the two is the worst, and has done the most harm, is perhaps yet to be ascertained; but if there is any difference, the latter will be found the more hurtful.

In all matters of Christian faith and duty, it is perfectly right and highly desirable, that the people of God should all be agreed. But even herein there must be a reasonable and scriptural toleration allowed. Any principle or practice which does not materially affect the purity and peace of the church, and which does not jeopardize the eternal interest of man, ought to be borne with. The church, as well as individuals, had always better suffer wrong than to do wrong.

Hence, the church at Antioch did not unchristianize and expel those errorists from Jerusalem, who taught the brethren, saying, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved." Acts 15: 1.

Nor did the church at Corinth excommunicate those erring brethren among them, who went to law with each other before the unjust, and not before the saints. It is true they done it ignorantly, and on that account were entitled to some clemency. But more than this, some of them were faulty in many other respects, and still they had forbearance or toleration shown them.

Neither did the apostle, in writing to his brethren at Rome, condemn and set at naught those who observed days, and eat all kinds of meat; nor yet those who took umbrage at those things; but exhorted them all to bear with one another, and to let each one stand or fall to his own master. "Let not him," said he, "that eateth, dispise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth; for God hath received him."—Rom. 14: 3.

Here, then, is the Christian law of toleration. It will apply to all cases of difference in opinion. Where Christian brethren will keep free from bigotry, and live up to this law of liberty, the spirit of intolerance will find no resting place. But where they will "despise and judge" one another for mere circumstantials and matters of opinion, there will be "confusion and every evil work."

What a long and horrible catelogue of crimes, persecution and blood-shed, has sprung from the unchristian and abominable spirit of Intoleration! Go, dear brethren, examine the records of ecclesiastical history, and note the sad chronicles of fueds, schisms and wars, which have all originated from a spirit of intoleration. Look around you, and mark the unhappy strifes and divisions, which have been and still are going on among the Catholics and Protestants—the various sects and parties—Old Schools and New Schools—Old Sides and New Sides, &c. &c.; and what is it owing to? What is the cause of it? Why to nothing under Heaven more than the unhallowed, mischievous spirit of intoleration. Because men will not always think, speak and act alike, therefore they must be despised and judged, eldershipped and cast out of the church; or else the church must be divided, and an Old or New School set up, or something else. Brethren! these things ought not so to be. And they never will be so where the spirit of love and toleration predominate. It is naught but a spirit of intolerance that gives birth to such things. The primitive Christians never thought of splitting the church, and of setting up New Schools or New Sides, because of faulty members in the church. They remembered not only the law of toleration, (Rom. 14: 3) but likewise the motive by which it is enforced, to-wit: "Because God hath received him." They remembered, also, that although it was no safe rule to judge a brother's liberty by another man's conscience, (1 Cor. 10: 29) yet it was always safe to put on, as the elect of God, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering and forbearance, (Col. 3: 12) keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. Eph. 4: 3.

Brethren, let us do likewise. Let us follow peace with all men. Let us covet earnestly the best gifts. But above all things, let us put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. Then the Lord Jehovah will delight in us, and send us health, happiness and prosperity.

State Election.

The General Election for State and County Officers, on Tuesday last, has resulted in favor of the Whigs. It is believed they will have a Whig Legislature, a Whig Delegation in Congress, and a Whig Canal Commissioner.

Our old friend, Elder James Mackey, from Cumberland county, is elected a member of the House of Representatives, by a majority of —— votes.

Support of the Ministry---No. 4.

[conclusion.]

In nearly all the churches, the burden of maintaining the ministers, as well as other expenses, fall upon a few faithful brethren and sisters. A few do all that kind of labor; and instead of tiring and throwing off the yoke, or desiring to free themselves from it, they cling to it year after year. And, though it is deplorable to witness the apathy of some professed Christians, yet these seem to thank God for the opportunity to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water," if thereby God's kingdom is advanced. God also seems to honor them by imposing duties upon them, and placing them in circumstances in which they may be more extensively useful. David said, "he would rather be a door-keeper in the house of God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness." Those that are preparing to dwell with David, and enjoy the blessing of David's God, must have David's spirit. Professors of religion, who are only to do what they are pleased to call their part; that is, a small proportion of what many of them are able, but are not willing to do, and leave the balance for A. B. C. to do, or remain undone, as it may happen, for aught they care, we have reason to fear that such have not the root of the matter at heart. Let me conclude with an anecdote on the support of the ministry.

A Welsh clergyman, invited to assist in the ordination of a minister in some part of England, was appointed to deliver the address to the church and congregation; and having been informed that their previous minister had suffered much from pecuniary embarrassment, although the church was fully able to support him comfortably, took the following singular method of administering reproof. In his address to the church he remarked: "You have been praying, no doubt, that God would send you a man after his own heart to be your pastor: you have done well. God, we hope, has heard your prayer, and given you such a minister as He approves, who will go in and out before you, and feed your souls with the bread of life. But now you have prayed for a minister, and God has given you one to your mind, you have something more to do—you must take care of him; and in order to his being happy amongst you, I have been thinking you have need to pray again.

"Pray!—pray again!"

"What should we pray again for?"

"Well, I think you have need to pray again."

"But for what?"

"Why, I'll tell you; pray that God would put Jacob's ladder down to the earth again."

"Jacob's ladder! Jacob's ladder! What has Jacob's ladder to do with our minister?"

"Why, I think if God would put Jacob's ladder down, that your minister could go up into Heaven on Sabbath evening after preaching, and remain all the week, then he could come down every Sabbath morning, so spiritually-minded, and so full of Heaven, that he would preach to you almost like an angel."

"Oh, yes! that may be all very well, and if it were possible, we should like it; but then we need our minister with us during the week, to attend prayer-meetings, visit the sick, hear experience, give advice, &c. &c., and, therefore, must have him always with us; we want the whole of his time and attention."

"That may be, and I will admit the necessity of his daily attentions to your concerns; but then you will remember, that if he remains here, he must have bread and cheese; and I have been told that your former minister was often wanting the necessaries of life, while many of you enjoy its luxuries; and, therefore, I thought if God would put Jacob's ladder down, your present minister might preach to you on the Sabbath, and by going up into Heaven after the services of the day, save you the painful necessity of supporting him.

Evil Speaking.

"The tongue is a fire, a world of iniqnity;" "and it is set on fire of hell, saith the scriptures;" and hence the evil speakings of many. That wicked men and women, or servants of hell, alienate themselves still farther from God, by evil speaking and uncivil surmisings, is not very strange, inasmuch as they then show themselves obedient slaves to their master, Satan, "whom they serve and whose they are." But that men, professing Godliness, should thus misemploy their time, and disgrace themselves in the sight of men and in the sight of Heaven, by so doing, surpasses our understanding, touching true religion. That the love of Christ and hatred towards a fellow-man, cannot dwell in the same heart at the same time, is an axiom. Malevolent railing against an individual does not spring from natural love, neither is it from above.—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is a law that is from Heaven, and should govern the conduct of all. He that loves his neighbor as himself, will not injure his neighbor by approbious epithets. Inferentially, we then conclude, that evil speakers are yet in their sins, and that instead of "Christ's spirit bearing witness with their spirit," the enemy of souls is dwelling in their hearts, and urging them forth to all manner of misdeeds, their profession of piety to the contrary notwithstanding. The Bible is so explicit on this subject that all can comprehend it, provided they desire so to do. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?" Nay, verily. Doth a man that loves his neighbor speak evil about him? I trow not. Doth a man that loves God speak ill of his neighbor? Surely not. Proof: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him, that he that loveth God, love his brother also." 1 John 4: 20, 21. Hence, whenever you hear persons speaking contemtuously of their brethren, you have an unerring rule to detect their irreligion. If the heart is evil, it will bring forth evil sayings; if the heart is full of righteous thoughts, it will bring forth good sayings, "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

And now let me address an affectionate appeal to all those that are guilty of the debasing error of slandering others. A short time only have we to live in this world, and much better it is to live in peace, during these few fleeting days, than to dwell in enmity with others. Surely you will have sorrow, and trouble, and disappointment enough here to contend with, without adding more bitterness to yourselves in this detestable way. Truly, it is more agreeable to love one another, than to hate one another. Why, then, pursue a contrary course? Why, then, so engaged in destroying the happiness of each other?—Have ye not enough of enemies to war against in this life, without becoming your own destroyers? Certainly you have. Restrain your tongues, then, from slanderous expressions. If you have aught against your brother or sister, act the part of a Christian; go to them; confess your faults to each other; forget the wrongs that may have been done on either side, and "forgive one another as God for Christ sake forgave you." Rather suffer a thousand injuries than retaliate a single wrong. If others speak evilly of you, do not slander them in return. Let love be your constant guide in your converse with others, and about others. Bearing in mind that the "wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy." And the "fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." And from these premises we come to the conclusion, that peace-breakers will be cursed, and they shall not be called the children of God, but the children of the devil.

Report of the Elizabethtown Sabbath School.

Two years ago, the "Church of God" at Elizabethtown, organized a Sabbath-school for the promotion of religion, and the advancement of Bible truth, as separated from sectarian bigotry. Since then, the brethren and sisters, with a few other beloved friends, have sustained the same with a becoming and praise-worthy zeal, far outstripping some other "churches" in this means of teaching the way to God. For while many churches have a much larger membership, and less opposition from sectarianism, they are standing still the Sabbath-day idle; yet here, with a two-fold opposition, and a very "little flock," they have upheld the cause, and upheld it nobly. Prior to its establishment, "not a few" contended against the practicability of instituting a Sabbath-school in the Bethel, eagerly asking, "where are the scholars?—where are the teachers?—where are the library books?" A single effort to overcome these phantom difficulties, vanquished them.

And we hold that, if we have been able to carry forward this heaven-born work for two years, and are still unscattered, we are able to carry it onward, with the aid of God, in future. We trust that the darkest days are past, and that the rays of Divine light will soon merge from beneath the clouds to brighten our moral horizon. The library consists of two hundred and thirty-five volumes. One hundred volumes having been added within a few months. Each scholar is supplied with a copy of the Youth's Penny Gazette every two weeks, which, we are glad to learn is read with great interest by the children; and we believe the instructive lessons taught in this important little sheet, will make an impress on the tender minds of many boys and girls, and lead them to repentance. The medium number of scholars is about forty, which might be increased somewhat, if the parents would require their children to go regularly to Sabbath-school. In this respect many are too slack, and we greatly fear may regret the loose discipline they have enforced in this matter, if, through unchecked indulgence, they eventually pass on from petty offence to capital crime—from the pleasant home to the gloomy dungeon, or shameful scaffold!

The teachers, with a single exception, are professors of religion, and are, consequently, better fitted to lead youth in wisdom's beautiful path, than those that have never known Christ in the pardon of their sins. "Children of light" can alone lead the youthful pilgrim from error's dark and dismal path, into the way radiant with glory's sparkling light.

Retrospecting the past, we have much to encourage us to continue this good work.—Heaven will yet crown our labors with triumphant success. Then let us be more zealous in this good cause, knowing that we are accountable for our actions here below.—With a little effort on our part, souls may be saved, that might otherwise have been lost, had we not exerted our weak instrumentality in their behalf. And, though others may delight in pompous show to advance their cause, we will try to advance the cause of God, by praying faithfully and earnestly for those entrusted to our charge; we will try to teach them the whole truth of the Bible; we will exhort them to repentance and obedience to the will of the Lord, and look to the Author of salvation to save them.

GEORGE ROSS.

Elizabethtown, Sept. 25, 1846.

Wisdom.

"Wisdom is the principle thing, therefore get wisdom." The Author of this assertion and exhortation, was a man of extensive knowledge and profound wisdom. This is concluded from the nature of His writings, and from the fact that God, who is the fountain of wisdom, bestowed on Him as much as He possibly could desire. He, as a wise man, under the inspiration of an infinitely wise God, could not easily err in judging what was most conducive to man's happiness. Hence, in looking around Him, and viewing the depravity of mankind, and the vanity of earth with all the vices and immoralities prevalent in it, He says: "All things whatever that my eyes behold, or that my ears hear of," "wisdom is the principle thing."

According to a learned divine, the term wisdom in the scriptures is put for, 1st. The faculties of the soul which enables man to perceive and do what is proper. Acts 7: 10. 2d. True religion. Luke 1: 17. James 3: 17. 3d. Arts and sciences. Acts 7: 22. 4th. The word of God. Luke 11: 49. 5th. Christ the Lord. 1 Cor. 1: 24, 30.

Pure religion is, undoubtedly, what the wisdom spoken of has reference to, and hence the words of Solomon concur with those of Christ: "Religion is the one thing needful."

But as our object is to give some reasons why wisdom or religion is the principle thing, we will proceed.

First: It is attainable. All, and only a few, but all who wish, may obtain it. The conditions are, only ask and receive. Not so with other things men may desire, and strive too for many things, and yet never receive them. Observe the man who desires great earthly possessions, how laborious, how incessantly engaged he pushes through all difficulties; he toils day after day and year after year, and when he is just about to grasp the object, the horrible fiat salutes his ears, "this night thy soul shall be required of thee." Here, then, is the object upon which his affections, his whole soul, was fastened; but before he could realize it, he fell a victim to death and had nothing. The object he sought was not attainable by him; and, alas! what thousands, in the same manner, fell short of realizing the object of their expectations. And as in this particular, so in all others that are not permanent, that are not heavenly, and that are transitory in their nature. O! that men would see the foolishness of earth.

Secondly: It is the principal thing, because it is the only one that is satisfactory in its nature. Nothing can give real joy, real peace and real happiness, save the religion of Jesus Christ. Earthly possessions can never do it; the wisdom of men, or of this world, cannot do it: true, in proportion to the light of man's mind, and the enlargement of his intellectual powers, his happiness will and must be; but real happiness and real satisfaction, is only realized by the believer. As long as men continue to disbelieve the word of truth, so long there is a stinging of conscience, and constant condemning for living in unbelief.—There never was, nór there never can be, found a man who enjoyed true happiness while indulging in that which was not perfectly pure and holy. No heart can, possibly, be satisfied with earthly joy.

John Mason, who had been a privy counsellor to four successive monarchs, in the evening of life, declares: "Were I to live again, I would exchange the court for a retirement, and the whole life I have lived in the palace, for one hour's enjoyment of God in my closet; all things else forsake me except my God, my duties and my prayers."—The learned Seldon, also, shortly before his death, declared that he had surveyed most of the learning that is among the sons of men; that his study was filled with books and papers on various subjects, yet he could not at that time recollect any passage in all his books and papers, whereon he could rest his soul, save those contained in the sacred scriptures.

Biographical records furnish us with numerous acknowledgments like these; but we deem these sufficient for the present. This, then, is a grand reason for terming religion or wisdom the principle thing: it gives peace to the troubled conscience, and joy to the sorrowful heart.

But the last reason we shall here offer, is because it is durable—it is imperishable. All things that our hands touch, or that our eyes behold, are inaccessable. Man, the noblest work of God's hands, made only a little inferior to angels, is mortal. "He appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth away." If man, then, is so frail and of so short a donation, certain it is, that inferior objects cannot remain forever. Solomon, after having taken a survey of earth, came to the conclusion "that all is vanity and vexation of spirit." Men, who profess wealth through life, must leave it in death. The man of letters may retain his knowledge through life, but in death it will avail him nothing. His name may have been wafted on the pinions of fame; thousands may have been ready to bow before him and do him homage, for his wise sayings and worthy deeds; he may leave his biography to inform generations as yet unborn of his career, and yet if destitute of the one thing needful, his condition, in a future state, will be deplorable; it will be awful. But he who has received the principal thing, has a treasure to carry through life, a comfort in death and a passport from earth to Heaven. It is the Christians catholican under all difficulties and trials, an invaluable blessing throughout eternity. It is endless in its duration.

Now that religion is so easily attained, that it is so satisfactory, and that it is so durable, why is it that so few are in possession of it! This question we had, perhaps, better leave for those of our readers, who have it not, to answer. Let us, in conclusion, assure them that according to the word of God, no excuse, however plausibly framed, will justify them when brought to appear before the bar of God.

More Thoughts on Sabbath-Schools.

When I consider the impressions early instructions make on the youthful mind, I am the more convinced of the utility of Sunday-schools. And the more I am convinced of their utility, the more I feel to engage in and encourage them. Those persons who live in reach of Sunday-schools, and refuse to take some active part therein, though fully qualified, must certainly think they are exempt from the command, "do good unto all," or else their hearts must approach the character of those, which one of the prophets sees proper to style, "a heart of stone!" But there are some people in the world, who feel themselves exempt from the discharge of all duties, however weighty and important. Such feelings of exemption sometimes are characteristics of a "conscience seared with a hot iron!"

God has placed us into the world to do good. And among the many ways in which we may do good, is to impart such instructions to the youthful mind, of which they are susceptible. This may be done best in Sabbath-schools. Therefore, every one who wishes to do good, as the end of our existence, should engage in this glorious cause.

There are those who attend prayer-meetings and experience-meetings; they read the Word, often go to hear it preached, and attend to many other religious duties; but they never have been members of Sunday-schools. And if you talk to them about coming to Sunday-school, they can offer no objections, but say it is a good cause, and should be sustained. This I call "faith without works." And I think if the apostle James was still living, and would hear such confessions coming from the mouths of those who know their duty, but do it not, he would not hesitate long to call them sinners; for he has expressly declared: "He that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is a sin."

Those professors of religion who appear to be so strict in their attendance to prayer-meetings, to the preaching of the Word, &c., are very condemnatory when some one occasionally neglects these duties. Well, this is all right. These things should not be neglected. But, I would ask, who is the more censurable—the man who occasionally neglects prayer-meetings, preaching, &c., or the man who lives in sight of a Sunday-school, and never puts a foot into it, when his services are so much needed? "I speak unto wise men, judge ye what I say."

My good Book teaches me, that what my hand findeth to do, I should do heartily, as unto the Lord. And do not our hands find much to do, if we but enter the room of a Sunday-school as spectators? To our right and left we may see classes without teachers. Sometimes every class may have a teacher; but there being so many in each class, that the teachers cannot get round, in which case it is impossible for them to do their duty towards their several classes. Now who does not see a work to do here? Who, that has a Christian heart, when he sees a flock of "the young and rising generation" assembled together to receive instruction, and when there is a want of teachers, can refuse to offer his services, and say, "I will take charge of one of those classes that are without teachers?" Who, that knows his duty, when he sees a teacher having perhaps enough scholars to form two classes, will not say, "divide your scholars into two classes, and I will take charge of one?"

Some people do not know their duty in this respect, and therefore are excusable; others know their duty, but do it not, and therefore are inexcusable. The former should be instructed, and the latter reprimanded. But who should do this? We answer, that it is the place of Gospel ministers, as well as teachers, to dwell upon and enforce these duties. But do all the ministers of the Gospel do this! Some do—others do not. I have heard many preach year after year, but I never heard the word 'Sabbath-school' come from their lips yet. Now what does this argue? Why it argues that they are either grossly ignorant of the design and utility of Sunday-schools, or that they wilfully neglect them.—If they are ignorant of these schools, they would do well by perusing a work on this subject, entitled the "teachers taught," (or similar works) published for the American Sunday-School Union; but if they know these things, and wilfully neglect them, they should learn to know, if they have not yet, that the apostle James charges them with sin.

Therefore, let ministers of the Gospel do their duty in this, as well as in every other respect. And if they do not feel disposed to lecture on the subject, if they would merely attend to it sometimes in their discourses, it would do much more good than to be entirely silent on the subject. But the better way would be to deliver lectures on certain occasions, intended altogether for the use and benefit of the school or schools, in their sphere of labor. And if preachers and teachers unite their efforts in carrying forward this glorious institution, it must necessarily prosper in our hands. "In union is our strength." Amen! Amen!!

Correspondence---No. 2,

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

8.—S. When I was with you last, it appeared as if we could not serve God together any more.

B. B. T.—It is true, for so it appears; and certain it is, if we cannot serve God together here, there is no hope for us to live with Him together hereafter.

The main difference between us, as I told you when you were here, is the erroneous opinion of soul and body sleeping in the grave, and that abominable and soul-destroying doctrine of Destructionism!!

9.—S. You say you would visit me if you knew that I was clear of my error; and for this reason you ought to pay us a visit; for the apostle James says: "That if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

B. B. T.—To pay you a visit for the purpose of reclaiming you, I consider useless at the present time; for when you were here, I tried all I could to reclaim you, but it was all in vain; and it appears to me, as the apostle Paul says, 2 Timothy 4: 4, "And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and be turned to fables," and I presume there is no prospect, at present, of reclaiming you from your error. And another thing is; if you are convinced you will not give up, but will still hold fast to your false theory. I admonished you again and again, and your countenance plainly showed that you were almost convinced, when I addressed you at our last parting. So I concluded to take the admonition of the apostle Paul, in Titus 3: 10, "A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonitions, reject."

10.—S. You call yourself a preacher of the Gospel, therefore make it your duty to visit me.

B. B. T.—If I have not been misinformed, you said I might come and preach in B———, that it was of no use to preach at your house, because we could not agree. If this is any good reason why I should not preach in your house, then my commission is wrong, for it authorizes me to preach every where, and to every creature. But this cannot be, therefore your reasoning is erroneous. Besides, the Jews permitted the apostle to preach in their Synagogues, although they did not agree with them.

11.—S. I am not ashamed to believe in the Second Advent of Christ near, viz: about 1846 or 1847; and if not at that set time, to look continually till He comes.

B. B. T.—The year '43 was the first time that was set, and according to some of the writers on the Second Advent of Christ, time could not continue beyond the 21st of March, 1844; when this failed, then they came to the conclusion that there must be a tarrying time, and then concluded He would tarry till the 22d of October, then He would come without fail; and there was a great cry and ado made that Christ would now come without fail.—Accordingly, some left their homes, some their work, others gave away and destroyed their things, and all those who could not believe it, (although it is hard to believe something that has once failed, but you still hang to it after having twice failed) were doomed to destruction. This last cry has again failed, and now you have set another time, viz: about 1846 or '47; and if not at that set time, to look continually till He comes. Why not now return to old land-marks, and look for Him till He comes? But I think you ought to hesitate, if not be ashamed, of setting the time again when He will come, after having twice failed in your predictions. It appears to me, as the apostle Paul says: "You are ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." You had better take the advice of Christ, "Be ye always ready, for ye know not when the time is," and not wait till you fail another time in your predictions; and then take the advice.

ALETHES.

Shippensburg Camp-meeting.

According to appointment, a number of brethren from Shippensburg, Orrstown, and Fayettville churches, on the 28th of August, pitched their tents on the ground of Mr. Mauchen, three miles north-west of Shippensburg, in Franklin county, Pa., in order to hold communion with God, and have sinners converted. From the begining to the close of the encampment, the power and grace of God was wonderfully displayed. Oh! how the children of Zion were fed with heavenly manna in the wilderness; they seemed to feast upon the glories that are consequent upon a sound religious policy and Gospel faith; which are the conditions of a sure transport from earth to Heaven.

Many were the tears that flowed from the eyes of those who felt the burning love of God in the soul; many were the triumphant shouts that were heard in token of victory on the side of the God of hosts. The membership were not the only participants in those heavenly joys; ministers, also, shared largely in the communications of unmerited grace; members of other denominations apparently could say, it was good for them to be there. It was a time of good measure, "pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

The power of God was not alone confined to believers, but poor sinners came trembling and weeping to the Cross, and in deep anguish sought for redemption in the blood of Christ, whose pardoning mercy was obtained on the part of many whose crys were, "what must I do to be saved?"

Thus, our time together on that occasion, passed away in holy action and Christian harmony. Such services have a tendency to unite the hearts of all who are engaged in its holy exercises. It forms a bond of union among its votaries, more firm and permanent than that which unites princes and statesmen. They also tend to demolish those barriers which the jealousies of some division-makers have thrown around those blessed institutions of the church. It is, therefore, to be hoped that those who now patronize the spiritual improvement of mankind, and who wish to promote the best interests of society, will no longer, either by objection or confusion, stand in the way of church union, or the world's reformation and conversion. Better for men that a mill-stone were hanged about their neck, and drowned in the depth of the sea, than to offend one of those who believes in Christ.

It ought to be one of the main desires of public worship, that we might be directed in the prosecution of holiness, and led to deduce from Gospel efforts those conclusions which will gradually expand our views of the plans and perfections of the Almighty. If such were the result of a religious profession, confidence would be restored throughout every department of the Redeemer's kingdom. Jealousy, suspicion and distrust, would no longer rankle in the human breast, but unfeigned affection, fidelity and friendship, would unite the whole brotherhood of the church. With what a beautiful simplicity, and with what smoothness and harmony, would the whole church move onward in all its exercises!—How many cares and anxietics would vanish? How many perplexities would cease? and how many ruinous litigations would be prevented? If man would but remember this commandment: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

In the obedience of this noble precept, man becomes a worker together with God, in carrying forward those plans of infinite benevolence, which will issue, in the ultimate, happiness of the whole Christian community.—Thus, the man in whose heart love presides, takes a lively and sincere interest in every thing that has a tendency to promote the eternal comfort and welfare of his neighbor. He is compassionate and merciful, gentle and indulgent, kind and tender-hearted, generous and humane. He feels for the sorrows of suffering humanity, relieves the distresses of the poor and the afflicted, clothes the naked, protects the widow and the orphan, encourages social, sivil and religious compact, to meliorate the condition of the whole family of man, and to increase and extend their comforts and enjoyments. Of such a one it may be said, in the language of Job: "He is eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and a father to the poor." The blessings of Him that was ready to perish comes upon him, and he causes the widow's heart to sing for joy.

Letter from Baltimore.

Journey to two Camp-meetings—Preaching at Littlestown, Taneytown, &c.—Brother Young's Camp-meeting, &c.

On Saturday morning, August 29, I left the city, in company with five other members of our church here, and three Advent sisters, for the Uniontown camp-meeting, where we arrived at about five o'clock in the afternoon, singing a hymn as our carriage entered upon the ground. We were very kindly received by the brethren, and hospitably entertained during the whole of the meeting. As an account of this meeting has doubtless been furnished for publication, I shall not give any further particulars, but merely say that it was a good one, resulting in the conversion, I think, of about twenty, and the baptism of twenty-one persons. The preaching was excellent for the most part; and testimony was exhibited there, that shows we have able preachers in our connection. I was much gratified to observe the improvement in some of the young ministerial brethren.

This meeting being over, I sent my carriage load back to the city, and went on up towards Gettysburg, to attend the camp-meeting at the Two Taverns. I arrived at brother JONATHAN YOUNG's on Friday the 4th of September. The meeting commenced on Monday evening the 7th. When the hour arrived for preaching, none of the preaching brethren having arrived, it fell to my lot to address the people—congregation small but orderly.

On Tuesday no preachers came till at nine o'clock at night; so it fell again upon me to officiate that day, when the congregations were again rather small. Brothers J. WINEBRENNER and S. BOWMAN having arrived that night, and brother J. KELLER the next morning, we had ministerial aid sufficient.

The meeting lasted till Thursday night, during the whole of which the congregations were small, owing to three causes; first, the extreme busy time in gathering fruit, and other duties of the farmer; secondly, the prejudice of the people against such meetings; and, thirdly, the small number of tents on the ground, which consisted of only two, brother YOUNG's and brother WARREN's.

Brother WINEBRENNER preached two appropriate discourses for that particular neighborhood, which I regretted were listened to by such small audiences.

Three sisters were baptized, one of whom is a mute. She can read, write and speak by hand. The brethren turned her over into my hands, to show her the duty of baptism. And as I know the dumb and deaf's alphabet, I conversed with her on the duty of obeying Christ in his commands. She was undecided, but not obstinate. I referred her to a number of passages of scripture, and lastly to John 15: 11, where the Lord says: "These things [keeping his commands, &c.,] have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." She, wishing to have a fulness of Christian joy on earth, and then go "where there is fulness of joy and blessing forever more," submitted to her Saviour's requirement. May the Lord bless and keep her.

So far as we dare praise men for their good deeds, brother YOUNG deserves a full share for his exertions to propagate the cause we advocate, in Adams county. He and his polite and affectionate companion do, continually, what is in their power to spread the truth.—Nearly the whole of this meeting rested upon brother YOUNG. Brother WARREN merits a share also of commendation for the part he and his companion took in the entertaining of brethren and others. He lives in Gettysburg. Brother YOUNG has strove long to have a Gospel church established in his neighborhood. Many persons have been converted through his exertions, but they have always removed to other parts; and so he is still left alone. Let him have the benefit of the prayers of the whole church, that God may enable him to persevere in well-doing, till he shall get his reward.

After this meeting I left brother YOUNG's, to fill an appointment at Littlestown. The Academy was full of the most respectable citizens, who paid great attention to my discourse. Brother COLESTOCK, of the United Brethren church, closed the services for me, and then took me home to his boarding house, (PHILIP BISHOP's) in the neighborhood, where I was kindly entertained. On Saturday night and three times on Sabbath, I preached at Mr. PETER BITTLE's farm house, two miles south of Littlestown. The people were very attentive; and the word of God found way to many hearts, so that they were almost pursuaded to be Christians. I once lived with this man; and, I think, if I could spare the time to labor there frequently, a good work would be effected. On Sabbath morning I spoke in German on the new birth, and had to touch upon some very tender sectarian points; but by doing so carefully, and in love, no one took offence. I think we should all take great care to "speak the truth in love," and give no unnecessary offence. Had I my days all to live over, I think my past experience would lead me to quite a different course towards my fellow-men, who are seeking the way to Heaven.

On Monday evening following I preached at Frizzlesburg, where I had "much liberty," owing to the earnest prayers of the church, while I endeavored to hold forth the word of truth.

The next evening I held a meeting at brother JNO. HOLLENBERRY's. Here, and at his brother WILLIAM's, I was very kindly treated.

On Wednesday evening I preached in Taneytown. Here I had two private houses offered me to speak in, but I chose to have the meeting out doors; so we obtained permission to hold it on a long porch before a vacant store-house. I had a large audience, and in addition, the evening being calm, I could be heard over half the town, by many who sat at their doors. This is pretty much a Catholic neighborhood; and one old black woman, of that faith, said she "had a great mind to call me a liar right before all the people," for saying the priest could not pray sinners out of torment! I tried to open a door for our good but bashful brother KELLEN, to preach there. I think our preachers are very remiss in not trying to get into the towns more than they do.

On Thursday night I rested in Uniontown, at father JACON CHRIST's, who also treated me very kindly; and on Friday I visited brother ABRAHAM APPLER, with whom I had a very profitable exchange of sentiments for about three hours, resulting in mutual benefit, and confirming us in our hopes of eternal life and confidence in each other.

On that evening I preached again at Frizzlesburg; and the next day, the brethren there kindpaying my fare, (so that I might be at home on Sabbath,) I reached the city at dusk, in the stage. I found the little church in a somewhat revived state, and encouraged to persevere to the end.

Brother PRICE, our pastor, is still absent on his mission to raise money to pay for a meeting house, we intend either to buy or build.—He writes encouragingly. I hope he will go on and do all he can, till he is all through the eastern churches; so that we may be able to have once an own "vine and fig-tree" to worship God under. We have in the church three or four brethren, besides myself, who officiate frequently in public; and this way we are making out, in the absence of our pastor. We look forward with joyful anticipations, for better times here. We hope the brethren will not cease to pray for the church at Baltimore.

Fraternally, &c.,

J. F. WEISHAMPEL.

Postscript!

SOME of the brethren have kindly told me they thought I had done wrong by holding those temperance concerts with my children, during the two last winters. In relation to that matter I beg leave to say, that the primary object was to advance the temperance cause, which end was accomplished; and I could not, for my part, condemn another man for doing what I did; but I frankly confess that it was out of place for me to do it—I mean, because I profess to be called to preach the Gospel. But laboring under the unpleasant circumstances connected with my case, relative to myself and the church — being severed from her — and sometimes almost dead to vital godliness, I was often led a wrong course. But having been restored to the church and abandoned those things, even at a considerable pecuniary sacrifice, I hope the brethren will not be less merciful than God is. Therefore, I think I may confidently look for forgiveness from you all, and your prayers for the future.

The Lord being my helper, I purpose to devote my coming days to His service; and as my health seems to be improving, I have resolved to apply to the next coming Eldership for a license and appointment to preach the Gospel. May the Lord bless us all!—Amen.

In Christian bonds,

J. F. WEISHAMPEL.

Washington Camp-meeting.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This is to give you and the readers of the ADVOCATE an account of the camp-meeting at Washington, Lancaster county. All the tents, which amounted to seventeen, were from two churches, viz: from Lancaster city and Washington. The preaching brethren were STROHM, KYLE, THOMAS, ROSS, BRADY, HUNLEY, PRICE, LENKERT and STAMM, and several of other denominations. We commenced on Monday and continued over Sabbath. The congregations were generally large, especially on Sabbath. The conduct was good, and the people attentive to preaching, which was very powerful. Several were converted, and we hope many convicted; for we frequently could see the silent tear steal down the cheek of many. We shall, perhaps, only fully realize the am't. of good that was done, during the camp, in eternity.

I remain yours, in Christian love,

A. J. KAUFFMAN.

Extract of a letter, dated

NEWBURG, Sept. 25, 1846.

BROTHER J. W.:—Our protracted meeting is still in progress. It commenced on Friday last. Three have already professed to find peace in believing, and we are still looking for better times. Pray for us.

Yours, in Christ,

J. C. BOOTH.

Letter from Elder George U. Harn.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 16, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

According to my former statement to you, brother HICKERNELL and myself left this place, in the steamer Josephine, on the 3d of August last, for the camp-meeting in Athens county, Ohio. The country, down the Ohio till a few miles below Wheeling, appears to be a rich and well-cultivated soil, with little exception. Below that it is not so well improved, as people along the river depend more on trafficking with the steamboats than their farms, for a livelihood.

The first town or village of any note, is ECONOMY, on the north bank of the river, eighteen miles below Pittsburg. It is noted for the singularity of its religious texture. Its polity is that of a community of goods, and all intermarriage and sexual intercourse are rigidly prohibited. It is a great manufacturing place of cotton, woollen and silken goods. Its inhabitants are Germans, whose leader is a man by the name of ROPP. As regards their morals, I know nothing; but I may pay them a visit for the express purpose of chronicleing more of their history.

BEAVER comes next, and is situated at the mouth of Big Beaver. Here the Akron canal commences. We were compelled to lie by here over night, in consequence of the danger of crossing the "Beaver Sholes" after dark. Tuesday morning we struck the Sholes, and hung about eight hours, till we had lightened the vessel of her burden, by placing the laden in a keel. As we broke loose, the spar of the "Uncle Ben," which was also lying there, caught the corner of the ladies' cabin, and did some little damage to it. It presented a serious appearance for a few moments to us, who were standing on the keel at the time. I thought, at the time, if Congress had appropriated those thirty millions of dollars, squandered in the Mexican war, for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States, the lives of her citizens would be far less endangered, and they would be answering the end of their being and promotion to power, far more than by gorging themselves on the blood of their brethren. We might then look for the smiles of Heaven on us as a nation.

Shortly after we leave the Pennsylvania line, we pass WELSVILLE, in Jefferson county, Ohio. Next STEUBENVILLE, which is the county seat of said county. This is an extremely handsome cite, seventy-two miles from Pittsburg. It numbers about seven thousand inhabitants, and is one of the oldest towns in the State. It has a cotton factory, three or four woollen factories, a large Female Seminary, with a variety of meeting-houses—one owned by the Disciples. Near midway, between this and Wheeling, is WELLSBURG, in Virginia, eight miles from Bethany, the residence of the far-famed CAMPBELLS, and location of their college. I find it has a good repute even among its religious opponents, as I made some inquiry of those acquainted with it.

WHEELING is also a very cleanly little place, of about eight thousand souls, and some very fine buildings. Here we re-shipped our freight, and I took a walk through town to view it.—It being market-day, they appeared to have a rich market, indeed. Wheeling is ninety-four or five miles by water, and fifty by land, from Pittsburg, and is the most desirable place I have ever seen in Virginia. Some —— miles below this, is MARIETTA, renowned more for being the spot at which the Slack-water Navigation of the Muskinggum river commences, than its beauty or size. Of course, it is in Ohio. Twelve miles lower down, is PARKERSBURG, in Virginia, the formerly-contemplated termination of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. As regards its location, it would be a very suitable place, and, doubtless, if it could be affected, would divert the western trade and travel from this point, and all intervening posts from hear to Philadelphia. But as it is now fairly ascertained that the Central Road, so called, is all an air-castle, Pittsburgers make no doubt that we get the other here. The greatest obstacle in getting it to Parkersburg, is the extreme tumorous country it would have to pass through; but in coming to Pittsburg, this will be avoided. Two miles below this, lies the BLENNERHASSIT ISLAND. It is the largest one in the river I saw, and looks to be very rich. The farms are nearly all very heavily covered with corn. These Islands all belong to the State of Virginia, as she, in seceding away the territory of Ohio to become a State, did not relinquish her title and claim to the exclusive jurisdiction of the river.

Thursday morning early, we landed at POMROY, the capital of Meigs county, about two hundred and fifty miles from Pittsburg—being considerably longer on our way than we expected, as our boat travelled slow.

As regards the officers, crew and passengers of this boat, I have but little to say in their favor. I have travelled considerably in stages, cars and steamboats, but I am certain I never come across a more profane set; gambling, drinking and swearing, both on deck and in the cabin, was the practice with by far the greater number. I thought to myself, while some of our maritime philanthropists are industriously engaged in reclaiming the mariner of the briny deep, cannot some means be used to attract the attention of the steamboat hands and officers, and the travellers on our western rivers, to the morality of the Bible? For they need something of the kind very much. One old man, particularly, a deck-passenger for Cincinnati, and extremely poor, so much so, that the master of the poor, in Pittsburg, had to pay his passage, and give him money to get his diet on the way, was nearly all the time under the influence of liquor, and the most profane being I ever heard of his age.

From Pomroy we started on foot, and travelled about eight miles, and were overtaken by brother SNOW, who had come for us with a conveyance, but missed us at the river. By him we were conveyed to the camp, on the land of Elder RICHMOND, about three or four miles south of the town of Athens, which is said to be a very beautiful little place, on the Hawking river, and is the county-seat of Athens county. The State college is situated here; but as I was not at the place, I cannot describe it. I had some very pressing invitations to preach there, and should have done so, if I could have remained longer.

The camp was small, as we expected it would, being only nine tents, and they chiefly United Brethren and Methodists. Some were brethren of the "Church of God." It began on Thursday evening, and broke up on Tuesday evening following. The ministers who took part, were Elders HICKERNELL, WERTZ, COOK, RICHMOND and MYSELF, belonging to the Elderships in Pennsylvania and Ohio; Elder KURTZ, a liberal-minded young man, and circuit-preacher of the United Brethren; also, Elder PURKINS of the same; Elder WELSH, of the Cumberland Presbyterians, and originally from Wormleysburg, in Cumberland county, Pa., took some part, and bought one of your works on REGENERATION. Some Methodist local preachers, (I do not recollect their names) and two Free-Will Baptists—one of them a young man, just on his way from New Hampshire to Iowa. While I remained, about eight or ten professed to embrace the love of God, and nearly that number were still seeking. We shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God, so much as in us laid. On Tuesday I was pressed on to preach, on the views of the Church, which I did, and was astonished to find it took better than any subject touched on. Some insisted on organizing a CHURCH OF GOD that night; but as the ordinances were attended to, and there were seekers, it was deferred. I suppose there were thirty-five or forty who attended to the ordinances. On Saturday and Sunday nights, the rable, from a distance, were quite disorderly outside the encampment; but after that we had good order. I had heard they threatened to break up the camp before it began; but this I little feared.

Though the camp broke up, yet there was to be preaching on Wednesday evening on the ground, as our brethren remained to hold a protracted meeting in the Free-Will Baptist meeting-house, not far from that place, over the following Lord's-day. I then returned to Pomroy, and after watching all night for a boat, started on Thursday morning early, on board the new steamer "Albert." The very gentlemanly captain and clerk of this boat, gave me permission to preach to the passengers on board, which I did that evening between Parkersburg and Marietta, from the commission in Matthew. I had quite a variety to preach to—the WELSH congregational minister, brother PEW, of Pittsburg, and the western merchants, on their way East, down to the real black-leg and petty-gambler. But due respect was given me the whole time; and when I closed, the gambling party took the tables and commenced serving their master faithfully. Saturday 15th, by noon, we arrived in Pittsburg again. Upon the whole, I think our meeting will be productive of much good, and hope to see many yet added to the good cause there. Elder RICHMOND is well received among all, but particularly among the Free-Will Baptists. From what I can learn of them, I can scarcely tell the difference between them, in some places, and ourselves. Indeed, I think, there is not as much difference in sentiment and practice, as there is between some of the "Churches of God" in Pennsylvania and Ohio. Now if we can act as one among ourselves, why not with them? They are no great lovers of their sectarian name, and frequently use the proper one just as we do. This is praise-worthy!!

Respectfully yours,

GEORGE U. HARN.

New Books.

To fill up a small end of a column, we give notice to the preachers and others, that we shall have a few copies of new books at the Eldership; such as "FINNEY'S THEOLOGY," "WORCESTER'S DICTIONARY," "PICTORIAL BIBLES," &c.

Letter from Elder Henry Murray.

September 19, 1846.

BROTHER J. WINEBRENNER:—

I take my seat this morning to drop you a few lines. I had thought of writing to you some time ago, but did not for several reasons; first, because I had nothing very interesting to communicate; secondly, I thought it likely that my writing would not be edifying to the readers of the ADVOCATE; and, thirdly, when considering my limited knowledge, I thought I had better read and learn than to write for others. But by the assisting grace of God, I will try to write a few lines.

From my present knowledge of things, there is not much stir among the peop e, either among professors or non-professors, and especially on my circuit. However, there is apparently more of a lively interest upon the part of the churches, generally, than there was some time back, for which I feel thankful to God. I pray God to let a cloud of mercy and grace gather over us, and break in blessings upon our souls. Every where we much need the grace of God in this western country, in order to restore that peace and union that once characterized the "Church of God" in Ohio.. BRETHREN! let us all pray for it; and, O! God, help us all for the future to live more holy.

And to my brethren in the West I would say, as our difficulties have been many in Ohio, and apparently not over yet; and as our yearly meeting is now near at hand, let us endeavor to come up in the fulness of the blessing of God; for much, in my opinion, depends on how our yearly meeting is conducted and ended.

Yours, in love,

HENRY MURRAY.

Letter from Elder Jacob Lininger.

SHIRLEYSBURG, HUNT. CO., PA., Sept. 9, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

After my respect to you and yours, I would inform you that I have obtained one new subscriber for your valuable paper, which you will please to send on as soon as you can. The money appears to be a great obstacle in this country, of getting subscribers for the ADVOCATE. I do not know what has become of what little money that formerly was in circulation in our country. I am afraid that it has fallen into the hands of some of those misers, and that they have got it hoarded up. What should be done in such a case? How will we get it from them? They won't give their hearts to God, and unless they get religion, I am of the opinion they never will give it up.

The cause of God is not progressing very rapidly through this region of country at this time. It is true that there is one, now and then, caught in the Gospel-net; but we cannot get any draught of them. Yet we do not feel discouraged, but cherish the fond hope that the day is not far distant, when we shall realize Heaven's blessings in the conviction and conversion of many of the dear people.

I suppose that brother ANGLE has favored you, by this time, with an epistle giving a full and correct statement of our camp-meeting, so that it is unnecessary for me to say anything about it in this letter. I will, therefore, bring my remarks to a close.

Yours, in the Gospel of Christ,

JACOB LININGER.

Letter from Elder Daniel Hertz,

Giving an account of a case of Suicide.

EPHRATA, LANCASTER CO., Oct., 8, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER:—

I am sorry to inform you of a sorrowful circumstance which occurred at Mr. JOSEPH KONIGMACHER'S last evening. A young man by the name of RAHER, from Adamstown, (one of the tanners who belonged to the Albright's sect, and had intended to become immersed on next Sabbath, in Adamstown) cut his throat nearly from ear to ear, last evening. I saw him in his blood shortly after he had committed the atrocious deed. What the cause of this act was, no one knows. He had complained of not being very well for several days previous. He was, to all appearence, a truly pious young man. He is now in the hands of a just God, who will do him ample justice.

Yours, in haste,

DANIEL HERTZ.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

General Kearney's Proclamation.

Proclamation to the inhabitants of New Mexico by Brigadier General S. W. Kearney, commanding the troops of the United States in the same.

As by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States, and as the undersigned, at the head of his troops on the 18th inst., took possession of Santa Fe, the Capital of the department of New Mexico, he now announces his intention to hold the Department with its original boundaries (on both sides of the Del Norte) as a part of the United States, and under the name of the Territory of New Mexico.

The undersigned has come to New Mexico with a strong Military force, and an equally strong one is following close in his rear. He has more troops than necessary to put down any opposition that can possibly be brought against him, and therefore it would be but folly or madness for any dissatisfied or discontented persons to think of resisting him.

The undersigned has instructions from his Government to respect the religious institutions of Mexico, to protect the property of the Church, to cause the worship of those belonging to it to be undisturbed, and their religious rights in the amplest manner preserved to them. Also, to protect the person and property of all quiet and peaceable inhabitants within its boundaries, against their enemies, the Eutaws, Navahoes and others; and while he assures all that it will be his pleasure as well as his duty to comply with those instructions, he calls upon them to exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, and in maintaining the authority and efficiency of the laws: and to require of those who have left their homes and taken up arms against the troops of the United States, to return forthwith to them, or else they will be considered as enemies and traitors, subjecting their persons to punishment and their property to seizure and confiscation, for the benefit of the public Treasury.

It is the wish and intention of the United States to provide for New Mexico a free government with the least possible delay, similar to those in the United States, and the people of New Mexico will then be called on to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own Representatives to the Territorial Legislature, but until this is done the laws hitherto in existence will be continued until charged or modified by competent authority, and those persons holding office will continue in the same for the present, provided they will consider themselves good citizens and willing to take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

The undersigned, hereby absolves all persons residing within the bounds of New Mexico, from further allegiance to the Republic of Mexico, and hereby claims them as citizens of the United States.—Those who remain quiet and peaceable will be considered as good citizens, and receive protection. Those who are found in arms, or instigating others against the United States, will be considered as traitors, and treated accordingly. Don Manual Armijo, the late Governor of this department has fled from it. The undersigned has taken possession of it without firing a gun, or spilling a drop of blood, in which he most truly rejoices, and for the present will be considered Governor of the Territory

Given at Santa Fe, the Capital of the Territory of New Mexico, this 23d day of August, 1846, and the 71st year of the Independence of the United States. By the Governor.

S. W. Kearney, Brig. Gen.

From California.—Com. Sloat, of the U. S. Pacific fleet has issued a Proclamation, dated at the Californian Monterey, announcing the Annexation of all California to the U. States. He tells the People that this will be a great benefit to them, reducing the price of all they have to buy and increasing that of their lands and products. He adds:

"Such of the inhabitants of California, whether natives or foreigners, as may not be disposed to accept the high privilege of citizenship, and to live peaceably under the free Government of the United States, will be allowed time to dispose of their property, and to remove out of the country if they chose, without restriction; or to remain in it, observing strict neutrality.

"All persons holding titles of real estate, or in quiet possession of lands under color of right, shall have their titles and rights guarantied to them. All churches, and the property they contain, in possession of the clergy of California, shall continue in the same rights and possession they now enjoy."

Princeton Seminary.—The Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) is exceedingly full this session; some houses in town which were never thus tenanted before, as well as all the rooms of the Seminary building, are taken by the students. In one class, the senior, fifty in the middle, and over forty in the junior, besides five or six resident licentiates. In all, there cannot be less than a hundred and forty-five or fifty students.

New Jersey.—A State Temperance Convention assembled in Trenton, on the 19th ult. The Visitor estimates the number present at not less than 3,000. Resolutions were adopted in favor of having the question of License or No License referred to the legal voters at a special election.

Improved Printing Press.—A hand printing press has been invented and made in London, which, with ordinary power, viz: one man at the rounce, will work off four times as fast as any other press, the steam press or power excepted, has yet been able to work. A strong hand can work from 1200 to 1500 impressions an hour. The size of the press is about that of the common double pull press.

Large Instrument.—The Cincinnati Adveriiser states that the large telescope now in the Observatory at that place, cost in Europe nine thousand and five hundred dollars. The whole sum including cost and package, carriage, &c., was $11,000, and was raised by subscription in Cincinnata. The instrument was shipped to this country in June 1844.

Retrocession of Alexandria.—The vote of the citizens of Alexandria, in conformity with the Act of Congress, was taken on the question of retrocession, on the 1st and 2nd inst. At the close, the vote stood for retrocession 763; against 222. So Alexandria city and county are now a portion of the Old Dominion.

Horse Cholera.—A fatal disease is prevailing extensively among the horses on Long Island, N. Y., called "Horse Cholera." In Queens county alone over 400 horses have already perished, and the disease has made its appearance on Staten Island. No remedy has yet been discovered.

☞ Potato flour is manufactured in England and Ireland, which contains not only the starch, but all the ingredients of the tuber, except the skin and cuticle. The potatoes are washed, sliced, dried thoroughly, ground, and sifted through a bolt or seive. 100 pounds of potatoes yield from 27 to 30 pounds of flour. This article is said to be 60 per cent. more nutritious for man or beast than superfine wheat flour. It ferments with yeast flour and makes fair bread. Experiments have been made which show that a given surface of land cultivated in potatoes will yield four times more flour from this crop than can be obtained from a crop of wheat. It is not stated how well or long potato flour will keep; probably as long as any other, for the vegitable matter is kiln-dried. By this operation all danger from rotting is removed, and this most valuable root or tuber can be preserved like wheat or beans for an indefinite period.

☞ Only two towns in the state of Rhode Island have granted licenses to sell intoxicating liquors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Sin and Folly of Scolding.

"Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil."—Psalm xxxvii, 2.

1. It is a sin against God.—It is evil and only evil, and that continually. David understood human nature, and the law of God. He says, "Fret not thyself in anywise to do evil." That is never fret or scold, for it is always a sin. If you cannot speak without fretting or scolding, keep silence.

2. It destroys affection.—No one ever did, ever can, or ever will love an habitual fretter, fault-finder or scolder. Husbands, wives, children, relatives, or domestics, have no affection for peevish, fretful fault-finders. Few tears are shed over the grave of such. Persons of high moral principles may tolerate them—may bear with them. But they cannot love them more than the sting of nettles, or the noise of mosquitoes. Many a man has been driven to the tavern and to dissipation by a peevish, fretful wife. Many a wife has been made miserable, by a peevish, fretful husband.

3. It is the bane of domestic happiness.—A fretful, peevish, complaining, fault-finding person in a family is like the continual chafing of an inflamed sore.—Wo to the man, woman, or child, who is exposed to the influence of such a temper in another. Nine-tenths of all domestic trials and unhappiness spring from this source. Mrs. D. is of this temperament. She wonders her husband is not more fond of her company. That her children give her so much trouble. That domestics do not like to work for her. That she cannot secure the good will of young people. The truth is, she is peevish and fretful. Children fear her, and do not love her. She never yet gained the affections of a young person, nor ever will, till she leaves of fretting.

4. It defeats the end of family government.—Good family government is the blending authority with affection, so as to secure respect and love. Indeed this is the great secret of managing young people. Now your fretters may inspire fear, but they always make two faults where they correct one. Scolding at a child, fretting at a child, sneering at a child, taunting a child, treating a child as though it had no feeling, inspires dread and dislike, and fosters those very dispositions, from which many of the faults of childhood proceed. Mr. G. and Mrs. F. are of this class. Their children are made to mind; but how? Mrs. F. frets at, and scolds her children. She is severe enough upon their faults. She seems to watch them in order to find fault. She sneers at them. Treats them as though they had no feelings. She seldom gives them a command without a threat and a long running, fault-finding commetary.—When she chides, it is not done in a dignified manner. She raises her voice, puts on a cross look, threatens, strikes them, pinches their ears, slaps their hands, &c. The children cry, pout, sulk, and poor Mrs. F. has to do her work over pretty often. Then she will find fault with her husband, because he does not fall in with her ways, or chime with her as chorus.

5. Fretting and scolding make hypocrites.—As a fretter never receives confidence and affection, so no one likes to tell them any thing disagreeable, and thus procure for themselves a fretting. Now, children conceal as much as they can from such persons. They cannot make up their minds to be frank and open-hearted. So husbands conceal from their wives, and wives conceal from their husbands. For a man may brave a lion, but he likes not to come in contact with nettles and mosquitoes.

6. It destroys one's peace of mind.—The more one frets the more he may. A fretter will always have enough to fret at. Especially if he or she has the bump of order and neatness largely developed.—Something will always be out of place.—There will alway be some dirt somewhere. Others will not eat right, look right, talk right; he will not do these things so as to please them. And fretters are generally so selfish as to have no regard for any one's comfort but their own.

7. It is a mark of vulgar disposition.—Some persons have so much gall in their disposition, are so selfish, that they have no regard for the feelings of others. All things must be done to please them. They make their husbands, wives, children, domestics, the conductors by which their spleen and ill nature are discharged. Wo to the children who are exposed to such influences. It makes them callous and unfeeling, and when they grow up they pursue the same course with their own children, or those intrusted to their management, and thus the race of fretters is perpetuated. Any person who is in the habit of fretting their husbands, wives, children, or domestics, shows either a bad disposition or ill-breeding. For it is generally your ignorant low-bred people that are guilty of such things.

A good Narative.

"Near Albany, Ia., at the Knobs, there lived a Germau who had married a French Catholic wife. One of his neighbors, Mr. Sirbert, was a converted man, who worked part of his time for the other German. Mr. Sirbert always asked a blessing at meals and prayed in the family. A boy of about seventeen examined narrowly the table where Mr. Sirbert sat, after prayer was over, to discover the letters and words of his prayer, and was no little surprised to find that he prayed without any written form. At family prayers the man of the house became truly awakened to a sense of his condition. While he and the missionary, brother Muth, were clearing the camp-ground, it rained a heavy shower. The missionary observed that they must improve the time; and therefore they would have a prayer meeting while it rained.—During the exercise the man was truly converted, and praised God, while his wife, the French Catholic, became truly concerned for her soul. A short while after, while she and her husband were engaged in hauling hay, and she was on the mow taking the hay away from him while he was forking it up from the floor, she became greatly distressed on account of her sins, and could no longer continue at the hay. He requested her to jump down in his arms, which she did, and both commenced praying on the hay, and there the Lord graciously renewed the woman. She prayed in French, and he in German; but their merciful God gave them an answer of peace."

Pretty.—The following is an inscription on a tomb-stone in massachusetts:

"I came in the morning—it was spring,
And I smiled;
I walked out at noon—it was summer,
And I was glad;
I sat me down at even—it was autumn,
And I was sad;
I laid me down at night—it was winter.
And I slept."

THE GOSPEL SUMMONS.

Hark! hark! a shout of joy!
The world, the world is calling;
In east and west, and north and south,
See Satan's kingdom falling.

Wake! wake! the "Church of God,"
And dissipate thy slumbers;
Shake off thy deadly apathy,
And marshal all thy numbers.

Trust, trust the faithful God;
His promise is unfailing;
The prayer of faith can pierce the skies;
Its breath is all-prevailing.

Look! look! the fields are white;
And stay thy hand no longer;
Though Satan's mighty legions fight,
The arm of God is stronger.

See! see! the Cross is raised;
The crescent droops before it;
The pagan nations feel its power,
And prostrate ranks adore it.

Joy! joy! the Saviour reigns;
See propheey fulfilling;
The hearts of stubborn Jews relent,
In God's own time made willing.

Pray! pray! then, Christians, pray;
Though faint, be yet pursuing,
And cease not, day by day, the prayer
Of lively faith renewing.

Soon, soon, your waiting eyes
Shall see the Heavens rending,
And rich and richer blessings still,
From God's bright throne descending.

THE CONTRAST.

I have sought round the verdant earth,
For unfading joy;
I have tried every source of mirth,
But all, all will cloy.
Lord, bestow on me,
Grace to set the spirit free;
Thine the praise shall be;
Mine, mine the joy.

I have wandered in mazes dark,
Of doubt and distress,
I have had not a kindling spark,
My spirit to bless;
Cheerless unbelief,
Fill'd my laboring soul with grief,
What shall give relief?
What shall give peace?

I then turned to thy Gospel, Lord,
From folly away,
I then trusted thy holy word,
That taught me to pray,
Here I found release.
Weary spirit here found rest,
Hope of endless bliss,
Eternal day.

I will praise now my Heavenly King,
I'll praise and adore;
The heart's richest tribute bring
To thee, God of power;
And in Heaven above,
Saved by thy redeeming love,
Loud the strains shall move,
Forevermore.

Delay not, delay not, O sinner draw near!
No price is demanded, the Saviour is here,
The waters of life are now flowing for thee:
Redemption is purchased, salvation is free.

DIED—On the 17th of September, sister Catharine Grubb, who arrived to the good age of 52 years, 4 months and 6 days.

She left behind a kind father, an affectionate husband, and seven dear children, to mourn their loss. The occasion was improved from John 3: 14, 15, by brother John Ulsh.

Sister Grubb embraced religion about thirteen years ago, and remained steadfast to her end. She was a worthy member of the little "Church of God," in Wildcat Valley, Perry county, Pa. That our departed sister lived an exemplary life, and like Zacharias and Elizabeth of old, "walked in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless," no one can deny. It is also said that she was peculiarly zealous and active in the church she held membership; unlike many who, we fear, are too indolent and slothful in the cause of God.

Thus, then, another soldier of the Cross, who was both a sister and a mother in the kingdom of the saints on earth, dropped the flimsy curtain of mortality, and has taken her happy exit to dwell in joys immortal;

"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And where the weary are at rest!"

On Thursday, October 1st, of Inflammatory Croup, Thomas George, infant son of A. H. and Christiana L. Baum; aged seventeen months.

He was a lovely child—
His parent's idol—a being most too pure and fair
For this infectious world of sin. And God,
Who lent the little wanderer for a time, to shed
O'er Life's tempestuous sea a bright'ning ray,
In the infinitude of holy wisdom, took him hence
Ere sin defiled, or care could sting and wound
That tender spirit!
In meek submission,
Father! let us bow at Thy command. We feel
It was Thy holy will to take our cherished boy [angels dwell,
To scenes of glory, into Thy fold above, where
And all is glorious!
Teach us, our Maker,
The lesson of Humility. Shed upon our hearts
The balm of consolation, that we may say in truth, "thy will be done!" [A. H. B.

The Church Advocate will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

A Proposition.

Any person who will send us ten new subscribers for the last six months of this volume of the Advocate, or five for the whole volume, shall have his paper gratis for one year.—This is a chance for all, but especially for preachers, as they get round to a number of places, and with a little exertion can easily raise this small number. Who will agree to make an effort and see what can be done?

Thanksgiving Day.

The Governors of Ohio and Pennsylvania have both appointed Thursday the 26th day of this month, to be observed as a day of thanksgiving. We hope that the members of the "Church of God," in both States, will not fail to observe it as such, and thus show themselves orderly and law-abiding subjects. Rom. 13: 1—6.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

The political complexion of the next session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, will be as follows:

Senate.—Whigs, nineteen; Democrats, thirteen; and Natives, one.

House of Representatives.—Whigs, fifty-nine; Democrats, forty-one.

The Pennsylvania Delegation in Congress will stand—Whigs, seventeen; Democrats, six; and Natives, one.

Mr. Power, the Whig candidate for Canal Commissioner, is elected by a majority of nearly ten thousand votes.

Dreadful Catastrophies.

Mr. Daniel Garner, his wife and four children, were burned to death in the conflagration of his house, situated about five miles above this borough, on the morning of the 17th ult.

On Friday the 16th ult., a boatman's boy was drowned at the lower lock, on the canal, in this borough.

Railroad Bridge.

This bridge is now all up except about three spans, and these, it is expected, will be put up in the course of a few weeks more.—About the first or second week of next month, it is believed, the under part or toll-bridge will be ready for crossing on; and the upper part where the cars run, some time in January next.

Harrisburg Bridge.

The Stockholders of this bridge held an adjourned meeting on the subject of rebuilding the bridge, on Saturday the 24th ult., but after a short interchange of views and opinions, they adjourned to meet again on the 16th of January next.

Arrest of Lukens.

Asahel Lukens, who was convicted of passing counterfeit money in this county, in April, 1844, and broke prison before receiving his sentence, was arrested by Capt. Wm. Watson, the keeper of the Dauphin county prison, about 11 miles from Fondulac, in the northern part of Wisconsin Territory. The officers of the prison deserve great credit for their vigilance; and have done an act of justice to themselves by removing a general suspicion of their connivance at his escape. They permit no one to visit him in his cell; and he will receive his sentence at the November term of the Court of Quarter Sessions.

East Penn'a. Eldership.

Agreeably to adjournment, this body met in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, Pa., on Wednesday the 28th ultimo.

In compliance with a resolution of the last yearly Eldership, the opening discourse was preached by the Editor of the Advocate, from the text: "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing.

Subject: The importance of a zealous ministry.

The meeting was organized by electing Elder JACOB KELLER, Speaker; and Elders E. H. Thomas and A. Swartz, Clerks.

Brother J. Lininger preached in the evening to a large and attentive congregation.

We hope to give the Journal in our next.

FUNERAL SERMON

ON

THE DEATH OF JOSEPH H. BAMBERGER, V. D. M.

Preached before the East Penn'a. Eldership, held in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, Pa., in October, 1846, in compliance with a clause in the Will of the Testator, by

JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M.

TEXT—"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." Acts 8. 2

Such is the nature and constitution of man; such are his feelings, sympathies and affections, that death seldom fails to be the harbenger of sorrow. However, there is a difference, and often a wide difference, between the effects and sensations produced by the death of different individuals. Some, now and then, die and are buried, comparatively unnoticed and unlamented, whilst the demise of others, who were useful and esteemed, never fails to make a deep impression, to excite a very general sympathy, and to cause a great and widespread lamentation. To this latter class, we properly reckon the death of a Christian minister. The truth of this we have exemplified in the case of Stephen, and certified in the text: "And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him."

Stephen, as you know, was a Christian minister in the primitive church. He was first chosen to the office of Deacon, but was afterwards promoted to a higher and better employment. Acts 6: 5, 10. But his services in the church were of short duration. In the mysterious providence of God, the enemies of the Cross of Christ were permitted, feloniously and cruelly, to assault him and to stone him to death, in the midst of his days, and in the height of his usefulness. But his devout friends gathered round him, took him up, and had him decently buried, and made great lamentation over him.

The doctrine of this text is this: That the death of a Christian minister is a just cause for lamentation.

Here allow me to pause and announce; and pardon me if, with deep emotions, I give utterance to the painful announcement, that our young, talented, pious and highly esteemed brother JOSEPH HEISTER BAMBERGER, is no more! He was, but he is not.—His earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved. He has gone the way of all flesh. We shall see him no more till we shall meet him in Heaven. He died at the residence of brother Levi Slingluff, in Martinsburg, Blair county, Pa., on the 31st of May, A. D. 1846; aged 28 years, 2 months and 16 days.

To this mournful announcement I add, refrain from weeping, dear people, if you can—cease from mourning if you can—forbear lamenting if you can; but if not, then weep, mourn and lament, for one so young and tender—so modest and unassuming—so generous and devout—so exemplary and useful—so lovely and beloved; who has taken his leave—bid us all a final adieu, and is now far, far away in the kingdom of God.

Bamberger, our brother is dead!
And gone from the evil to come;
From earth's toils and labors he's fled,
To dwell with his Saviour at home.

But, O! the deep grief that we feel,
For one so young, useful and dear:
Kind Saviour! to thee we appeal,
O! chide not, for shedding a tear.

I now proceed to note, illustrate and verify the doctrine of the text, to-wit:

That the death of a Christian minister is a just cause for lamentation.

The following considerations will, I think, clearly illustrate and verify the truth and certainty of this doctrine, viz:

1. Because, by the death of a Christian minister, the closest relations and the tenderest ties are dissolved.

2. Because, that in the death of a minister of God, the church and the world sustain a great, an irrepairable loss.

3. Because it sometimes shows that the Lord has a controversy with His people.

4. Because it is both natural and scriptural to mourn for the dead.

I. First, then, the death of a Christian minister is a just cause for lamentation, because it dissolves the closest relations and the tenderest ties.

1st. Close and tender relations are dissolved.

A Christian minister sustains the relation of a watchman. He stands by Divine appointment as a watchman on the walls and watch-towers of Zion. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem." Isa. 62: 6. Ezek. 3: 17—chap. 33. 7. "He watcheth for souls, as one that must give account. Heb 13: 17.

Again: a Christian minister sustains the relation of a shepherd. "I will set up shepherds over them who shall feed them." Jer. 23: 4. John 18: 12. As a shepherd, then, he must feed the flock of God, the sheep and lambs of His fold, and see to give them their meat in due season. Acts 20: 28. John 21: 15, 16. Matt. 24: 45.

Once more: a Christian minister sustains the tender relation of brother and father. 2 Cor. 8: 22, 23. Rev. 1: 9. 1 Cor. 4: 15. As a brother, he is to be highly esteemed; 1 Thes. 5: 13; and as a father, he is to be loved, reverenced and obeyed. 1 Tim. 5: 17. Heb. 13: 7.

II. By the death of a minister of God, close and tender ties are dissolved.

Where the aforesaid divinely instituted relations exist, there will, and must of necessity, exist also the closest and tenderest ties. Strong and tender as the ties of the nearest kinsman; yea, strong as death itself, are the ties of pure and disinterested Christian love and affections. But all these tender ties and fond relations, the cold hand of death dissolves. The deceased minister of God is no more seen and heard on the walls and watch-towers of Zion. He is no longer watching over and feeding the flock of God. He is no more visiting from house to house, conversing with and praying for the precious souls entrusted to his charge. He is no more found visiting the sick, the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and pouring in the oil of joy into their woe-fraught hearts. He is no more leading the prayer-meetings, officiating in the pulpit, and ministering at the altar of God. No: his work is done—his race is run—his battles are fought, and he is gone to receive his reward, to wear his crown, to be with Christ, to see Him as He is, and to be like Him forever. But, O, how painful and grievous is the dissolution of such tender ties, in the separation of pastor and people! No wonder, then, that there should be great lamentations, when a faithful minister of Christ is taken from his flock!

All these close relations and tender ties subsisted, in a high degree, between our deceased brother and the people of his charge. The church at Martinsburg, and the people generally, were strongly attached to him; and as love begets love, he in return was no less strongly attached to them. In a letter received from a brother in Martinsburg, shortly after his death, it was stated:

"Brother BAMBERGER was much beloved by his charge, and by all those who had become acquainted with him, as abundantly testified by the tears that were shed on the day of his funeral. He contracted many acquaintances here, and some very warm friends among those who make no profession of religion."

This short extract shows how ardently the church and the people were attached to him. One year he had pleasantly and usefully spent among them. And in about one month after he had entered on his second year's ministry among them, he fell sick and died. Thus, suddenly and unexpectedly, all these close and fond relations were dissolved, and that infant flock of God, and the whole surrounding community, thrown into deep gloom and bitter lamentations.

But as a brother minister in the "Church of God," he was no less near and dear to us all, than to them. There are perhaps few or none among us, who are more highly and universally esteemed and respected than he was. His praise, I believe, I may safely say, was in the whole church and Eldership. His unexpected death, therefore, may have cost some of us as many tears, and as much grief and lamentation, as it did the people of Martinsburg, or as the death of Stephen caused the "Church of God" at Jerusalem. But be this as it may, one thing is certain, the dissolution of such close relations and strong Christian ties, will necessarily cause grief and tears in a greater or less degree.

2d. Another consideration, which justifies a suitable expression of grief and lamentations for the death of a Christian minister is, that the church and the world sustain a great and irrepairable loss.

There is no blessing enjoyed, either by church or state, more vitally important, for time and eternity, than the Christian ministry.—What education, good government and fruitful seasons are in a temporal, the church and the Gospel ministry are in a spiritual point of view: in the absence of either the former or the latter, woe betides the people.—The history of Palestine, Asia Minor, and other eastern nations, furnish conclusive evidence of this fact. What is their condition now, compared with that of their halcyon days, under the influence of the blessing of the Gospel of the kingdom? And what is the condition of heathen lands now, when compared to Gospel lands?

Now the death of every Christian minister takes from and diminishes this blessing.—Hence, by the death of a minister, both the church and the world sustain a great and grievous loss. Stephen's death was his own unspeakable gain, yet it was the churches' incalculable loss; and hence the disciples "made great lamentations over him."

Paul adjudged it his own personal gain to die and reign with Christ; "nevertheless," said he, "to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." "And having this confidence," he added, "I know that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith." Phil, 1: 24, 25.

Nothing raises the price of a blessing more than its removal; and nothing enables us to estimate the worth of a minister more than a separation from him. Doubtless, you will all justify me in application of this remark to the case of our lamented young brother, whose life and death the present services are designed to commemorate. Death, doubtless, was his own gain: but it was our loss. For had kind Providence spared him, who can estimate the extent of the blessing he might have proved to the church, and to the community at large? Judging from the past and his rising greatness, we might justly have anticipated extensive usefulness. JOSEPH H. BAMBERGER was a young man, for whom nature and grace had done much. He had a fine head and a good heart. The former he had by nature, the latter by grace.

Among the many excellent traits that entered into the formation of his general character, there were none more prominent, and for which he was more deservedly distinguished, than meekness, prudence and fidelity.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

United Prayer.

GREAT blessings are promised in the word of God in answer to united prayer. These promises are made with a degree of solemnity and assurance which is remarkable, and worthy of the most attentive consideration. "I say to you," says our divine Lord, "that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven." This is the very basis and soul of the union of Christians in a church. It thus becomes Christ's spiritual house, an habitation of God through the spirit, from which effectual prayer may be offered up continually.

But why is it that such strong promises are made to united prayer? We are elsewhere told, "that the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much;" but the assurance of a gracious answer is not so strong as that to united prayer. We cannot suppose that a mere combination of influence can move the determination of God, as earthly rulers or legislators are moved, by a numerously signed petition. God is an absolute Ruler, under no necessity nor inducement to comply with the wishes of His subjects, any further than in the exercise of His infinite wisdom and benevolence, he sees proper to do so. Should thousands or millions join, therefore, in an improper request, it would be utterly disregarded.

There must be something peculiarly pleasing to God in this unity of desire—this oneness of soul in prayer—something which stamps it with qualities of peculiar excellence. Those qualities may not be fully discoverable by us, while yet we may be persuaded of their reality. That they are so highly prized—that they are endowed with such surprising efficacy, sufficiently proves this. But there is reason to fear that it is rarely attained, and rarely sought after.—Friendship the most close, attachments the most strong, are often found between different individuals; but unity of spirit in prayer, is a rare plant of earthly growth; yet we may be assured that the hindrances to the offering up of united prayer, may be discovered and removed. Have parents long prayed for the conversion of their children? Have the members of the church implored the presence of the spirit, and the conversion of many sinners? And has the blessing been withheld? Consider whether these prayers have not been tainted with selfishness? or whether they have been followed up by a consistent course of conduct? United prayer is something more than a consert of petitions, or a combination of requests, or a fruit of sympathy. The most surprising answer to united prayer is recorded in the second chapter of the Acts of the apostles: "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication with the women, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren. And when the day of Penticost had fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Then followed the most wonderful display of the power and grace of God ever witnessed on earth. When Peter was in prison, prayer was made without ceasing by the CHURCH unto God for him; and an angel came to deliver him. When Paul and Silas were in prison, they prayed and sung praises to God. In such a state of mind, what was so likely to be the burden of their prayers as the conversion of the jailor and his family?

Is it not a reasonable and a scriptural conclusion, that where a church is not in prosperity—where sinners are not converted—where the Word does not take hold of the hearers, there is not united prayer? The essential quality which renders prayer acceptable and prevalent with God, is wanting.—Christian professor, what is the cause of this? Is your heart in such a state that you cannot fully unite in prayer to God with your brethren and sisters? There may be something here of more importance than you are aware of. You may be the very ACHAN who hinders the armies of the living God from going forward to victory and to glory. Beware, then, that you quench not the spirit by preventing unity of spirit in prayer. O, if Christians prayed more in the unity of the spirit, what interesting meetings of all kinds there would be. What revivals of religion we should have—how frequent, numerous and pure!—What a multitude of souls would be converted! What joyful tidings we should hear (at our approaching Eldership) from our different stations and circuits, and even from our missionary brethren! O, what times we should have! The Millenium year would then soon heave in view.

And because the Holy Spirit is the spirit of truth, the offering of united prayer for the spirit would do more to put down error, than all other means which can be resorted to. The preachers of truth cannot put it down without the aid of the spirit of truth. Let all then who read resolve, both church members and ministers, to pray more in unity of spirit. More anon.

The Soul's Mortality Disproved.

As the doctrine of the soul's mortality, or that of soul and body sleeping in the grave together, is believed by some persons in this section of country, and is a very dreary and uncomfortable one; and likewise is walking hand in hand with the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, and I believe is proving more or less injurious to many, it may not be amiss to give the readers of the ADVOCATE a few passages of scripture to prove the falsity of this doctrine. The following, out of many, may suffice: Genesis 2: 7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thus was man created in possession of a living soul. Again, we read in 1 Kings 17: 21, 22: "And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord and said, O, Lord, my God, I pray thee let this child's soul come into him again, and the Lord heard the voice of Elijah, and the soul of the child came into him again." The body in this case was dead, and the soul gone out of it, and by prayer it was brought back into the body. Again, we read in Micah 6: 7: "Will the Lord be pleased with thousand of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" Again, we read in Luke 12: 20: "But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?" Again, 2 Cor. 5: 6: "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord." Again, chap 22: 2: "I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth,) such a one caught up to the third heaven." Again, Phil. 1: 23, 24: "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better." Again, in Rev. 6: 9, 10: "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth." Now the soul cannot be dead or sleeping in the grave with the body, and at the same time be still crying under the altar for vengeance on their enemys. Again, Gal. 27: 8: "For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?" Mark, if God take his soul from his body, then soul and body cannot both be mortal.

I only drop these few passages for the purpose of showing the fallacy of this doctrine, and of preventing its progress among the unwary, and to rid the minds of true believers of the drearysome thought, that soul and body must so long lie slumbering in a state of unconsciousness; and likewise to prevent the wicked from seeking security in the thought that they shall slumber, soul and body, in the grave; and have no punishment save in one stroke of annihilation, when Gabriel's loud trump shall wake the slumbering dead.

Repentance.

The principles of the holy religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, should be found dwelling richly in the heart of every one who has arrived at the years of discretion. Without the heart is changed from nature to grace, from a state of rebellion against the God of Heaven, to a scriptural submission to the mandates of the King of kings, and the Lord of lords, the mansions of unfading Glory has no place for such an unholy temple to dwell in. The new birth, or a change of heart, is indispensably necessary to a title to that inheritance which is incorruptibly, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Our Lord's language to Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, is exceedingly plain and comprehensive on this subject. He tells this great man of the Pharisees, John 35: 5: "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." And further, He (our divine Lord) instructs him and says: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." "Marvel not that I said to thee, ye must be born again." Although Nicodemus was a master in Israel, yet he was a total stranger to the new birth. This is evident from his reply to the Lord, in saying, "How can these things be?"

It is truly lamentable, that in the light of the nineteenth century, in the full blaze of Gospel light and truth, there are those who sway the sceptre of Kingdoms and Empires, and have millions of subjects under their command, who are as ignorant and have as little knowledge of a change of heart or the new birth, as had this towering man of the Pharisees.—O, that He, whose reign is from the rivers even unto the ends of the earth—whose voice is as thunder, and as the sound of many waters—who has created all things, whether they be things visible or invisible, thrones or dominions, principalities or powers—in whose hands are the issues of life and death, would, through His unbounded mercy and wonderful condescension, discover to the hearts of the children of men the things that belong to their eternal peace! O, that the children of the most high God, would daily petition the God of our fathers to remember a God-forgetting world in infinite compassion!

It is heart-cheering and soul-reviving to the believer in Jesus, to hear that God, in many places, is most graciously reviving His blessed work, sinners are coming to Jesus, the only refuge set before them in the Gospel, and through repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, are made the happy subjects of saving grace.

Although man apostatized from his original purity, and strayed away from the Shepherd and Bishop of his soul, yet the Lord loved him and provided a way of redemption for him, that through the meritorious atonement of our Lord Jesus, he could be clensed from his moral pollution, transgressions and sin, and be made a child of God, and an heir to the kingdom of eternal felicity. O, what a distinguished and heavenly mercy is this to poor sinful fallen man! "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already." And why? Because he hath not believed in the only begotten Son of God.

The religion of our Lord Jesus is emphatically declared to be the one thing needful in the lively oracles of divine truth. Its possession has not only the promise of the life which now is, but also of that which is to come.—The love of God richly shed abroad in the soul, enables the Christian to bear the common perplexities of life, with becoming resignation to the will of his Heavenly Father.—When tempestuous storms arise, and the the Christian is tossed about on the rolling billows of a troublesome world, the language of his pious soul is not, "my will be done, but thine, O, Lord." He calmly exclaims, "All things shall work together for his good." And when the scenes of earth, and every thing of a sublinary nature are about to close, and close forever; when he shall draw nigh to the confines of another world, the shouts of triumph are heard from his dying lips.—He breaks forth with all the energy of his soul and cries: "I am now ready to be offered up, and the time of my departure is at hand: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not unto me only, but unto them also that love His appearing."—Thanks be to God when the Lord of life and glory shall make His second appearing on the earth: all those who have endured faithful to the end, shall be caught up to meet Him in the air, and so ever be with Him. Let us look for the "hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the Heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the clements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new Heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, secing that we look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of Him in peace without spot and blameless."

The more I think, read, speak and write on this Heaven-born institution, the more I feel and delight thus to dwell on it. It is natural, that the more attention we pay to any good cause, the more we become interested in it. The grand reasons why so many take no interest in the advancement of these blessed institutions, scattered here and there throughout the world, is because they pay no attention to them. If those persons who are so well contented by sitting down and folding their arms, as though there was nothing for them to do, would wake up to their duty and begin to read, think, &c., on these subjects, they would very soon become a glowing interest in them. Just so it is with regard to the institution of the Sabbath-school. I have been told by many who are now strong advocates of Sabbath-schools, that they can well recollect the time when they felt little or no interest in these schools, until they began to pay some attention to them, by becoming teachers or otherwise. I was once told by a certain person, that he never knew what a Sabbath-school was until he became a teacher. "Now," says he, "I feel a deep interest in the welfare of our school, which I did not before I engaged in it." So, then, if you would wish to become interested in this, as well as in any other institution, you must first pay some attention to it, in some shape or form.

But if you would become peculiarly interested in any one institution, begin to read about the rise of that institution, and the progress it made since in operation; and if you find it owes its origin to such persons who had in view the well-being of all whom it may concern, and that more or less good attends it since in operation, then certainly if you have not "a heart of stone," you cannot help but become interested in said institution. And so long as you do not pursue this course, you need not expect to beget a peculiar interest in any good cause. Ignorance in this matter accounts for the disinterestedness and inactivity of thousands, who have embarked in the different civil, moral and religious institutions in the world. They are grovelling in the dark; and being blind to almost every thing connected with the cause they have espoused or engaged in, they know not the good they might do by being prompt, active and energetic.

Now you that are in the habit of saying, when asked to become Sabbath-school teachers, "I don't see no use in it—I don't feel no interest in your Sabbath-schools," please acquaint yourselves with the rise and progress of this institution; whether or not it owes its origin to good and pious men, and whether or not its progress, thus far, has had a salutary effect upon those that have been connected with it. If, by a thorough examination of this subject, you find Messrs. Wesley, Rakes and others, who, we have reason to believe, were Christians, gave rise to this institution, and that abundant success hitherto crowned the efforts that have been made in carrying it forward, then, I would ask, how can you turn off those teachers who so earnestly solicit you to become fellow-teachers with them, by saying: "I don't see no use in it—I feel no interest in your Sunday-school?"

A LOVER OF SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

Objections to Moral Reform and Benevolent Institutions Considered.

It has been objected to these institutions that they are made a substitute for religion, that the members of such institutions neglect the ordinances of religion, and the means it provides to promote man's moral and spiritual improvement, and to attend to the affairs of these associations.

What may be the views, feelings and practices even of some among us, we cannot tell. We can only say, as a matter of fact, that from a somewhat extensive acquaintance with these institutions, and with men of all classes, we never yet met with a single individual belonging to any of these institutions, who expressed any such views of this matter. We can, moreover, say that the institutions themselves, whatever some unwise members may do, do not claim to be a substitute for religion, or any of its means of moral and religious improvement and elevation; nor do they require their members to neglect any of these, to attend to said institutions.

While good institutions claim for themselves a religious character, found their principles in religion, draws them from it, and invokes its sanction and influences to enforce those principles, it aims not to be a substitute for the church, or any of the means of grace afforded by the religious institutions of the country. It claims for itself only to be an humble hand-maid of religious institutions, to aid in carrying out and securing the practical application of some of the great aims of religion, in a degree which has not been attained by the Christian church, and answers some great purpose in the practical application of Christian principles, which the church, as an organization, cannot attain in the present condition of the world, much as she may desire and strive to secure them.

For example, we suppose no man, with the New Testament open before him, will deny that it is the duty of the church to provide for the relief of its members, when suffering from sickness, poverty and want. And this may and ought to be done by each individual church towards its own members with perfect safety, when within its own reach. This is a perfectly feasible matter, when thus restricted.—Though we regret to say it is a matter rarely thought of in any church, in this part of Christendom, at the present time. But the church, from the very nature of its organization, cannot guarantee to its members, even if she was ever so much disposed, friendly aid and relief in poverty, sickness and distress, by virtue of their membership, wherever they might find brothers, however remote their country or uninteligible their speech to each other: should churches accumulate the necessary funds, and attempt such an arrangement, the experiment could not but fail; for they would be open and exposed to endless imposition, from all the villians in the land, beyond their ability to detect them, and before they were aware they would find themselves the sustainers of all the unprincipled men who wander over the earth: certificates and writings would afford no protection, because they can be forged or obtained by stealth. They could be protected only by having the means of going behind these writings, and determining whether the holder obtained them in a lawful manner. This they cannot have from the very nature of the organization.

Again it has been said, that it is not desirable, nor is it consistent with the spirit of Christianity, to confine the bestowment of relief upon the needy and suffering, to any one class, sect or association of men, that it should be bestowed upon all who are suffering without regard to their relations and connections.

The correctness of this theory is admitted as a general principle; and practically, it is perfectly feasible in our individual action, and we are bound to act upon it as individuals, so far as our means will allow. But there are very few of us who have the means to render aid and relief to the poor, sick and distressed around us, in any great degree. Hence the propriety and necessity of associated benevolence, which, like individuals, must be limited in its means, and therefore limited in its objects, or fail of its ends. It would hardly be fair that a mere fraction of the community, and those perhaps men of moderate means, should be required to take upon themselves the relief, maintenance and support of all the poor, sick and distressed in society; or be denied the privilege of doing anything in this way, if so disposed without jeopardising their Christian characters. If any number of men are willing to relieve the community of all trouble and expence, in providing for and taking care of the poor, sick and distressed of their own number, while they do their part in common with their fellow-citizens, for the relief and maintenance of others, we think no one has any reason to complain, nor is it any thing inconsistent with the most enlarged Christain benevolence; for in doing thus much, they do not relieve themselves, nor do they claim to be relieved thereby from a single obligation as individuals, or as members of the social compact. All this they voluntarily assume in addition to what is demanded of other people. They do all that others do, and this in addition—and to denounce this as unchristain and repugnent to the spirit of the Gospel, is quite absurd. To maintain that it would be unchristain to rescue one individual of a ship's crew from a watery grave, while the others were left simply because there were no adequate means to relieve them all without relief to drown, would be folly in the extreme. Is it not better that one should be saved than that all should perish!

An association with limited means cannot relieve all the distressed they can find, but by restricting the object to its own members it may relieve a vast amount of distress, cause many abodes of poverty to smile, ease many a couch of pain, and cheer many a widow's and orphan's heart. Which would be the most Christain, to do this little, or because it cannot do every thing, do nothing! Such a question I need not answer.

Such, then, is the character of benevolent institutions. They claim not to be a substitute for religion, nor to do all that is to be done. They claim only in their own way to do what they can for the mitigation of human suffering, the relief of human misery, the promotion of human virtue, goodness and happiness, and in a humble way to contribute something towards a higher practical realization of the great aims and ends contemplated by religion in general, and Christianity in particular.

The great aims and ends of benevolent societies are strictly and rigidly practical. Their aim is, by an extended combination among the virtuous and good, to do all that limited means can accomplish. They combine together for the accumulation of funds, whereby they may enlarge the circle of friendship, extend it to strangers by virtue of this combination, with the assurance which it affords, that they shall not misplace it or be imposed upon, to which we are so greatly liable in this deceptive world: and receiving the means of relief from one another, when in distress, and thus secure a higher realization of the brotherhood of man, so emphatically taught by Christianity. Without some such arrangement by which we can be assured of the worthiness of a man's character, in the present condition of the world, we must ever receive strangers with caution, if not distrust, and our means must be inadequate to the relief of the wants and sufferings of those we are satisfied are worthy of our aid. Of this fact every benevolent man has had abundant experience, if he has been at all conversant with the world around him. But with the assurances which these benevolent associations give, as to the character of its members and the funds it provides, we can as safely receive and confide in a stranger, as a personal friend without the fear of being betrayed, if the members are true to the trust reposed in them, and have the means of granting relief to the suffering members to the fullest extent.

We know, indeed, that Christianity is perfectly competent to secure all these results; and that when all the world and every human soul shall become sincere, devout and practical Christains in the highest and best sense of that word, that the necessity for those institutions will pass away. All their great aims and objects will be secured by the spontaneous actions of human hearts and hands, without any special organization, to secure their purposes. In such an event, decievers, imposters and knaves, with prisons, courts, and all the pharapernalia for detection, conviction and punishment of criminals, would disappear from society, and man would become the universal friend of man, and such a tenderness and interest would pervade and fill all hearts toward their kind, that the cry of suffering and want would hardly be heard, before the whole community would be gathered around the sufferer, and every hand and every purse be open to render all the aid in their power. But as long as the world is as it is, and there are knaves and villains prowling through the land, and walking up and down in the earth, like the spirit of evil, seeking whom they may decieve and destroy, and so little of a practical realization of the demands of Christianity in relation to the needy and suffering; such institutions are needful to secure an increased realization of the practical demands of true Christain friendship, and afford the means safely to answer those demands. In this they aim not to do the work of the church, to usurp its place, nor in any way infringe on its rights and prerogatives: they only ask to be left to contribute an humble share, in common with others, in their own way, to human good and human happiness, and they will willingly and joyfully bring all their trophies and lay them at the foot of the Cross, and make an offering, humble though it may be, to the church universal.

Correspondence---No. 3,

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

12.—S. I believe that the kingdom of God has not yet commenced here on earth, nor even will commence till Christ will come and reign as King in His kingdom with His people. Dan. 2: 44—chap. 7: 13, 14.

And whenever we read concerning the kingdom of God, it has reference to the everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ here on earth. And it nowhere has reference to a kingdom of God in the heart; and I would be glad to see proof that there is such a thing as a kingdom of God in the heart.

B. B. T. The kingdom of God is represented under five different appelations, and I shall treat of them separately. By the grace and assistance of God, I will try to establish the position I have here taken. If I cannot prove it from the New Testament, I of course ought to abandon the idea; but if it can be established by the immutable word of God, then you and all men are in duty bound to embrace it.

First.—By the kingdom of God, we are to understand the Gospel. The Gospel is designed to teach man that he has departed from God, and how he may return to God; and therefore Christ teaches, "that if any one heareth the word of the kingdom, (that is, the Gospel of salvation) and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one (the devil) and catches away that which was sown in his heart." Matt. 13: 19. And St. Luke adds: "Lest they should believe and be saved." In the 33d verse, the kingdom of God is likened to leaven, which, when put into meal, will leaven the whole: so likewise the Gospel does the Gospel—those who are brought under its influence. In the 47th verse, it is compared to a net cast in the sea to gather fish, as the net is the means by which fish are taken; so the Gospel is the grand means by which men are brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, for St. Paul says, "Faith comes by hearing," &c. In Matt. 16: 19, Christ said to Peter: "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." And I presume you will not contend with the Roman Catholics, that all power was given to Peter; and we are not to infer from this, that Peter had the key to the everlasting kingdom; for John, in the Revelation, writes thus: "And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, write; these things saith He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David, He that openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth." The word key, here is in the singular number, and of course means one. But where Christ addresses Peter, He saith 'keys,' which is in the plural, and signifies more than one. Yet we are not to infer that the keys here spoken of, are the keys of the church; for the church has but one door, and there would be no necessity of two keys for one door. But Peter had keys committed to him, which were the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, which represent the Gospel. Peter preached the Gospel of Christ for the first time on the day of Penticost to the Jews. What did Peter preach? Why he preached Christ, that He died and rose again, and that there was salvation in none other. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name given under Heaven whereby we can be saved." So Peter, on the day of Penticost, opened the door of salvation to the Jews. Peter likewise preached the first Gospel sermon to the Gentiles, at the house of Cornelius, and so opened the door of salvation to the Gentiles. "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Matt. 21: 43. The Jews had the first immunities and privileges of the Gospel; but when they refused to obey, it was taken from them. "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo! we turn to the Gentiles." Acts 13: 46. "But wo to you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." The chief and main object of the Jews was to hinder men from believing in Christ and embracing His Gospel, and they prided themselves that none of their rulers believed on Christ; but this people who knoweth not the law, are cursed." John 7: 48, 49. "These words spoke his parents, because they feared the Jews; for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue." John 9: 22. "Nevertheless, among the chief rulers, also, many believed on Him, but because of the Pharisees, they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue." John 12: 22.—Hence, in this way, they shut up the kingdom of God in doing all that was in their power to prevent men from believing in Christ and embracing His Gospel. Preaching the kingdom of God, implies the glad tidings of salvation; for when Christ says, "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent." Luke 4: 43.

Now let us examine what Christ was preaching that implied the kingdom of God: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the GOSPEL to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." "And it came to pass afterward, that He went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." &c.

Many more passages might be adduced to prove, that by the kingdom of God we are to understand the Gospel. But let these suffice for the present.

Secondly.—The kingdom of God is used to signify GRACE in the heart. Proof: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6: 33. Luke, 12: 31. Christ teaches His disciples in the preceding part of the chapter, "to take no thought of eating or drinking, or what they shall put on," and refers them to the fowls and lillies, and informs them that their heavenly Father knoweth that they have need of all those things.—But to seek the kingdom of God first, then all these things should be added.

We believe Christ did nowhere require of His disciples to seek for something they could not find; and if the kingdom of God here spoken of, does not signify grace in the heart, no one has ever found it. And shall we be without care about eating or drinking, or wearing apparel, till Christ comes, and we receive the kingdom! No! You nor I, nor any person else, would be without care for clothing, or eating and drinking, till Christ comes; for then we need not care for clothing or eating and drinking. Christ addressed His disciples in another place when speaking in reference to children, saying: "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall not enter therein." Mark 10: 15. From this passage it is evident that the kingdom of God can be received within. And Christ said: "The kingdom of God is within you." Luke, 17: 21.

But there is an objection made here by some, because Christ addressed the Pharisees, and they could not have the kingdom of God within them, being the vilest opposers of Christ and His Gospel. We will see whether the objection cannot be removed: "When John the Baptist came into the wilderness of Judea preaching, then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were babtized of him in Jordan confessing their sins. But when the Pharisees and Sadducees came, he called them a generation of vipers, and exhorts them to bring forth fruits meet for repentance," &c. "I indeed," said he, "baptize you with water unto repentance;" but Christ said, (Luke, 7: 30) that John did not baptize them, because they rejected the counsel of God; that is, they did not comply with the conditions prescribed, viz: bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

If we just look at the word of Christ, the kingdom of God is within you, and compare it with the words of John the baptist. "I indeed baptize you with water," and examine it carefully, we will find that Christ did not intend to convey the idea that the Pharisees could have the kingdom of God within them in their unregenerate state. Now mark! When Christ was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, (it appears they believed like you do that there would be no kingdom of God till the reign of Christ on earth) He answered them and said: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation;" that is to say, you will not see it with your natural eyes; and you have often seen the wicked in times of revivals standing and looking as if they were going to see spiritual things with their natural eyes. But Christ informed Nicodemus, one of the rulers of the Jews, that unless he be born again, he could not see the kingdom of God. It cometh not with observation, and cannot be seen with natural eyes; but it can be realized and felt in the heart.—In Matt. 13: 44, it is compared to treasure hid in a field; which, said the Saviour. "when a man found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth that field." And further, "the kingdom of heaven is like to a merchant-man seeking goodly pearls, who, when he hath found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it." Here are two instances of seeking and finding, and here the kingdom is compared to grace in the heart, or religion. So when the mourner comes to Jesus and finds this treasure, one pearl of great price, he is willing to give up all for Christ; and, indeed, Christ said, "that unless you forsake all and follow me, ye cannot be my disciples." Christ also said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come and make our abode with him." John 14: 23. Now if we have Father and Son, we have all. For the Psalmist said: "Lord, if I have thee, what care I for heaven and earth." And the apostle Paul said: "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." If, then, we are in possession of all this, having Father and Son dwelling in us; and righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, we need not be concerned when Christ will come, for when He comes we can meet Him with joy, and hail His coming to gather His people home.

Thirdly.—The kingdom of God is used to denote the church. Proof: "The Son of Man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." And if these things shall be gathered out of the kingdom, the kingdom must exist, for there can be nothing in a thing that does not exist itself.

"For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers in his vineyard." Matt. 20: 1. The object in hireing laborers in in a vineyard is for the tilling of it, and rendering the vines productive; and this cannot have reference to the everlasting kingdom after Christ comes, for then there will be no tilling and dressing of vines. The kingdom, then, here mentioned, is the church, the vines the members of the church, and the laborers Christs servants.—Again, God hath set some in the church—first, apostles; secondly, prophets; and, thirdly, teachers," &c., 1 Cor. 12: 28. "And He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints," &c., Eph. 4: 11, 12. Now there can be no likeness or analogy between a natural vineyard and the everlasting kingdom of God; for in a natural vineyard there is labour to be performed, namely, tilling it and dressing the vines; and if it is not analagous to the everlasting kingdom, it must have reference to the church.

Again: it is likened to ten virgins, who took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom, and five of them were wise and five were foolish. Matt. 25: 1, 2. This cannot have reference to the everlasting kingdom, for there will be no foolish virgins then. I will produce two more passages—one from Paul, the other from John, which prove beyond contradiction, that the kingdom of God represented the church.

"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son." Col. 1: 13. "I John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Fourthly.—The kingdom of God denotes Heaven. "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto His heavenly kingdom," &c., 2 Tim. 4: 18. These are some of the last word's of Paul in addressing Timothy how he should do as concerning himself and his fellow-men, and informed him of his trials, and that the Lord delivered him out of them all, and the time of his departure was at hand; seeing that he was now about leaving the church militant below, where he had to encounter trials and tribulations, to join the church triumphant above, there to rest from his labors.

Fifthly.—The phrase, also, denotes the everlasting kingdom.

As this article has taken up more space already than what I intended when I commenced, I shall defer writing on the fifth, namely, the everlasting kingdom, till another time.

ALETHES.

The Farmer and Mechanic—the basis of our country's prosperity.

Letter from Brother John Gillespie.

New Stanton, Westmoreland co., Oct. 5, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I take my pen in hand to drop a few lines to you to acknowledge the receipt of the Church Advocate, which is a welcome organ of the church to me. I am happy to inform you that I saw brother Hickernell last week, and have made arrangements with him to have my one dollar and twenty-five cents forwarded to you. I shall not drop a murmuring word for stopping my paper; for you are highly justifiable in doing what you said you would. But I would request you now to send on my paper, for it is a welcome advocate to me. I live some four or five miles distant from the "Church of God" and my dear brethren, and have not the privilege of meeting with them as often as I would like; yet I rejoice that I have Christ and the apostles with me in this section of country, where opposition assails me on every hand, and where the plain practical truths of God's word are opposed. I stand alone here to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints; and I bless the name of God, that I have not been without His presence in endeavoring to withstand the opposition of sects and sinners. I find their arguments to maintain their positions are so feeble, and their excuses for not doing the things commanded them so vain and futile, that instead of falling in with their errors and their supposed beautiful logical reasoning, it has a tendency to confirm my faith in the truths of God's word, as well as the propriety of earnestly contending for and following after these things.

Surely the Church Advocate is needed in this place. I do not merely take it for my own satisfaction, but I lend it out to my neighbors that they may profit by reading it. Some are willing to read, others do not seem to care anything about it. Still, however, I am willing to offer it to them. I trust that we shall yet see better days in New Stanton and its vicinity. I do believe the truth will and must prevail; for it is mighty, and sectarianism and human inventions must fall before it, as Dagon of old, before the ark of the God of Israel.

Brother Harn preached in this place on last Wednesday evening, upon the antiquity, origin, &c., of the "Church of God," and it stirred up quite a hornet's nest, if you will allow me the expression. There was quite a swarming about the it next day, and misrepresenting of ideas that had been offered in proof of the truths advanced. It appears the truth made some rents in some of their religious habits that they did not like very well. Some said it was the wrong way for a stranger to introduce himself, to commence to preach on controverted points. Strange, that the name "Church of God" should be a controverted point.—And stranger still, that Christians preferred a human title in preference to a scriptural one. O, consistency whither hast thou fled!

But I must close, as my communication perhaps is lengthy enough. May the Lord of Zion bless the "Church of God" everywhere, and enable them to arise with holy boldness, and stand in defence of her most royal right, and enjoy her most Heavenly immunity and ever sacred privileges, is the sincere prayer of yours, in the bonds of Christian affection and fellowship,

JOHN GILLESPIE.

Letter from Bishop Emanuel Logue.

Mount Pleasant, Henry co., Iowa, Oct. 8, 1846.

Brother J. Winebrenner:—

Yours of the 16th of September is now before me. I had well nigh concluded that my wants would be treated with silent contempt; but I am glad to hear that some of the friends have a little concern for me and the cause in this new country. Please send me some of that money as soon as possible. The fifty dollars will no more than satisfy our needs this fall and winter.

If the brethren in the East did but know and feel my situation, they would not hesitate to raise the fifty dollars I have asked for, and your book account besides. But as brother John Bricker informed me that the general impression is, that I am more favorably situated than what I realy am. If such an impression has prevented them from doing any thing, I hope this note may undeceive them.

I have had but one revival in this country, and that was last winter, in the village of Trenton, situated eight miles north-west of Mount Pleasant, in the heart of one of the best settlements in the country. I organized a church of thirteen members, part of which are very promising, and others rather weak. Here is a large territory to operate upon; and in the bounds of my labors and acquaintance, there is room and labor enough for two or three preachers, could they be supported. I am still living in hopes that, through the blessing of God and your charity, my hands will be untied, when I will be able to renew and double my efforts.

As it regards the Advocate, I can assure you there are but few men more anxious to see it sustained than what your humble servant is; but I have not succeeded in procuring any subscribers. I will make another effort shortly, and I think I will send you a few names in the course of a couple of weeks.

Mrs. Logue is quite poorly at present with a fever. Pray that the Lord may spare her. My health is good. Pray for us. Please send me twenty dollars of that money as soon as possible. We are needy.

Yours, in love,

EMANUEL LOGUE.

Letter on the Death of Joseph and Barbara Maish.

Fairview, York co., Sept. 30, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I take my pen in hand to inform you and the readers of the Advocate, of the sudden and unexpected death of our aged and highly esteemed father and mother Maish. Both these old disciples were swept away in the short space of ten days, by the ravages of the monster, Death. While meditating upon these solemn events, we can but adopt the language of Job and exclaim: "The Lord taketh away; who can hinder Him? who can stay His arm? who can say, What doest thou?"

On the 15th of the present month, sister Barbara Maish took a walk into the garden, apparently in good health, and on her return to the house, she stepped on the porch and took her seat, conversed freely and sensibly with her daughter sister Hawk; but she had scarcely left her until she heard her struggling in the pangs of death, and in ten minutes after fell asleep in the Lord. Her age was seventy-four years, four months and eight days. The day following, she was followed to the grave by a large concourse of people, who paid the last tribute of respect to her. The audience was addressed by brothers BOWMAN and MAXWELL.

On the 25th of the same month, brother JOSEPH MAISH, in the evening after supper, left home in good health to go out on business, with a design of returning to attend a meeting which I commenced that evening in the neighborhood. But as he stayed over the time, (a thing that he was not in the habit of doing) his friends became uneasy and went in pursuit of him, and found him a corps, lying on his back, within three quarters of a mile from his residence. A Corroner's inquest was held over him, and their verdict was that he died of a paraletick stroke, without a struggle. Thus has fallen a mighty one in Israel. His age was seventy-six years and twenty-four days. On Sabbath his remains were followed to the grave by a very large concourse of people, and a discourse delivered on the occasion by brothers SWARTZ and MAXWELL.

Brother JOSEPH and sister BARBARA MAISH were hopefully converted to God more than fifty years ago, and lived and died exemplary members of the "Church of God." During life they were looked upon as examples of piety, and their pattern as worthy of imitation by all who profess Christianity. Brother MAISH's warning voice was often heard in the congregation of the Lord in exhortation, warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. He was a man that always stood firm and undinching for the truth—God's revealed and soul-redeeming truth, which alone can free us in the day of final accounts. While schismatic teachers were leading many estray and deceiving the weak, he stood firm upon the Bible platform.

Brother MAISH felt the responsibility of a father resting upon him, and the obligations he was under to teach his family the true principles of religion. He was the father of fourteen children, which every morning and evening he would call around the family altar, and first read a chapter in the Bible, then explain it to them, and exhort them like David of old, to know the God of their fathers, and to worship Him with a sincere heart and a willing mind. And after the exhortation he would engage in fervent prayer to Almighty God for the welfare of his family. The religious impressions that he made upon the minds of his children in early life, resulted in the conviction and conversion of his whole family, which consisted, as remarked, of fourteen children—eight of whom have since died in the triumphs of faith, and gone home to celebrate eternal praise. The six still living are happy in a Saviour's love, and on the way to Heaven. O, that parents would follow this pious and holy man's example! How many of the young that are travelling down to fire and pain, might, by such means, be converted and brought to travel home to God. But, alas! it is not so.

In the death of father and mother MAISH, the "Church of God" has lost two worthy members; the preachers have lost a home, and the surviving children have lost affectionate parents. They were beloved and esteemed by all who knew them. But they are no more! They are gone home to reap the rewards of their labor in the kingdom of bliss. May the Lord help us to follow them as they followed Christ, so that when this earthly house of our tabernacle is dissolved, and we go down through the valley and shadow of death, we may meet them in the realms of bliss, and mingle our voices again with their's, in singing the songs of eternal redemption, to Him that loved us and cleansed us from our sins in His own blood.

Yours, fraternally,

JOSIAH H. HURLEY.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Awful Murders in Lancaster.—A slip from the Union and Tribune states that on Saturday, a man named JOHN HAGERTY, living in South Queen street, in Lancaster city, committed a series of murders unparralleled in the annals of our Commonwealth! Between 9 and 10 o'clock, after shooting a horse in the street near his door, he went into the gunsmith shop—near his own residence—of Mr. MELCHOIR FORDNEY, an old and highly esteemed man; what took place, we could not ascertain, but a boy, a son of Mr. FORDNEY, gave the alarm that his father, mother and sister had been murdered by HAGERTY! On going into the room we witnessed one of the most horrid spectacles imaginable. Just inside of the front door of the shop lay the old man, with his brains battered out! At his side, but with her head towards the back door, lay the body of his wife, her brains also battered out; and near her, lay her child, four or five years old, with its skull broken and the brains oozing therefrom!

FORDNEY and his wife, it seemed, had been killed instantly. The little boy stated, in substance, that HAGERTY got at his father with an axe, and while he was killing him, his mother ran in to interfere, when he turned upon her and killed her, and then struck the child on the head with the axe! The child only lived a few hours.

Sales of Public Lands.—We observe by several advertisements by the commissioner of the general land office, that the following additional sales of the public lands have been ordered by the President, being the reserved mineral land in the states of Illinois and Arkansas, and in the territories of Wisconsin and Iowa:—At Batesville, Arkansas, on the 15th of March next; at Fayettville, Arkansas, the 22d of March; at Dubuque, Iowa, on the 8th of March; at Dixon, Illinois, on the 5th of April next; at Shawneetown, Illinois, on the 19th of April. These are valuable mineral lands, believed to abound in valuable ores, and the sales will present to enterprising settlers opportunities to purchase some of the best lands yet brought into market.

The Mexican War.—It appears that the Government paper now assumes the ground that the entire mode of conducting the Mexican war, on the part of our troops, is to be changed, and "war made to support war," upon the principle upon which Napoleon conducted his European wars of conquest. This contrast strongly with the proclamation issued by Gen. TAYLOR under the direction of his government when first invading Mexico.

The Largest City in the World.—Sou Tchou is the largest city in the interior of China, the largest silk market in that vast empire. To Europeans it has been unknown since 1718, when Romish missionaries were driven out. The Paris correspondent of the National Intelligencer says, that M. HEDDE, completely disguised as a Chinese trader, obtained ingress to Sou Tchou. M. HEDDE says its population is five millions, and that within a radius of four leagues around, there is a population of ten millions. Pekin has four millions. M. HEDDE brought to Paris many samples of the domestic silks of China, of all colors and all prices. One of them, exceedingly fine, is called the Flower of the Gardens. It comes from the interior, and until now has not been seen in France.

The Magnetic Telegraph.—The arrangements for extending the Telegraph line to New Orleans has been completed, and in a few months the communication from this this city will be opened. It extends from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnatti, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, Memphis, Vicksburg and Natchez to New Orleans. This line will comprise two companies, one extending from Philidelphia to St. Louis, and the other formed by Mr. BRAVO, from St. Louis to New Orleans.

A Boston Notion.—Petitions are in circulation in Boston praying the Legislature to exempt those who do not make, vend, use, or derive a profit from the sale of intoxicating drinks, from that portion of the taxes which is applied to repair the mischiefs of such drinks. That's right; let those who manufacture or deal in intoxicating liquors bear the responsibility that belongs to their occupation, instead of being permitted to reap all the benefits, and tax the whole community for the damages. The loss should be borne by those who share the profits of the trade. Is not the principle obviously just?

Wheat in Ohio.—The following is given by some of the Ohio agricultural papers as the aggregate amount of the several wheat crops of the State of Ohio, during the four past years; and shows very strikingly the extent of the improverishing system of farming, which too much prevails there as well as elsewhere:—Crop of 1842, 25,387,439 bushels; do. 1843, 18,786,705; do. 1844, 15,969,000; do. 1845, 12,000,000.

Turnip Rot.—The turnip, which in Ireland and Scotland has been found a very tolerable substitute for the potatoe, according to last accounts, is, like the potatoe, affected with the prevailing rot or blight. In Scotland, the disease among the turnips was so prevalent that fears were entertained that no fat cattle could be sent to England this season. Cattle had been exported from Aberdeenshire in a lean state, the owners foreseeing the difficulties likely to occur from the loss of the turnip.

Colored Voters.—The New York State Convention, after considerable debate, agreed to allow the exciting provision of the constitution relative to a colored person's vote, to remain as it is at present, which permits them to vote on a freehold of $250. Bank charters are prohibited forever.

Interesting to Authors and Publishers.—The tenth section of the late act of Congress establishing the smithsoian fund, requires the author or proprietor of any book, map, &c., &c., for which a copyright shall be secured, to deliver a copy thereof within three months after publication to the secretary, to be placed in said library.

Volunteers to be called for.—It is reported, says the Baltimore Sun, that the general government contemplates calling into immediate action that part of the fifty thousand volunteers from the Northern States, enrolled during the summer, not yet mustered into the service. These will be dispatched to Tampico, as soon as the cold season sets in, about the end of this month.

Indian Corn.—The importation of Indian corn into England is increasing with a rapidity almost incredible. During the month of August, 1845, the quantity imported in Liverpool amounted to only 9360 bushels, while in August of this year the importation reached 160,446 bushels.

Economy in Cooking Cranberries.—To each quart of berries, very shortly after the cooking of them is commenced, add a teaspoonful of saleratus. This will so neutralize the acidiferous juice which they contain as to make it necessary to use only one fourth part as much sugar as would have been requisite, had they been cooked without using saleratus.

Appointment by Gov. Shunk.—Hon. RICHARD COULTER, of Greensburg, Pa., has been appointed to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of this State, occurring by the death of Judge KENNEDY. Mr. C. is spoken of as a gentleman of eminent legal abilities.

Alpaca.—A flock of alpaca sheep have been imported and are now grazing in Berkshire, Mass. They will be found more profitable than the merino, and will bear heavier fleeces, yet are more delicate and require a mild climate.

Wisconsin.—The Democrats have carried the territory by a decided majority, in the election of delegates to the convention, which is to assemble for the formation of a State constitution.

Iron Ore.—One of the most valuable beds of iron ore ever discovered, has been found in the north-east corner of Dodge county, Wisconsin, and is said to yield ninety per cent. The deposite is said to be 30 feet thick.

First Governor of Iowa.—ROBERT LUCAS, first Governor of the Territory of Iowa, is now a candidate for Governor under the State organization.

Bench Resignation.—The Hon. THOMAS SARGEANT has resigned his seat as an Associate Justice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Material for New States.—California will make forty-five States, each the size of New Jersey; and New Mexico is equal to twenty-five New Jerseys.

A Notorious Counterfeiter.—A man named POLLOCK, has been sentenced to the Alabama penitentiary for ten years.

☞ A Steamship Line from New Orleans to New York, is about to be established. Arrangements for building two steamships have been recently completed. It is supposed that each vessel will cost about $200,000, and as $165,000 had already been secured at last accounts from New York, the contract for building one ship has probably been already entered into.

☞ A cataract has been discovered on the river St. Louis, where it falls into the Western extremity of Lake Superior, which has never been described by any Geographer. It is said to be only second to Niagara. The volume of water is very great, and the perpendicular height of the fall 150 feet.

☞ The Episcopal Convention of N. York has had another season of excitement in regard to the salary of their suspended bishop, B. T. Onderdonk. It is supposed the whole affair will go before the civil courts, for re-investigation, and final decision.

☞ The Mormons are said to have a sort of gun which they manufacture themselves, and which they call sixteen shooters, from their shooting 16 times with only once loading. They are said to be affective at short distances.

☞ Iron Wire, tinned and galvanized so as to resist rust, is an improvement which has been patented in England, and is about to be introduced in the construction of the Magnetic Telegraph in this country.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Toleration in Turkey.

There are many indications that God is preparing the way for the speedy introduction of his Gospel into all parts of the earth. Recent events in China, taken in connection with what he had previously done in other parts of Asia, show that he is determined, at no distant day, to open the whole world to the people.

The progress which religious freedom has made in Turkey within the last three years, is a most significant occurence. In 1843, it will be remembered, an Armenian, who had become a Musselman, and then returned to the faith of his fathers, was beheaded at Constantinople in circumstances peculiarly offensive to the civilized world. The Christian governments of Europe thereupon sent their remonstrances to the Sublime Porte; and it was hoped that the law under which this individual had suffered, would thenceforward be treated as a dead letter. In the course of a few months, however, a Greek was put to death at Broosa for a similar offence. This new instance of intolerance immediately arrested the attention of Great Britain, and called forth a declaration that could not well be disregarded. Then it was that a memorable pledge was given, in the following language:—"The Sublime Porte engaged to take effectual measures to prevent, henceforward the execution and putting to death of the Christian who is an apostate." This pledge, in terms, did not meet the demand of the British Government. It left the Sultan at liberty to punish the Mohammedans who should renounce their faith, with the utmost severity. It was predicted at the time, however, that the English Ambassador would never acquiesce in this interpretation; and the representatives of the Christian governments, it was understood, were ready to take the same view of the subject. But it is doubtful whether the most ardent friends of religious liberty expected to see, in 1846, such a change in the policy of the Sublime Porte as we are now permitted to record.

The recent trials which the evangelical Armenians have been called to endure, has invested the whole question of toleration in Turkey with new interest and importance. Most fortunately for the cause of truth and righteousness, it happened that the English Ambassador was prepared to do whatever became his office and station.—The Prussia Ambassador and the American charge were also willing to second him in his endeavors. As the result of their efforts, they have secured the most unqualified recognition of the principle, that men are not to be punished for their religious belief. Not only has the Turkish Minister of Foreign affairs Assented to the doctrine but even the American Patriarch has given it his sanction in the most public manner. And the representatives of Foreign Powers, mentioned above, have secured, as the practical consequence of the principle, the restoration of the persecuted Armenians of Constantinople to their places of business! Thus has this trial, which was so grievous for a season, been made to issue through the goodness of God, most triumphantly for the Gospel of his Son! Well may every friend of missions thank God and take courage.

"Shall not the Toleration of all Religions be Required of Mexico?"

This inquiry which appeared two weeks since, is worthy of a more definite answer than we are prepared to offer. We know not how far the usages of European governments will sanctian the interference of one nation with the ecclesiastical regulations of another. But it is remarkable that while the religious liberties of our citizens are shielded by law and protected in the heart of Turkey—these rights have been denied to our citizens in Mexico—a sister Republic, bordering upon our territory! The Bible, and all evangelical efforts have been excluded from Mexico—but protected and sustained among Mohammedans and Pagans. Public attention ought to be directed to this subject: Mexico must have the Bible—and evangelical teachers—or her people can never be free—and never be governed by law. The subjects of spiritual tyranny can only be controlled by the strong arm of despotism—sustained by the bayonet.—Christian Observer.

Preserving Sweet Potatoes.—The difficulty of preserving sweet potatoes for seed through the winter, in the Nothern States, is well known. C. Springer, of Ohio, succeeds perfectly by filling a nail keg with alternate layers of wheat chaff and potatoes, and enclosing the whole in a barrel of wheat bran, headed up. This was kept in a cool part of a room, which was not subjected to freezing. When the barrel was filled with wheat chaff instead of bran, the experiment did not succeed so well.

Temperance Abroad.

The Rev. Dr. Baird, in a letter to the quarterly paper of the Foreign Evangelical Society, speaks well of the Temperance Convention he attended at Stockholm in June last, which was attended dy the King, Queen, and Crown Prince.—He states that in Sweeden, there are three hundred and thirty-two temperance societies, and upwards of ninety thousand members. In Norway, he states that the Temperance cause has only just taken effectual hold. At the beginning of this year, there were a hundred and twenty-eight temperance societies; and fourteen thousand, eight hundred and twelve members.

In Prussia there are 699 temperance associations, and 743,713 members.

In Austria there are more than 60 societies and 150,000 members.

In the kingdom of Hanover there are 456 societies, and 69,116 members.

In the Duchy of Oldenburgh there are 75 societies and 28,108 members.

In the rest of Germany there are 126 societies and 25,824 members.

So that there are now in all Germany, including Austria, 1426 temperance societies, and no less than 1,019,193 members.—Alliance and Vistor.

Incombustible Wash.

Slack stone lime in a large tub or barrel, with boiling water, covering the tub or barrel, to keep in all the steam. When thus slacked, pass six quarts of it through a fine seive, it will then be in a state of fine flour. Now, to six quarts of this lime add one quart of rock or Turk's Island salt, and one gallon of water; then boil the mixture and skim it clean. To every five gallons of this mixture, add one pound of allum, half a pound of copperas, by slow degrees. three quarters of a pound of potash, and four quarts of fine sand or hard wood ashes, sifted. This mixture will now admit of any coloring matter you please, and may be applied with a brush. It looks better than paint, and is as durable as slate. It will stop small leaks in the roof, prevent moss from growing over and rotting the wood, render it incombustible from sparks falling upon it. When laid upon brick work, it renders the brick impervious to rain or wet.—Emigrant's Hand Book.

An Inch of Time.—"Millions of money for an inch of time,"—cried Elizabeth,—the gifted, but vain and ambitious Queen of England, on her dying bed. Unhappy woman! reclining upon a royal couch.—with ten thousand dresses in her wardrobe,—a kingdom upon which the "sun never sets," at her feet,—all are now valueless, and she shrieks in anguish, and shrieks in vain. for a single "inch of time." She had enjoyed three-score and ten years.—Like too many among us, she had so devoted them to wealth, to pleasure, to pride and ambition, that her whole preparation for eternity, was crowded into her final moments; and hence she, who had wasted more than half a centuary, would now barter millions for an "inch of time."

It is said that tainted meat can be entirely freed from its disagreeable taste, if when boiling, a piece of charred or burnt stick be kept in the pot. A piece of charcoal is as good.

Abba, Father.

At an examination of a Deaf and Dumb institution, some years ago in London, a little boy was asked in writing, "Who made the world?" He took the chalk and wrote underneath, the words, "In the beginning God created the Heavens and the earth."

The clergyman then inquired in a similar manner, "Why did Jesus Christ come into the world?"

A smile of gratitude rested on the countenance of the little fellow, as he wrote "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

A third question was then proposed, evidently adapted to call the most powerful feelings into exercise: "Why were you born deaf and dumb, when I can hear and speak?"

"Never," says an eye witness, "shall I forget the look of resignation which sat upon his countenance as he again took the chalk and wrote, "Even so, Father, for it seemed good in thy sight."—Penny Gaz.

Profitable Hens.—Chas. W. Green, of Roxbury, Mass., from 45 hens, had 41 dozen eggs, in January last, and 26½ dozen the first 16 days of February. He keeps his hens warm in a well lighted house, facing the south, the front being made of glass, like a green house. The eggs sold for 30 to 38 cents per dozen.

THE INVITATION.—P. M.

O, come, come away, from sin that dreadful monster,
Let Christ awhile upon you smile,—
O, come, come away.

O, come and taste redeeming love,
And then his truth and frienship prove,
And onward sweetly move,—
O, come, come away.

From death and the curse, in which you now are sinking,
Redeeming love will you remove,—
O, come, come away.

O, come along and join our throng,
And with us sing this cheering song,
And heaven shall be your home,—
O, come, come away.

While watchmen are standing on the "walls of Zion,"
Inviting you to join in too,—
O, come, come away.

O, will you still refuse the call,
And in to misery blindly fall,
And drink that burning gall,—
O, come, come away.

The bright morn of youth will soon be gone forever.
Its morning light may set in night,—
O, come, come away.

O, come while youth is in its prime,
And seek redeeming love divine,
And in Christ's army shine.—
O, come, come away.

When free from this world, of sorrow and temptation,
We'll sail above on wings of love.—
O, come, come away.

And while angelic armies sing,
And make the heavenly arches ring,
Well praise our eternal King,—
O, come, come away.

POETRY.

AUTUMN.

Though once enamored with the Spring—
  Its pleasure and its bloom—
The pensive muse prefers to sing,
And touch the more congenial string,
  Of Autumn's pleasing gloom.

She comes, with all her sober train,
  To crown the changing year;
The juicy fruit and shining grain
Are scattered o'er the hills and plain,
  To strengthen and to cheer.

Of late, the meadows and the field,
  And forest, waved in green;
The num'rous flowers the garden yields,
Though long in embryo concealed,
  In perfect bloom were seen.

Then to the verdant, shady grove
  The tuneful race resort;
Chanting their sweetest notes of love,
The birds in amorous gestures strove
  Their partners' smiles to court.

But now these sprightly scenes are gone,
  And Summer's joys are fled;
Nature, of all her flowerets shorn,
Her motely colored garb puts on,
  Of yellow, brown and red.

And now the feathered choir no more
  Their notes in concert blend;
But, in assembling flocks, appear
Prepared their southern course to steer,
  Ere wintry storms descend.

Th' enlightened eye can still survey
  The scene without regret;
Can view the sun's departing ray,
That gilds the last autumnal day,
  And witness his retreat.

The russet hue the meadows wear—
  The fading, falling leaf—
The gathered products of the year,
Though num'rous tribes demand their share
  For man appears the chief.

For him the various seasons roll,
  And in their time return;
Under the wise and firm control
Of Him who gave th' immortal soul,
  And reason to discern.

So life's successive seasons fly—
  Its Winter, too, will come;
And man is warned to turn his eye
To future scenes beyond the sky—
  His long, ETERNAL HOME.

Worlds of light and crowns of glory,
  Far above yon azure sky!
Though by faith I now behold you,

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DIED—In this place, on Wednesday the 28th of October, Edwin Albert, infant son of Joseph J. and Susannah Weltmer; aged 1 year, 1 month, and 21 days.

In the death of this interesting and extraordinary child of its age, may be learnt an important and instructive lesson. It shows us the folly of placing our devotion and affections on anything here below, however endearing it may be: it shows us the great importance of having our thoughts and affections centered on Him, who alone has the power of imparting happiness to our afflicted race, and who alone can give us eternal life hereafter. But a few days ago, this child was idolized by its affectionate parents; and in proportion to their devotion, were their hearts estranged from Him, who requires an undivided love—but now it is no more! it has been taken to its long home, where afflictions are not known, and where sorrow doth never come. Let us, then, willingly submit to the mysterious hand of God, who does every thing for the best, and who knows what is best for us.

Fond parents, cease your mourning—
  Your first-born is no more,—
He's now a lamb, adorning
  God's fold, on Canaan's shore!

He took your much-loved treasure,
  To blissful scenes above;—
Ah! think—and think with pleasure—
  He lives on Jesus' love!

With feelings of deep sadness,
  Ye'll doat on looks and words;—
That "he's with Christ in gladness!"
  Sweetest relief affords.

Dr. WILLIAM S. CRESAP,
THOMSONIAN BOTANIC PHYSICIAN.

Having returned from the west, would respectfully offer his professional services to the public.

In order that the public may better understand the principal that govern my (the Thomsonian) practice, I will briefly give the nature of the human system—the principle of life—the nature and character of disease—the manner in which it invades the body, according to my mind—and, also, my mode of expelling disease from the body, and of restoring to a healthy state the debilitated organs:

Correct observation will show that the human body is an organized structure, containing an outer and an inner surface, every portion of which is a network, composed of the ends or mouths of an innumerable multitude of tubes, whose main bodies and ramifications extend through every portion of the system, and whose office is to absorb or discharge the various fluids that are received into or formed in it. Into this body is implanted, at its formation, a principal called life—a principle which, whatever be its nature, is accompanied, when in health, with an amount or a degree of heat always considerably above that of the atmosphere in which the man is destined to dwell, and with the power to bring all the digestive, absorbent, circulatory and secretive organs into action, upon the food that is received for the nourishment of the body. Experience shows that any obstruction lodged in any one or more of these absorbent or secretive organs, is a cause of disease, that is, a hindrance to the full and free exercise of the principal of life, in its processes of digestion and nourishment. Should the stomach, the head and prince of all the digestive organs, be the seat of obstructions, the amount of vital heat is proportionally lessened at the fountain, the extremities become cold, the whole system is languid and full of pain, and tormented with alternate chills and fevers, till the obstructions are removed and the heat regains its empire. Now, to expel this fever, and remove the obstruction which is the cause of it, we supply the fountain with additional heat, apply warmth and moisture to the surface, to relax the pores, and then excite to action the secretory vessels, by means of diffusive stimulants, &c. But, says one, must not a physician treat his patient according to symptoms? Why, certainly. Hence, if we find the patient cold, we heat him—if feverish, we sweat him—if vomiting, we clear out the offensive matter—if weak, we strengthen him—if cramped, or in convulsions, we relax his whold system; if there are obstructions to the free circulation of the blood, we remove those obstructions, and if hungry, we have him fed, &c. To the afflicted, then, we would say, give us a trial, we ask no more, and my word for it, you will soon become Thomsonians.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Thanksgiving Day.

It will be recollected that Thursday the 26th inst., is appointed by the Governor of this Commonwealth as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. Accordingly the Eldership, at its late session in Mechanicsburg, as will be seen from the Journal, passed a resolution recommending a due and pious observance of said day, by all the "Churches of God." Let a word to the wise be sufficient.

Thanksgiving Collection.

The Eldership has also authorized a thanksgiving collection on the aforesaid thanksgiving day, in all the churches within the bounds of the Eldership, for missionary purposes. On a moments reflection, the propriety and necessity of this collection will no doubt be seen and felt by the whole church. Yet it may not be superfluence to suggest a few thoughts as preparatory to the same.

1. The Board of Missions stand much in need of more funds. They still owe some, and they have made new contracts which must be fulfilled.

2. The "Church of God" is, and ought to be, emphatically, a missionary church. Through her active and aggressive efforts, the world must be lighted and redeemed. To her, therefore, God says, "Freely ye have received, freely give." In view, then, of all the temporal and spiritual blessings which we have freely received, and for which we are called upon to offer our thanksgiving, let us freely bring our missionary offerings to the treasury of the Lord. And this let us do,—

3. Because it is not only our duty, but likewise our interest. "Give," says the Lord, "and it shall be given to you again, good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith. saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3: 10.

Here, then, are most encouraging promises. A compliance with it will be the surest guarantee of our personal and national prosperity. Hence, then, as a thanksgiving oblation, let each member of the church bring a note, or at least a piece of silver, and cast it into the treasury of the Lord, on the aforenamed thanksgiving day. The moneys thus collected will be remitted forthwith to the Board of Missions.

Harn on Feet-Washing.

Bishop George U. Harn has in press a short treatise on the Ordinance of Feet-Washing,, which will be ready for delivery in the course of a week or ten days. The work will be neatly printed and bound in a 32mo. form, at twenty-five cents per copy. Orders for it may be addressed to the editor of the Advocate, or to the author at Pittsburg, Pa.

Meeting of the Board.

The Board of Trustees of the Printing Establishment will meet in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, on Thursday next. A general attendance is earnestly requested, as business of great importance will be transacted.

Journal of the Ohio Eldership.

This Journal will appear in our next.—We had no room for it in this number. If the West Pa. Eldership will let us have their Journal in time, we shall try to make room for that also in our next paper.

Contributors.

We request our esteemed contributors to bear with us till we get through with the publication of the Eldership Journals, and then their communications shall receive due attention.

New Edition of Hymn-Books.

We shall have ready, Deo volente, between this and New Year, a new edition of both English and German Hymn-Books. Both editions will have an addition of new hymns. If any of our friends can aid us, by sending us hymns, new and good, we shall feel obliged.

FUNERAL SERMON

ON

THE DEATH OF JOSEPH H. BAMBERGER, V. D. M.

Preached before the East Penn'a. Eldership, held in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, Pa., in October, 1846, in compliance with a clause in the Will of the Testator, by

JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M.

TEXT—"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." Acts 8: 2.

He was a meek man. He was meek in spirit and meek in appearance. So conspicious was this trait of character, that his very appearance, both in and out of the pulpit was remarkably prepossessing.

He was also a prudent man. This is a quality that highly exalts a Christian minister. For the want of this, nothing will atone. A minister's ablest and best performances are often rendered perfectly nugatory by imprudence. Aware of this fact, and with an ardent desire to be useful and respected among the people of his charge, our deceased brother never lost sight of the admonition—"Be wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

But he was also a faithful man. Faithfulness, as well as wisdom, is pre-eminently characteristic of a true servant of God. Matt. 24: 45, 46. Brother Bamberger, though naturally backward and diffident, yet his sterling fidelity in the cause of his Master enabled him, when in the pulpit, boldly and fearlessly to proclaim the truth, and the whole truth, as it is in Jesus.

In proof of the correctness of this assertion, I beg leave here to introduce another extract from a letter which I received from a friend in Martinsburg, since the death of our lamented brother:

"His general course of conduct while among us, and especially in the pulpit, was such, that while the truths of the word of God, as we believe them, were presented pointedly and forcibly to the minds of the people, yet it was always done in such a way as not to give offence."

This, my brethren, shows one of the happiest arts of preaching the Gospel. It takes a meek, wise and faithful minister, to "preach the truth in love," so as not to offend, but to gain the people.

But his faithfulness and strong attachment to the cause of God, and to his brethren in the Eldership, we may further learn both from his words and actions on different occasions.—Look at his letters—examine his annual reports as recorded on the Journals of the Eldership, and mark how often, and how emphatically he declared, that with his brethren in the "Church of God," his mind was made up "to live, to labor and to die." During his last visit to Harrisburg, and after an interview with brother McCartney on the subject of his recreancy, he said to me: "Well, I told him plainly, that let who would forsake the Church of God, and go to building of corn-cribs and out-houses, as for me, I shall continue to build the Mansion-house, the house which was built these many years ago, which a Great King of Israel built and set up."

Again, let his actions speak—these speak louder than words. I am credibly informed that the first year he travelled, he gave all his support to his colleague; and that for several years afterward, he gave more than he received. On every occasion he was forward to help on with every good cause. When the relief subscription for the Printing Establishment was started, he subscribed one hundred dollars. When it was recommended by the Eldership that those who could afford it, should add to their subscriptions, he came forward of his own accord and subscribed thirty dollars more. And in his last Will and Testament he bequeathed the sum of fifty dollars towards the same object: making in all towards this one object one hundred and eighty dollars. Besides this, he has willed the bulk of his estate to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, for the promotion of the missionary cause.

All this clearly shows that his heart was fixed—that he was a "true man"—that he possessed a liberal soul, and that he loved the Church of God with a pure heart fervently.

Now when men so justly distinguished, and so eminently useful in every department of the house of God, are taken away from us, we have, I think, a just cause for mourning and lamentation. But again, I remark, that the death of a Christian minister is a just cause for lamentation,—

III. Because it sometimes shows that the Lord has a controversy with his people.

So it was anciently. In Is. 34: 7 and 8, we read, "My sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment: and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness. For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion."—Mark it, "My sword shall come down to judgment for the controversy of Zion."

Again we read, Hos. 12: 2, "The Lord hath a controversy with Juda, and will punish Jacob according to his ways; according to his doings will he recompense him."

And again, in Mic. 6: 2, it is said: "Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with His people."

"I have somewhat against thee," said Christ, "to the church at Ephesus, (i. e.,) I have a controversy with thee; and now, therefore, repent and do thy first works, or else I will come to thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." The candlestick, in this place, may denote the Christian ministry. This the Lord threatens to remove from those against whom He has a controversy.

Here, then, it becomes us to pause and inquire: Have we any reason to think that the Lord has a controversy with us as a church and people. Upon serious reflection, it would seem as though He had. For there has been a sad falling away in many places. There has also been "a going out from us," of some few, who once seemed to be pillars in the church. And the sword of the Lord has likewise, seemingly at least, come down to judgment to cut off some of our "burning and shining lights"—some of our young watchmen, in the prime of life, and in their meridian of usefulness. Witness our brother Wood and brother Bamberger. What mean all these things, except it be that the Lord has a controversy with us! And if so, there is a cause for it. For the Lord never has a controversy with any people, much less with his own people, without a just cause. The first thing, therefore, we should do, is to search and find out the cause.

Is it, then, because we have become too much elated with our past success and prosperity? This is sometimes apt to be the case. And wherever a people exhalt themselves above measure, they are very likely to meet with an abasement.

Is it because, like Demas of old, we have fell in love with the world? A covetous, Mammon-loving and worldly-minded people, run a great hazzard of being rebuked. I fear there is a criminal lack of primitive zeal, liberality, and consecration of our all to God.

Or is it, perhaps, because of bigotry, intoleration and strife? These and other mysteries of iniquity, I greatly fear, have began to work. If so, we may well lament and bemoan ourselves. But this is not all. We have more to do than to weep and lament. We must "confess and forsake." We must "cease to do evil and learn to do well." Reformation is an antecedent, not a consequent, of restoration. The prodigal had to repent and come, in order to be entitled to mercy and reception.

Let us humble ourselves, then, under the mighty hand of God, and He will restrain His wrath, and exhalt us in due time. I remark,

Once more, that the death of a faithful minister of Christ is a just cause for lamentation,—

IV. Because it is both natural and scriptural to mourn and lament for the dead.

It is natural to do so for reasons already assigned, and because we are naturally so constituted, that we cannot avoid it.

When friends, who loved, are called to part,
The heart will feel, lament and smart.

But it is also scriptural to mourn and weep for the dead.

When Sarah died, "Abraham," it is said "came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her." Gen. 23: 2.

When Jacob died, "the Egyptians mourned for him three-score and ten days. And Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house, a very great company, went up from Goshen to Canaan to bury Jacob in the grave, which he had digged for himself, and mourned over him with a great and very sore lamentation. Gen. 50: 3—10.

When Aaron died on the top Mount Hor, all the congregation of Israel mourned for Aaron thirty days. Num. 20: 29.

When Moses, the man of God, died in the land of Moab, and was buried over against Beth-peor, the children of Israel wept for Moses, in the plains of Moab, thirty days. Deut. 34: 8.

When Saul, the first king of Israel, was slain, and had his head cut off in Mount Gilboa, the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead buried him, and mourned and fasted seven days. 1 Sam. 31: 11—13. 2 Sam. 2: 4—6.

When Jacob clandently assassinated Abner, the Hebrew General; David, the King of Israel, said to all the people, "Rend your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, and mourn for Abner." And they buried Abner in Hebron; and the King lifted up his voice and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept. 2 Sam. 3: 31, 32.

When Absalom was hung by his own mule in the thick boughs of a great oak, between the Heavens and the earth, till he was dead, dead, dead; and Chusi ran and told it to David the King, the King was greatly moved, and mourned and wept, and cried with a loud voice and said, "O my son Absalom! my son, my son, Absalom! Would God I had died for thee. O Absalom, my son, my son." 2 Sam. 18: 33.

When Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha, fell sick and died, not only his two sisters wept, but the Jews also wept, who had come to comfort them concerning their brother. And when Jesus saw Mary and Martha weeping, and the Jews weeping, He himself also groaned in spirit and wept. Then said the Jews, "Behold how he loved him." See John and 11th chap.

When Dorcas of Joppa, that good and charitable woman, fell sick and died, Peter was sent for; and when he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber, and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showed the coats and garments which Dorcas made while she was with them. Acts 9: 39.

When Jesus himself was crucified, and buried, the daughters of Jerusalem, and the whole Christian brotherhood, wept and lamented for him. "And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept." Mark 16: 10.

Thus, also, when Stephen died, or was martyred, as the text informs us, "devout men made great lamentation over him."—Hence, then, we see that it is natural, rational, Christian and scriptural, to weep, mourn and lament for the dead; and especially for these who were young, useful, and tenderly beloved.

Such, my brethren, just such a one was he whom our services this day commemorate. He was young and in the midst of life. He was useful, promising and greatly beloved. But his morning sun has set at noon. And now we are bereaved of all his talents, his influence and his services. In view of all this, can it be a sin if, like the devout men spoken of in the text, we are found making great lamentation over him?

Note.—See conclusion of the foregoing sermon on page first, in number five, of this volume.

We had intended to republish the concluding part; but for want of room we omit it.

The reports of the preachers were called for.

PHILADELPHIA STATION.

ELDER JOSIAH H. QUIGLEY—No report.

LANCASTER STATION.

ELDER EDWARD H. THOMAS reported: That he has continued to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom, in the city of Lancaster, according to the appointment of the last Eldership—has seen some souls converted to God during last winter and spring—believes the church at Lancaster to be in a good condition, and the brethren living in peace and harmony—asks the prayers and sympathies of his brethren.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

BALTIMORE STATION.

ELDER CALTON PRICE—No written report handed in.

MIDDLETOWN STATION.

ELDER JACOB FLAKE reported: That since April last, he has been laboring in the Gospel ministry in Middletown. He has no special prosperity to report, any further than that union and peace happily prevail; for which he is thankful to the Lord.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

HARRISBURG STATION.

ELDER WILLIAM McFADDEN reported: That after a good deal of difficulty about his appointment last spring, he was, by the Standing Committee, appointed to the Harrisburg station—found things in a discouraging state; but in the strength of the Lord commenced his labors. After camp-meeting the Lord blessed his labors, and there were a number converted. He feels very much attached to the brethren at Harrisburg, and hopes to spend his days in the service of the Lord.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion,

A committee was appointed to examine sundry communications, between brother McFADDEN and the churches of Woodbury and Stonerstown, and the Standing Committee. The committee are brothers KYLE, STROHM and MOONEY.

SHIPPENSBURG AND ORRSTOWN STATION.

ELDER JOHN C. OWENS reported: It gives me much satisfaction that, through the grace and mercy of God, I have the opportunity of meeting with my brethren in another yearly meeting. At the sixteenth annual Eldership of the "Church of God," held in the city of Lancaster, last November, I received a renewal of my license, and was appointed to Lancaster in connection with brother E. H. THOMAS. After my return to Mechanicsburg and Churchtown churches, where I then labored, I received notice from the Standing Committee, that my appointment was changed from Lancaster to Shippensburg and Orrstown churches: which charge I accordingly engaged in, about the 1st of April last. About the time, as above stated, I prodeeded to take charge of Shippensburg and Orrstown churches; but like all those who are in an enemies land we have some troubles; our prospects at times are bright again; they seem to be wrapt in darkness. In additon to the charge above stated, I have taken in three other preaching places in the adjoining region, at which places there are encouraging prospects. We are praying and looking for a brighter day, when God shall again visit His people. I have baptized, during the last Eldership year, thirteen persons—three at Mechanicsburg, three at Shippensburg, and seven at Orrstown.—Thus we are trying to move along in the good old way. As respects my engagements and encouragements, during the latter part of my time, seeing the Mechaniesburg and Churchtown churches were changeable; however, amidst all those discouragments, God was frequently with us.

Missionary collection, Shippensburg,		$5 22
Do. do. Orrstown,		2 67
Making in all		$7 89

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

NEWBURG STATION.

ELDER JOHN C. BOOTH reported—Dear Brethren: I esteem it an exalted privilege to meet with you again in an Eldership capacity. And as it has now fell to my lot to give in my report, I would state, after the close of the last Eldership, I returned to my charge at Shiremanstown and Lisburn, where I labored to the best of my abilities till spring. I then left there and went to my new field of labor at the Newburg station—was received kindly, labored with satisfaction, and saw some converted. I throw my self in the hand of the Eldership to be disposed of as they see proper. Brethren, pray for me.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

FAYETTEVILLE AND SMOKETOWN STATION.

ELDER WM. MILLER reported: That he has been preaching for the Fayetteville, Plainsfield and Springmills churches. The congregations, at these places are increasing and are very attentive; and I think are living in peace and harmony and are manifesting love, kindness and hospitality toward one another and all mankind. If, in this opinion, I am correct then surely these brethren are growing in favour both with God and the people. I dearly love these brethren, and could wish to live and die with them. My determination, by the grace of God, is to try to live a life that shall never be any reproach to the cause of my blessed Lord and Saviour, and that I may be able to do so, I beg an interest in the prayer of all my beloved brethren.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

MARTINSBUG STATION.

ELDER GEORGE McCARTMEY—Non est inventus.

LANCASTER CIRCUIT.

ELDER THOMAS STROHM reported: According to appionted in connection with brother KYLE to travel the Lancaster county circuit. We have great reasons to be thankful for what God has done for us, some twelve or fifteen have professed to have imbraced religion and five were buptized. The churches on the circuit, I think are rather in a declining state, with the exeeption of a few. As it regards myself, I am still determined to love and serve the Lord, and to preach the Gospel in my week way and manner. Dear brethren, I still love you and wish to live and share with you in adversities and at last with you to reign in the kingdom of God. I ask an interest in your prayers.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

ELDER DAVID KYLE, Also from Lancaster county circuit, reported: I have been laboring the last Eldership year in York and Lancaster circuits. During last winter the church at Sidenstown enjoyed an outpouring of the spirit of the Lord, and some souls were converted: I removed to Lancaster circuit in the spring, and have been laboring with brother STROHM and I am much pleased with the brethren. He desires an interest in all your prayers.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

DAUPHIN AND JUNIATTA CIRCUITS.

ELDER MICHAEL F. SNAVELY reported: that he had been endeavoring to labor as much as he has been able in the ministry of the Gospel on the Dauphin and Juniatta circuit. But by reason of ill health, at times, was not able to preach at all. Has a number of true and faithful brethren and sisters at various places—feels much attached to many of them, and wishes them God's speed, through the journey of life. That, though in weakness and much fear, he is still determined to preach the "truth as it is in Jesus," by God's permission, while life shall last.

But to take charge of a circuit of many appointments as heretofore he will not, because he is not able to preach much at this time, but is still endeavoring to comply with Isaiah 58: 1, 2.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion,

Adjourned. Session closed by brother T. DESHIRI.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Session opened by ———.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY CIRCUIT.

ELDER SAMUEL CRAWFORD reported: That at the close of the last Eldership he returned to the Dauphin and Lebanon circuit and there labored cheerfully and persevereingly, and saw some good affected. On the first of April he went to the Cumberland circuit but to his great grief found in some places a discouraging state of things. Nevertheless he persevered as far as God gave him ability to fill the appointments on the circuit, and in some places witnessed the conversion of a few souls. He desires the prayers of his brethren, that he may still be favored with grace to sustain him in future.

His report was adopted and his license renewed.

ELDER WILLIAM MOONEY, also from Cumberland county circuit, reported: That since the last Eldership he labored for the church at Middletown until the first of April, at which time he commenced to labor on the Cumberland circuit in connection with brother CRAWFORD until the present time. He requests an interest in the prayers of his brethren in the ministry for a life of usefulness in the vineyard of his Divine Master.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

YORK COUNTY CIRCUIT.

ELDER ABRAHAM SWARTZ reported: He has done the best in his place of labor he could he hopes to do so still and asks the prayers of his brethren.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

ELDER JOSIAH H. HURLEY, also of York county circuit, reported: That he received his appointment to labor in York county circuit, and commenced his labor last spring, on his new field of labor, was kindly received by the brethren, and found the churches zealous in the cause of God—that the meetings have been interesting, saw some converted and nine baptized on the circuit—that he enjoyed much of the favor of God, feels still to labor in the vineyard of the Lord.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

PERRY COUNTY CIRCUIT.

ELDER THOMAS DESHIRI reported: That he entered his field of labor on the 15th of April last—was kindly received by the brethren, and by them hospitably treated. May God prosper the work on the circuit, &c.—He solicits an interest in the prayers of this Eldership for his future success in his ministerial efforts.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

BROADTOP AND OCKWICK CIRCUIT.

Elder JACOB LININGER reported: That he feels glad that, through the providence of God, he is permitted to meet with his brethren again in the capacity of an Eldership. Aceording to appointment, by the Eldership, he continued his labors at Ockwick church until the 1st of April, at which time he took Broadtop circuit in conneetion with the Oekwick church, and extended his labors over the other ground—that he had seen a few conversions. He did not preach as much as he would liked to have done, owing to inability of the brethren on the circuit in giving him a eompetent support for his family—that he was compelled to labor with his own hands to get a support. For the future he intends to labor on, as he still feels for the cause of God. He desires his brethren to pray for him.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion,

Adjourned. Session closed by ———.

FRIDAY MORNING—October 30th.

The Eldership then continued to hear the reports of the preachers.

WASHINGTON COUNTY (Md.) CIRCUIT.

Elder WILLIAM MULLINIX reported by letter.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

UNIONTOWN (Md.) CIRCUIT.

Elder JACOB KELLER reported—Dear Brethren: I feel myself happy in having the privilege of meeting with you again in our yearly meeting. In the year that is past, I have been trying to labor according to the best of my ability. I have seen some good affected; about twenty-seven have been converted on my circuit the last year. We have peace and harmony amongst us. I hope the brethren will pray for me.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

SCHUYLKILL AND LEBANON CIRCUIT.

Elder ISRAEL BRADY reported by letter. The Eldership disapprove of brother Brady's course, in giving up a part of his circuit into other hands without consulting the Standing Committee. They hope he will strive to continue in future an order-abiding, fellow-laborer in the Gospel.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

ADAMS COUNTY CIRCUIT.

Elder SOLOMON BOWSER reported: That after he received license he labored in York county, and saw sinners converted. In the spring he went to his appointment in Adams county, and saw he could not be supported; he therefore gave up the appointment.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion,

Brother Kelly of the Methodist Episcopal Church was invited to take a seat as an advisory member.

Also, brother H. Harliston was invited to take a seat as an advisory member.

REPORTS OF THE MISSIONARIES.

Elder WILLIAM HINNEY reported: That he is thankful to God that he was permitted to meet with his brethren in a yearly meeting; a time to whieh he had long looked forward and desired to see. As it respeets his labors, they have been very limited, (as formerly) owing to bodily affliction, and in addition to that, he has had a great deal of trouble both in and out of the churches.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed,

Elder JOSEPH STRAWBRIDGE reported.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Elder ANDREW MILLER reported:

On motion,

His report was deferred until the committee between him and brother Lingle brought in their report.

Elder DAVID MAXWELL reported: That he has been laboring as a missionary the past year, and he is thankful to God for the small amount of good that he has witnessed. That he is still willing to labor as far as God may give ability. He trusts that his brethren will pray for him.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Elder WILLIAM McELROY reported.

His report was adopted and his license renewed.

Elder JAMES MACKEY reported: That last spring he gave up his pastorial charges at Shippensburg and Orrstown—that he was induced to give up those charges in consequence of a Bronchial affection and other pecuniary circumstances, which rendered him unable to preach. Since giving up the congregations as above mentioned, he has now and then preached the word of God, as circumstances permitted. He thinks his active days of preaching are over, but has not lost the spirit of promulgating the Gospel, and still intends to do as the Lord permits.—He referred to a difficulty existing between Elder S. Angle and himself, and which difficulty still exists, but will probable be removed by the action of the Eldership. He alluded to his election to the State Legislature: this event he viewed as providential as all who know him, know that he is no political aspirant; nevertheless, as the people have called him to this station, he feels in duty bound to consent to their wishes. He feels a deep interest in the welfare of his country, and will labor to redress her wrongs and advance her prosperity. He takes the present occasion to correct a mistake too prevalent he fears amongst many. It is the idea many persons entertain, that it is very dangerous for a professor of religion to be a member of the Legislature. This is an error. Experience has taught him otherwise; having twice been honored with a seat in that body, and found it neither detrimental to, nor inconsistant with piety. Stated prayer meetings were frequently held by that portion of the members so inclined, and all other general religious advantages, as well as the courtesy and good behavior of the members, make it quite as possible to retain Christian integrity there, as elsewhere; provided, the command to watch and pray be not forgotten. He asks the prayers of all Christians in his behalf; that under every circumstanee he may be enabled conscientiously to perform the various duties assigned to him.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion,

Adjourned. Session closed by brother Winebrenner.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Session opened by the Speaker.

Elder JAMES WERNER reported. On motion his report was deferred until the Committee on Overtures bring in their report.

Elder JOHN WINEBRENNER reported: I was left in the hands of the Board of Missions, as a General Missionary, at the last annual Eldership; but as yet have not been employed under thier direction.

I have also continued, during the last year, in the prosecution of my agency for the relief subscription. The whole amount, now subscribed for that object, is $2954,05, and the amount collected $890,80, of which sum $73,-50 has been paid in satisfaction of a few pressing claims against the late brother Daniel Seiler, dec'd.; the balance is in my hands subject to the order of this Eldership, after a deduction of my elaims.

As to my editorship of the "Church Advocate," I have no report to make here, inasmuch as I have my contract with the Publishing Committee of the General Eldership.

And, touching my ministerial labors and my moral and official conduct, I shall, as usual, leave the Eldership to judge, who know all about me.

On motion, his report was deferred until the Committee on Overtures report.

Elder JACOB BREWER reported: That he is thankful to God that he is spared to meet with his dear brethren in another Eldership, to give a report of his labors, &c., since the last yearly meeting, at which time he obtained a license to travel as a missionary. During last winter he assisted some of his brethren in holding some protracted meetings, and besides this preached where opportunities offered. About the middle of April he commenced travelling the Schuylkill county circuit, and continued to travel among the Churches of God in said county. Ever since his travels he has met with some opposition, especially from some who would be ministers of the Gospel; but the truth of the Gospel of Christ has thus far vanquished that opposition. Our camp-meeting and protracted meetings were accompanied with some good.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Elder PHILIP SHAW reported: That since the last Eldership he has been preaching and doing a little for the Lord, and hopes for the future to do more.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion of brother Flake, it was

Resolved, That we take up the report of the Committee on Overtures item by item.

On motion, it was indefinitely postponed.

2. Two letters from George McCartney, offering to adjust all mistakes in his account with the Eldership, and requesting an honorable dismissal from the same. The committee advise that George McCartney's case be referred to the Standing Committee; and that as soon as he will come forward and fairly settle his account with them, that then, and not till then, shall they be authorized to comply with his request. Notwithstanding, this Eldership considers George McCartney highly culpable for not taking the appointment assigned him by the last Eldership; for the careless manner, to say the least of it, in which he kept the books and accounts of the Printing Establishment, and for several other blamaeble acts and movements. Adopted, and his case referred to the Standing Committee.

3. A letter from brother J. F. Eizenhower, prefering sundry charges against Elder Wm. McFadden. The committee advise a reference of this letter to the committee already appointed on brother McFadden's case. Recommendation adopted.

The report of the Committee on Journals was taken up.

1. The case of Elders A. Miller and M. F. Snavely, referred to a special committee consisting of Elders J. C. Owens, W. Mooney and T. Strohm. Brother Owens reported they had come to no certain conclusion in reference to brother A. Miller's case, but with reference to brother M. F. Snavely all was adjusted.

On motion, brother Snavely's report was adopted, and his license renewed.

2. Brother A. Dobson's case. Referred back to the committee in charge of the same.

3. A committee to audit George McCartney's account of the Printing Establishment. Referred to the Standing Committee.

4. A resolution recommending the raising of missionary funds on the plan proposed by the General Eldership. Said plan was re-adopted.

5. A resolution recommending additional subscriptions to the Relief Project.

Brother Winebrenner reported an increase of said subscription.

The committee on brother West's case reported as follows, viz:

The committee to whom was refered the case of brother Elder E. West, and the allegations contained in a letter sent by him to this Eldership, relating to brother J. Winebrenner, report:

Your committee have examined the letter to which brother West refers, and under which he claims to be discharged from this Eldership, and published in the second No. of Church Advocate, and find the words of that part of the letter as follows, to-wit:

"The license granted to me by the East Pa. Eldership I shall not want, as I am not nor do I expect to labor within its bounds."

These words your committee think do not, by any means, entitle brother West to a discharge; but if they were so considered by brother West, the 19th article of the Constitution of the General Eldership, prohibits any preacher to be transfered from one Eldership to another without mutual consent, and therefore brother West must still be considered a member of this Eldership.

Your committee have also examined the charges brought by brother West against brother Winebrenner.

First Charge.—"Brother Winebrenner has monopolized the publication and sale of hymn books in the church, and has treated as disorderly walkers those who spoke of publishing a hymn book."

Your committee find in the Journal of the Eldership, (page 15) a resolution recommending to the churches the hymn book then in use amongst them. This resolution necessarily settles the question, and was no doubt intended to adjust the difficulties which had occurred in relation to this matter, and direct the course further to be pursued, leaving no room for complaints now.

Second Charge.—"Brother Winebrenner has instructed the brethren in Ohio to mark me as a schismatic, for daring to say that the church has the right to license preachers." This charge brother Winebrenner denies; and as your committee have no evidence before them to substantiate this charge, pray to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Brother Winebrenner however admits that he did in substance write or say, that if brother West did not submit to the proper authorities, he should be so marked, as the apostle directs.

Third Charge.—"Brother Winebrenner has presented two distinct views and contradictory theories on the subject of licensing preachers, and both are represented to be correct at the same time." "In a letter written to brother Sherich, dated 15th January, 1846, he denies the right of the church to license preachers, and advocates the sole right of the Eldership to license;" "and in his Church View (pages 101 and 102) he advocates the right of the church to license; and on pages 138 and 139 he states, also, that by a Presbytery is not meant a church Judicatory, constituted of pastors and ruling elders from different congregations; and proceeds to say that such a body is unscriptural and sectarian."

In respect to this charge, your committee beg leave to say, by way of explanation, that brother Winebrenner holds that the Eldership has the sole right to license the preachers connected with and being members of that body; but does not deny the right of individual churches to give license to preachers of their congregations who are not connected with this Eldership; there is, in this view, therefore, no contradiction as is supposed.

And as respects the unlawfulness of church Judicatories alone maintianed, brother Winebrenner states, is to be considered and intended only to apply to such bodies or assemblies as undertake to legislate for and claim a right to execute discipline on all the members of different congregations belonging to them.—Such your committee think may be the construction put upon that part of the Church View above referred to, if, as brother Winebrenner states, that by the word Church Judicatory is only meant as he there intended law-making and discipline enforcing assemblies.

Your committee deeply regret the unhappy circumstances which gave rise to these existing difficulties; and whilst it is believed that brother West did not pursue a regular method to obtain his discharge, he is therefore censurable: and hence they recommend the adoption of the following resolution, to-wit:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Eldership, the course of brother West, in atempting to dissolve his connection with this body, has been irregular and subversive of our plan of co-operation. But inasmuch as the Eldership desires no further difficulty with this subject, and as he desires a disolution of his connection, it is therefore granted.

Committee on West's case:

E. H. THOMAS,
J. S. GABLE,
J. MACKEY.

TUESDAY MORNING—November 3d.

Session opened by the Speaker.

Journal's of Saturday and Monday read and adopted.

On motion, Resolved, That brother Winebrenner be requested to publish the funeral sermon of brother Joseph H. Bamberger in the "Church Advocate," or in any other way he thinks proper.

Elder F. N. Barlow reported by letter. His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother Bigham's case was considered.

On motion. referred to the Standing Committee.

Brother S. Conrad's case was brought up.

On motion, refered to the Standing Committee.

Elder GEORGE U. HARN reported as follows, viz:

Dearly esteemed fellow-laborers, and fellow-sufferers in the kingdom and patience of our Lord Jesus Christ: There has been no convocation of Elders of the "Churches of God" since I have had the unmerited honor of being identified with this justly reputable body, as a member and evangelist of it—that I so vehemently desired to be present at, as the one held in Lancaster city, one year ago. Circumstances and events of which I was unable to control, precluded the reasonable passibility of my doing so. However, I was much overjoyed to hear of your pleasing session. It was a cause of thanksgiving to God on my part.

I have also been no less anxious to meet you in your present deliberations.

1st. The place and people for whom I have always cultivated so high a regard, made it a pleasing anticipation. It was here I was rocked in my earliest, ministereal cradle; it was here that nursing fathers and nursing mothers fed me the sincere milk of Christian kindness, and kindly guarded my youthful steps, and bore in patience my many irregularities. And of that number I may justly mention your worthy speaker. So long as this heart throbs a pulsation, or this tongue is unpalsied or paralized in death, I trust I shall not forget to be greatful, very greatful, for the attention and gentle watchfulness he ever had over me.

2d. The opportunity of seeing your pleasing countenances, and listening to your wholesome advice and admonatory instruction, is shurely a pleasure to me. I am not able to estimate the prospect of which originated a restless anxiety to be with you.

Two years have now elapsed, or near it, since I met with you; during which time, many have been the changes among us. A pretty general account of my labors and deprivations you have had through the prayer since I went to the West. You there learned I have not been entirely idle, yet I have not done enough. Nay, this condemns me frequently. Yet I would wish no man to undergo what I do and have done.

In Pittsburg, when I went there, things were worse than bad. I was disappointed, and never wish to meet such a state of things again. Without any boast, I have the confidence of my auditors: they are not very many —our inconveniences being one the chief obstructions. When I left I was pleased to learn the prospects were better than for years past, if they only remain so till I return. Since here I got a letter, stating their social meetings were better than while I was there. They only number about sixteen actual members, and some five or six who participate in the ordinances, but have not yet been brought into the church. If it can be supplied without me, I desire it so, if not, I shall have to return till spring. My course, then, is not yet determined in my own mind. My desire is for the far West.

I am sorry for the course of some of my dear fellow-laborers in seperating themselves from the "Church of God," and others settling down in the world, as they have done and are doing. For my own part, I have never yet entertained the remotest idea of dismembering myself. The future may bring forth cause for me to change my mind and sentiments, now held by the churches, ministers and myself; but it surely will not form a seperation on my part, I fondly hope.

And as for the practice of some drawing back about this world's gain, I fear there is much dishonesty in the heart in many cases. When I fare worse than Paul, I may quit the ministry, and I think, few have undegone, more selfdenial in the cause of God.

If you please renew my license. For as our worthy deceased brother BAMBERGER used to say, "with you I wish to live, with you I wish to preach, pray and die;" and with you, him and all the elect of God, I wish to hymn the symphonies of Heaven.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

The committee on brother McFadden's case reported, viz:

1. Your committee on the case of brother McFadden and the Woodbury church report, that the difficulty was from a partial misunderstanding between brothers McFadden, Hipple and Diltz, relative to renting a house, as expressed in a letter from brother Hipple, dated Febuary 17th. Your committee thinks, that brother McFadden was justifiable in not taking the appointment (Woodbury) assigned him.

2. On the case of brother McFadden and J. Eicenhour.

Your committee report that for the want of sufficient testimony brother McFadden is clear of the charges prefered by brother Eicenhour.

WEDNESDAY MORNING—NOVEMBER 4TH.

Session opened by the SPEAKER. The Journal was read and corrected.

The Licensing Committee reported the following resolution:

Inasmuch as many good and worthy brethren have applied for license to preach, and as we consider these brethren could be useful in the churches in a lower sphere than performing all the functions of the Gospel ministry: We, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Eldership advice the following brethren, viz: SAMUEL HOOVER, JOHN S. OLIVER, MOSES UTLEY, ALFRED STOUGH, JACOB BERRINGEN, JAMES MACHLIN, and SAMUEL WALKER, to improve their minds by study, and to exercise their gift by way of public speaking, under the direction of the preachers or teachers in charge, for another year; and then if they see propel, they can apply again to this body for license.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Meeting opened by Elder W. McFADDEN.

The business of the printing establishment was resumed.

The committee on the printing establishment further state, that it appears from the statement made, that the debts of the establishment for which the board of Trustees are bound, amount to the sum of $4,745 36, which is exclusive of the amount due to brother J. WINEBRENNER, amounting to about $1,725

Therefore,

Resolved, That it be recommended to the board of Trustees, to settle and pay the above sum of $4,745 36, according to justice and equity, as their temporal circumstances will allow, the more wealthy taking the larger share and favoring the poorer brethren: and that the claim yet due to brother Winebrenner be settled and paid, by his being authorized to collect and keep as much more as he can of the relief subscription in Pennsylvania and Ohio, it being understood that nothing is to be collected by him from the brethren of the board of Trustees.

The balance after that, which remains due to brother Winebrenner, he is to look to the Eldership to make it good to him.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

A Teetotal Country.—Among the published laws of the City of Oregon we find the following:—

1. If any person shall hereafter import or introduce any ardent spirits into Oregon, with intent to sell, barter, give or trade the same, and shall offer the same for sale, trade, barter, or gift, he shall be fined the sum of fifty dollars for each and every offence, which may be recovered by indictment, or by trial before a justice of the peace, without the form of pleading.

2. If any person shall hereafter sell, barter, give, or trade any ardent spirits of any kind whatever, directly or indirectly, to any person within Oregon, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of twenty dollars for each and every such sale, trade, barter, or gift, to be recovered by indictment in the county court, or before a justice of the peace, without the form of pleading.

3. If any person shall hereafter establish or carry on any manufactory or distillery of ardent spirits in Oregon, he shall be subject to be indicted before the county court as for a nuisance; and, if convicted, he shall be fined the sum of one hundred dollars, and the court shall issue an order to the sheriff directing him to seize and destroy the distilling apparatus, which order the sheriff shall execute.

Coming Right.—The New York Convention, which assembled to revise the State Constitution, have by a vote of 77 to 33 erased the section of the old Constitution, excluding ministers of the Gospel from civil and military offices. Thus common sense is beginning to prevail over an absurd enactment. Certainly nothing but the greatest absurdity could ever ordain a law proscribing a man so long as he remains virtuous, upright, conscientious: but the moment he becomes a thief, a lier, or a drunkard, pronounces him fit for office! Yet such is the actual position assumed by the restrictive clause of most of the Constitutions of the States. No one will contend that ministers of the Gospel ought ordinarily to accept, much less seek such offices. But none except the sheerest tyrrany can enact laws which deny them the common rights of all good, and indeed of most bad citizens. We trust, therefore, the example of New York will soon be followed by her sister states.

Forbidden Marriages.—At the late meeting of the Presbytery of Louisville, the case of a man who had married his deceased wife's sister came up by way of the church sessions, and the Presbytery, by an almost unanimous vote, excluded him from the church. They passed a standing rule some years since directing the sessions to take this course with all such cases.

Proposed Liberty Paper.—The "Liberty Party" are about to establish a newspaper at Washington, to operate on a great scale. John Q. Adams, Mr. Giddings, and all the great spirits, are said to be interested. The plan is to raise a fund by subscription, of $20,000 a year, for three years, it is thought, will be sufficient.—A considerable portion of this large sum, we are told, is already pledged.

Splendid Bequest.—Isaac Franklin, of Sumter county, Tennessee, has bequeathed nearly $600,000 to the endowment of a Seminary upon his estate, for the education of the poor of his country. He commenced his life a Mississippi boatman, died worth a million, and has imperishably registered his name as a great philanthropist by his munificent bequest.

Potato Disease.—Some farmers have become quite confident that shell lime is a cure or preventative of the potato disease. Patches limed have been sound this year, while other patches all around, not limed, have perished. No other difference was known between them.

Biennial Sessions.—This question was voted on at the late election in Maryland. It appears from the official vote as stated by the Annopolis Republican that the majority in the whole State in favor of the Bill, is 4,655. If confirmed by the next Legislature, it will be a law.

Whooping Cough.—A tea-spoonful of castor oil to a table-spoonful of molasses; a tea-spoonful of the mixture to be given whenever the cough is troublesome. It will afford relief at once, and in a few days it effects a cure. The same remedy relieves the croup, however violent the attack.

Ship Railroad.—It is now said that a treaty has been made for the construction of a railroad, by an English and French company, to unite the Atlantic and Pacific, over the Isthmus of Panama. This looks more rational than the canal project.

Requisition.—The President of the U. States has issued his requisition on the Governor of Pennsylvania for ten companies of volunteers, amounting to about one thousand men, for the Mexican War.

Hospitality.—A colporteur in Missouri during the last year travelled about 3,400 miles, and was not charged a cent for lodging and horse feed.

☞ Crop of Indian Corn in the West for 1846, it is said will be more than 500,000,000 of bushels. The crop of wheat will exceed 140,000,000 of bushels,

☞ By an act of the Oregon Legislature, wheat is a lawful tender, in payment of debts or taxes, at the market prices.

☞ Twelve hundred and thirty-four miles of Magnetic Telegraph are reported to be in actual operation in the United States.

☞ Only two towns in the State of Rhode Island have granted license to sell intoxicating liquors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Rich Man and Lazarus: Not a Parable.

BY M. HALE SMITH.

The scripture recording the death and the destiny of both the rich man and Lazarus [Luke XVI. 19—31.] is not a parable. The following reasons seem conclusively to prove that the Saviour when relating those fearful truths, was talking facts and not fictions.

1. The scripture in question is destitute of those marks by which every parable, spoken by the Saviour, is distinguished. Most of them began. "And he spake a parable"—or, "The kingdom of heaven is likened." And so general is this, that the most unlettered man need not err. Not so with the passage referred to. Christ does not assert that he was speaking a parable. He likens it to nothing. Nothing is likened to it. He explains no general truth by it. In no part of the Bible, at any time, is it alluded to as a parable.—On the contrary Christ most solemnly affirms that "there was a certain rich man," that there was also a "certain beggar, named Lazarus;" that both died—that one after death lifted up his eyes being in torments—and that the other was conveyed by angels into Abraham's bosom, a confidential seat in heaven. And it indicates no common presumption to deny this affirmation and assert that such men did not exist—that such a destiny did not await each after death.

II. If this scripture is a parable, no man ever did know, no man ever can know, without a special revelation, what it was intended to teach. Many of the parables spoken by our Saviour, convey most momentous truths. He has not left men to make the application, but in most cases has minutely explained them. See the parables of the sower, the wheat and tares, as an illustration.

But in what place has Christ explained the parable of the rich man, if it be a parable? To what has He referred it? What does it teach? If it was necessary so minutely to explain the parable of the sower, was it not necessary to explain the passages before us? Christ has not done so. Either then it was a relation of what actually transpired, or it is to us an unmeaning scripture, one that we cannot understand.

III. A parable differs from a fiction in this, that an actual event of circumstances is made the medium to communicate, or illustrate, some other truth. While a fiction is an event, that never transpired; a case supposed, or invented, which never existed in fact. Christ spake parables, but not fictions.

It was a truth that men went forth to sow; that women put leven into meal; that men in journeying from Jerusalem to Jericho, had fallen among thieves. And known facts were selected by the Saviour to enforce the truth which he preached.—He employed no fiction. There was no necessity for his doing thus. There was truth enough in the world to illustrate the gospel, and Christ knew all truth.

If the rich man and Lazarus is not a history, neither is it a parable. It is a fiction. It proves that for once guile was in the mouth of the Son of God. It stands alone: spoken, so far as we are concerned, without purpose. What event this side the grave compares with, or answers to it? Who have ever so lived, or so died? Who have ever been so circumstanced as to ask relief in this life, and have it denied on the ground that in their life time they chose their portion with the lost? If this scripture is not a history, it is a fiction, unexplained, without meaning.

IV. Those who call this history a parable, to escape the truth it contained, can offer no explanation that will bear the test of examination. It is said to be a description of the Jews and Gentiles. If this be true, then as the Gentiles exchanged places with the Jews, one of them only died: while the other being already morally dead came forth to life. But the fact is that both the rich man and Lazarus were alive at the same time. Both died. The one went to a place of torment, the other by angels was carried to heaven. In no age have the Jews ever sent such a request, as the rich man makes, when he said, "send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue."—Nor if they had, in those words, asked for spiritual blessings, could they have been refused on the ground that there was "a great gulph fixed?" The Jews can, if they will, reach the kingdom of God, and Christians can go to the Jews to carry the blessings of salvation, and to relieve.

Nor can "the gulph" be unbelief. That can be passed. Jews have been converted and Gentiles have apostatised, showing either that the gulph is not unbelief, or that there can be passing from the one world to the other over it. If the rich man be a type of the house of Israel, then could he have no father's house, to which Lazarus could be sent, nor any brethren exposed to that place of torment, as all must have been with him in that condemnation.

V. The imagery found in his history does not destroy the truth illustrated. In no case does the embelishment destroy the thing embellished. The descriptions of heaven, found in the Bible, are clothed with drapery. We read of the walls of heaven; its gates; its streets of gold--its trees and its rivers. No reasonable man would call such descriptions a parable, because around them such drapery was flung. No one can be ignorant of the fact that in the time of the Saviour the Jews believed in endless punishment. The figures here introduced were such as the Jews employed to express their faith upon that subject.—Christ added to their opinion in the anguish of the rich man. Jews thought that Hades was a place of endless silence and gloom, but he taught that it was a place of exquisite torment. The Jews also thought that no Jew could be exposed to that doom. But the Saviour removed this notion by taking one of their number, whom Abraham acknowledged to be a son, places him in that relm of despair, and assures him that relief and escape are both impossible.

VI. The doctrine taught in this history is chiefly this—that beyond the grave are two worlds, heaven, and hell; that men are in their life-time fitting for the one or the other; that at death they will enter upon the joy of heaven, or the woe of hell, as they have or have not done good; that the destiny of men is fixed at death, that all that anguish, pain, and torment, is to the body the punishment of hell will be to the soul; and all who are cast into hell, will find no relief, no ercape; and that all the work we have to do, must be done in this life. The blessed go not from heaven, on an errand of mercy to the lost. The lost pass not from their dreary abode, to the regions of the blessed. "And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed; so that they which would pass to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence." Let him that readeth, understand.—Congregational Journal.

GO AND DO IT.—"How," said the Rev. Mr. MURSEL to Mr. YATES, "do you accomplish so much in so short a time? have you any particular plan?" "I have," said Mr. YATES, "I have. When I have any thing to do, I go and do it." So say we, "Go and do it."

☞ A great woman not imperious, a fair woman not vain, a woman of common talents not jealous, an accomplished woman who scorns to shine—are four wonders just enough to be divided among the four quarters of the globe.

Omission.

The appointments for Cumberland circuit were omitted in the Journal of the East Pa. Eldership. This is attributable to some oversight in the Transcribing Clerk, as they were not entered on the Protocol, or manuscript Journal. Bishops A. Swartz and J. H. Hubley were appointed to said circuit.

Meeting of Congress.

The next session of Congress commences on Monday next. It will be a short one—terminating on the 3d of March ensuing.

Bishop G. U. Harn on Feet-Washing.

This excellent work is now nearly ready for delivery. It is got up in a neat little volume, at twenty-five cents per copy.

It is both didactic and polemic in its character; and it is necessarily so, in part at least, from the nature of the subject discussed or treated on. The author, we think, has treated the subject candidly, fairly and logically. The reader will find more than Harn's ipse dixit. He will find that he has endeavored to establish and carry his positions with fair and manly arguments; without resort to sophistry, bombast and hard dogmatism. This is just as it should be. No man, with a good cause, need use any thing but fair and sound reasoning to insure success in carrying his point. The use of sophistry and bombast indicates both a bad cause and a bad heart.

In the treatise in question, the reader will find, in our opinion, a strong array of sound and fair arguments, in defence of a plain scriptural ordinance, which has fallen into shameful and criminal disuse among carnal, proud and corrupt professors of every age, since the days of the apostles. But he will also find, from a very respectable catalogue of historical testimony, that the ordinance of Feet-washing was uniformly and strictly observed by the "faithful and true," in every age and clime, since the memorable night of its first institution.

We commend it to the Christian public as worthy of a careful perusal. We ask the clergy, in particular, to examine this subject, and to follow the precept and example of Christ.

Delinquents.

Between three and four hundred of our subscribers are still found on the list of delinquents. As they failed to comply with our terms, within the first three months, their papers were discontinued at the expiration of that period; and, accordingly, they now stand charged with sixty-two and a-half cents.

Some two or three hundred have paid up for the volume, since the end of the first quarter, and have had the back numbers sent on to them. If the remainder of our delinquents will do the same, their back numbers shall be forwarded in like manner. But if not, we shall instruct our agents to exact and collect the sixty-two and a-half cents for the first quarter. We hope, therefore, what they intend doing, they will do quickly.

Capture of Tobasco.

The United States squadron, under commodore Perry, has captured Tobasco, a Mexican town of some note.

Board of Trustees.

The Board of Trustees of the Printing Establishment met in Mechanicsburg, according to appointment, on Thursday the 19th ult.

They organized by appointing Bishop J. ROSS, Chairman; and Mr. J. Seiler, Esq., Clerk.

A letter from brother D. Lingle was received, and ordered to be read. After some remarks on its contents, it was laid on the table.

The amount of claims against the Board were then made out, and found to amount to $5,133 10.

The Board next proceeded to make out an apportionment of this amount, among its members, in accordance with the resolution of the late Eldership.

The members present, who had not the money to pay their apportionment, gave their notes for the amount. The members who were absent will be called on shortly to do the same.

Thus, then, this part of the indebtedness of the establishment has been decreed to be settled up; not, perhaps, willingly, or justly, but from necessity.

The better plan, in our opinion, would have been to have laid a tax, and required every member to pay in proportion to his wealth.

Such a plan would have been, at least, in strict accordance with justice and equity; and to justice and equity, no Christian ought to object.

The balance of the debt, due to ourselves and others, is to be raised by voluntary subscriptions.

We hope, then, if it must needs be so, that twenty-four brethren will have to pay upwards of five thousand dollars, that the whole church will not hesitate to liquidate the balance, which is less than the one-half of what the twenty-four Trustees have to pay.

It is true there are about three thousand dollars yet due on the subscription list for the Gospel Publisher, which, if collected, will be divided among the members of the Board. Yet this is all involved in uncertainty.

But inasmuch as we have been thrown, by this new arrangement, upon the benevolence and sympathy of the Eldership, and the brethren of the church at large, we feel content to look to them, and to trust them for the full and faithful adjustment of the claim due to us.

It is surely a small matter now to have this whole concern settled up in a short time, if the members of the church will only agree to do what is right, and help to bear a common burden, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Will the brethren in the West fall to work anew, and lend us a helping hand to get this matter settled up? Come, brethren, stand up for the help of your brethren in the East, and see what you can do between this and next spring.

Thanksgiving Day.

Our citizens generally suspeneded all business transactions, and observed the day as becometh orderly and Christian people. We heard Bishop McFadden deliver a very appropriate discourse from the text: "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and His wonderful works to the children of men!" Ps. 107: 31.

The missionary collection, recommended by the Eldership, was taken up, and was reasonably good. The most that gave at all, gave pieces of silver; though some of them were rather small, we are informed, for a thanksgiving missionary collection.

There were some of the "Churches of God," we have since learnt, held no meetings, and of course took up no collection, in conformity to the recommendation of the Eldership.—Now to make this matter work equally, as well as efficiently, we hope that those churches will yet attend to the matter at an early day. If we go in for co-operation, let us go hand in hand in all things; and what we do, let us do it heartily, as to the Lord.

Optical Operation.

Dr. A. Miller, of this borough, has been very successful, we were informed, in operating upon the eye for the cure of Strabismus or squinting. This defect lies mainly in an irregular contraction of the optic axis, or muscles of the eye; which, by skillful Surgical operation, can be cured. Those who are afflicted with Strabismus, would do well to give Dr. Miller a call.

Eldership Journals.

In this number of our paper will be found the Journals of both the Ohio and West Pa. Eldership. We hope they will be found interesting and profitable to all our readers. Peace, harmony and prosperity, it would seem, prevails in all their borders. May this blessing continue, and increase yet more and more.

Snow-Storm.

We had a considerable storm and fall of snow on the 25th of last month. The weather was very cold for a few days, but since that it has been mild and pleasant.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

"Jesus Wept."—St. John xi. 35.

In ancient times, in a small village of Judea, named Bethany, were three disciples whom Jesus loved with all the tender and filial attachment of which His nature was capable.—He loved them because they were faithful to Him; because, amid all the persecutions and dangers which threatened Him on all sides, they remained His constant and unfailing friends. Though their devotion to Him and His cause frequently indueed them to peril their lives; though they were disearded by many of their Jewish friends; yet they left nothing undone that might in the least contribute to His happiness or convenience. Indeed such was the attachment of Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, to the Saviour, that on a certain occasion she anointed His feet with the most costly ointment, and wiped them with the hair of her head. Thus did these disciples minister to the wants of their blessed Master, and they found ample consolation for their trouble in the consciousness that Jesus loved them. But as is frequently the case with the most zealous and devoted Christians, while in the midst of their enjoyments, and perhaps while counting on a long and useful life, death came and destroyed their brightest hopes, by rudely snatching one member from this little family.

Lazarus had taken sick and died. As soon as Jesus heard of this sad event, though He was some distance from the place, He bent His course thither, fully determined to manifest the love He bore to Mary and Martha, by raising Lazarus from the dead. As soon as Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she ran to meet Him, and in the language of deep affliction she exclaimed: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." He endeavored to console her, by assuring her that Lazarus should be raised again; but she did not rightly understand Him. When they had come to the house where a great many of their friends had assembled to comfort them in their distress, Mary, as soon as she saw the Saviour, fell down at His feet, and weeping exclaimed, in the language of her sister: "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." So affecting was the scene, that the Jews themselves were brought to weep. Jesus looked upon this melancholy scene and wept. So great was the love of the Saviour that He wept, which caused the Jews that stood around to say: "See how He loved him." "Jesus wept." O, what a theme for consideration! Jesus, the Prince of glory, Lord of Heaven and earth, and Governor of the Universe, was so ardently attached to His disciples that He wept. He wept not like a man, but like a God. O the boundless, inexhaustible love of God, which induced Him to leave His princely throne, and all the enjoyments of Heaven, that He might remove the curse which for ages rested upon all the descendants of apostate Adam! This shows strictly how intimately the Saviour was connected with His disciples; how He sympathized with them in their distress; and, though He was the Son of God, yet He was subject to all the sufferings and frailties of human nature, sin only excepted. Thus we find Him through all the stages of His eventful life, manifesting the same kind and human attention to the sufferings of the human family. And no matter how they treated Him, though despised and ridiculed on every side, yet His only reproof was breathed in love. Though He was repeatedly expelled from the Jewish synagogues, and threatened with all manner of evil, yet when coming up to Jerusalem, on a certain occasion, He stopped before the city, and for a moment surveyed its gorgeous temples, princely palaces and stately dwellings, adorned with the most costly decorations of art; and when recollecting the curse which had been pronounced upon it, that the time should come when of all that mighty city, not one stone should be left upon another, He wept; and in anguish of soul for the ill-fated city, He cried out: "If thou hadst known, even thou at least in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Thus we find that His whole life was one continued scene of suffering and mental anguish. Hence it has been said of Him, that He was frequently seen to weep, but never to laugh. His extreme sensitiveness, to the woes and misfortunes of others, was the prolific course of all His suffering. For be it remembered, that the Saviour never wept because He was ridiculed and despised, and treated with base ingratitude, by the world He came to redeem, but He wept because they would not receive His mission of mercy. He wept for the sufferings of others, but not for Himself. How suitable, therefore, was the Saviour for the sacred office of mediator between an offended God and a guilty world, and an intercessor for the righteous before the court of Heaven. We may rejoice with the ancient apostle, "that we have a High Priest that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." Yes, if sorrow and weeping can ever enter the precincts of Heaven, Jesus Himself weeps, when He sees His humble followers, the scorn and contempt of a giddy world. But how deeply must His feelings be wounded when one of His little flock falls a victim to the enemy, or is lead astray by the seductions of the world. Hence He pleads earnestly with His Father to forgive the erring Christian, and through the intercession of Christ he is forgiven. O what an intercessor has the Christian! One who not only knows his wants, but feels deeply his afflictions. Yes, He feels that intense anguish which frequently rends the soul of the Christian. Hence He said once to the persecuting Jews: "Whatsoever ye do to the least of my disciples, ye do to me." And is it possible that Christ can be persecuted in the Christian, and yet not feel with him? No, thank Heaven, we have an advocate who will not readily condemn, but intercede and pray for us. On His protection, therefore, we may rely amid all the changes of life, in the trying hour of death, and with Him reign through the unnumbered ages of eternity.

The Dying Christian.

In life, when health and happiness attend him, the professed infidel may treat the subject of religion with proud contempt, and despise the company of the humble Christian; he may profane the name of God, which to the Christian is the most sacred and awful name that human lips can utter; but when disease begins to rack his system, and death approaches, 'tis then his confidence begins to fail, and he sees, when too late, that he has been fearfully deceived. But not so with the Christian. Death is to him a final and glorious triumph. In it he sees the completion of all his difficulties. And this is what bears him up amid all the conflicting scenes of human life. He stems the current of vice with energy and resolution; and though the storm is hard and the waves of adversity rise mountain high, and every moment threaten to swallow up his little bark; yet, like a skilful pilot, he keeps his eye constantly fixed upon the port, and as he nears the dark and still more boisterous sea of death, he fears it not. He looks upon its raging surface with pleasure, and finally, under the protection of a higher power, he launches his little bark upon its rolling billows, rejoicing that he has left forever the shores of mortality. It has been said by some that death has terrors, even to the Christian; that the pain caused by the separation of the soul from the body is intense; that it is almost beyond human endurance; so great indeed, say they, that it will cause the Christian himself to tremble as he stands upon the confines of the grave. But I believe that

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downey pillows are."

Yes, He has already disarmed death of its terrors, by assuring the Christian that His grace shall be sufficient. Hence it is that the Christian can die so calm. Enter the room of the dying Christian, and while friends and relations are weeping around his bed, you see a Heavenly smile play upon his face; his whole countenance becomes radiant with glory, and you almost imagine he is already an angel.—O how I love to see a Christian die! To see him, while in the agonies of death, and on the confines of another world, relying implicitly on the promises of God, as a child would on the promises of an earthly parent, exhorting his friends not to weep for him, but to meet him in Heaven. While gazing upon this scene, we are led to exclaim with the enraptured poet:

"O 'tis a glorious boon to die,
This favor can't be prized too high."

The Death of Young Children.

The departure of a little child, for a better world, creates in the minds and feelings of its parents (particularly so, when the first-born or only child) melancholy and painful sensations, notwithstanding the blessed assurances of Christ, who said to his followers: (Matt. xix. 14, 15,) "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come to me; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

The pious and resigned parents, however, will, in its true sense, consider the dispensation of Divine Providence as a blessing; and, however painful may have been the thought of parting with the unconscious, undefiled, and spotless innocent; yet it is a sweet reflection, and an unspeakable consolation, to know that the little one is a happy angel in the kingdom of its Heavenly Father.

Again: When the unerring grasp of Death removes an idolized young creature from the side of the unconcerned, the ignorant, or the worldly parent, its departure will spread a powerful influence—a deep-felt inquiry—over the hearts and minds of those who loved it but too well; and not unfrequently has such an event been the means of leading to the fold of God, the wandering mother and the prodigal sire.

A contributor to an English Magazine beautifully remarks: "The sinless soul of the cherub child, that dies on its mother's breast, wings its way to Heaven, unconscious of the joys it might share here, as also of the many, many miseries of which it might be partaker. This can hardly be called Death. It is but the calm, soft ebbing of the gentle tide of life, to flow no more in the troubled ocean of existence,—it is but the removal of a fair creature,—'too pure for earthly stay'—to make one of that bright band of cherubims, which encompass in glory and in joy, the throne of the living God."

But, happy as the change may be, it is certainly painful to the mother, to part with her "fair-haired" offspring. Her mind, naturally, recalls every word of prattle,—every look of delight,—the fond kiss, and affectionate embrace; and with a melancholy pleasure she dwells ever upon the memory of her departed child.

Although Sabbath-schools are intended for the benefit of the young, yet they do not fail to prove more or less beneficial to the aged and middle aged. But the benefit of the latter, generally speaking, is derived by giving instruction to the former; while the benefit of the former is derived by receiving instruction from the latter. Thus, you perceive, that teachers, as well as scholars, are profited in these schools. The notion, then, that children, or the scholars alone, are benefitted by this institution, is incorrected; for every person of the least experience in this matter, knows that while in the act of imparting lessons of instruction on any given subject, the tutor, as well as the pupil, often times receives additional light. Let not those, then, who have ability to teach, hereafter excuse themselves from becoming teachers, as is often done, on the ground that their labor, as teachers, would be of no advantage to themselves.

Seeing, then, teachers of Sabbath-schools share with the scholars, in the benefits flowing from this institution, those who have children derive a two-fold interest by engaging in the great work as teachers. And those who have no children, if, for no other reason, they should take an active part in these nurseries of the young, because thereby they can improve, instruct and enlighten, to a great degree, their own mental capacities. But who, I ask, that has the moral law engraved upon the table of his heart, to "do to others as you wish to be done by," could refrain from making every effort in this laudable enterprize, on the ground that, peradventure, no personal or self-interest could be derived from it, since the benefits arising to children from a faithful and assiduous course of teaching, is so indiscribably great. But, you that are not parents of children, rest assured that, although you are not benefitted in this respect, yet you have your benefit by faithfully doing your duty as a teacher, in obtaining additional light and knowledge, while you are in the praise-worthy act of imparting wholesome instruction to the young and rising generation, in having that source of gratification that you are doing your duty, in and to a cause that sprang from and approbated by the Great God of Heaven; and in that you shall finally be crowned in Heaven, with the great and unspeakable reward, belonging to those who engage in "every good work and word."

Dear brother W., I have furnished you with a few lines more on this highly important subject, not for any good that I have done, nor yet for self-applause; but purely, I trust, for the glory of God. Amen.

A LOVER OF SABBATH-SCHOOS.

Letter from Elder M. A. Cook.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

In pursuance of the action of the West Pa. Eldership of 1845, I started from home, (as a missionary) Beaver county, Pa., on the 12th of last April, to Athens county, Ohio, to brother Seth Richmond's neighborhood, where I preached five times to crowded audiences. Every attention was manifest, and my labors evidently were not in vain. From here I went to Canaan township, same county, and spent two weeks in preaching and visiting from house to house. I was well received, and the folks, consisting of Methodists, U. Brethren, Baptists, Free-Wills and Regulars, were wonderfully taken with the plain biblical doctrine which I endeavored (although in much weakness, God being my helper) to hold forth to them. It sounded to them as something new at first; but they soon recognized it to be as old as Christianity itself.

From this I travelled to Decatur township, Washington county, Ohio. Here I found brother John Galloway, lately from Westmoreland, Pa. I found him and family well, and preached once in his house.

Bidding farewell to brother and sister Galloway, I journeyed to Wood and Ritchie counties, Virginia. Here I discovered a rough, untutored and almost uncivilized part of the human family. However, this did not deter me from stopping among them; for I remained ten days preaching the Word in season and out of season; and I thank my good Master that, although there were no actual conversions, in the common acceptation of the term, yet it had this good effect, that many were goaded to the heart, and warmly solicited my return on the same merciful errand.—From here I travelled through Tyler and Greene counties, Pa., preaching as I went along, wherever I could obtain places to hold forth.

Arriving at Lappo township, in the latter county, I met brothers G. U. Harn and J. Hickernell, at the church which was planted last year by the efficient labors of brother D. Wertz. I remained with them during the protraction of their meeting, and saw good done in the name of the Holy Child Jesus.

From here we wrote to the brethren in Athens county, Ohio, that we would hold a camp-meeting for them on the coming 6th of August. This was done by the special request of the Athens county friends and brethren.

I stayed at home about ten days; then on the 5th of July I bid them farewell, and arrived in the evening at father Karner's, in Allegheny city. Having paid a visit to brother Meyer's, who then was still in poor health, I went to attend an evening meeting in the old court house of Pittsburg. Here I listened to an interesting sermon by brother G. U. Harn. I closed the meeting by a short exhortation, and then shook hands with several of the little flock, scattered through these crowded smokey cities.

On the 6th I bid adieu to my Pittsburg friends, in order to meet, as previously appointed, brother John Hickernell, at Lappo Church, Greene connty, Pa.

From here brother Hickernell and I went into the edge of Virginia, (some new county) and held a meeting, which commenced on Friday and lasted until Monday. Here the Word was preached with power and with the result, that we, upon the earnest solicitations of the people, agreed and concluded to return and hold another meeting.

From here I journeyed to the Middle Island creek, Tyler county, Virginia, where, after I had labored for some days, I received the following note:—

"Dear Brother:—I send you all the change I have got, which is fifty cents; and eighteen and three-fourth cents my son Jonathan also sent to you. Please receive it from me, as it may so happen you cannot get to Mr. Nutter's to-morrow night, and this will pay your bill at some other place. May the good Lord bless you and all your labors, for I think you have been a benefit to my children, as they talk more about you than any other preacher that has preached here for a long time. O, if you should be instrumental in the hands of God of snatching one of my offsprings from the eternal burnings, how should I rejoice that God has directed you into the neighborhood!

"While writing, John Roberts, my son, sends you five cents; also, Wm. Weakly, twelve and a-half cents; Cable Wells gives five cents. All these are young sinners that never gave anything towards the support of the Gospel before. Brother Cook, pray for them; for I hope they are all under conviction. I will not yet close my lines to you. Miss Bathsheba Williams sends ten cents to help you on your journey. So I bid you farewell. May the Lord help you in your labor.

"JOHN IRELAND."

"Brother Cook."

From here I went to Goose creek, Ritchie county, and preached twice. Then I made my way towards the Athenian camp-meeting, in Ohio, where I arrived on the 31st of July, previous to the 6th of August, on which our camp was to commence. On Saturday I went to brother Chase's, in Alexander township, where I preached in the evening and Lord's day, in the meeting house belonging to a Free-Will Baptist church. Here the prospects were very flattering. This church immediately evinced a desire to unite with the brethren; that is, the whole congregation, en masse. At this instance I promised them a protracted meeting after camp, provided I could get some of the other ministers to aid me.

Of the proceedings of the Athenian camp—the organization of the church there—you have been informed by brother Harn and others before now.

After this camp-meeting, according to previous promise, condition and arrangement, brothers Wertz, Hickernell, Richmond and myself, held the protracted meeting at the Free-Will Babtist church, at brother Chase's. This meeting lasted nearly a week, with the evidence that God was with us. Love and union seemed to prevail among the members of the different churches that attended. The people heard the Word, and that gladly; and we closed the meeting here with satisfaction to ourselves, and with much good, undoubtedly to Christians and others, who were in attendance.

At this meeting I was advised by the other ministers to repair to Adams county, Ohio, as soon as I could after this meeting. I also had received a call to preach in Meigs county. I concluded to preach in the latter on my journey to Adams, where I sent an appointment. However, in Meigs county things did not turn out so favorable at first, as I could have desired. I got embarrassed in consequence of them having located the several appointments I sent on, so far apart; whereas I had meant to have had them at one place. I left chagrined, and not a little discouraged. However, the sequel has proven that it was not so fruitless as I had imagined. For they since sent an earnest request for me to return and labor, which I have also done of late. Now we had a good time. I had a four-day meeting there. Souls were converted, backsliders reclaimed, lukewarm ones revived, and old veterans infused with new life and hope.

In Adams county I found matters partly encouraging, and partly to the contrary. A considerable number of brethren and sisters had moved to this country, from Scrubgrass, Venango county, Pa., some three or four years since. Here they were organized into a church, and partly ministered to by a certain man named C. M., one among themselves.—But this person, becoming disaffected, left the church, united with the "Disciples," and is now trying to injure the church by asserting that the preachers of the "Church of God" have a discipline abstract from the New Testament. I found the church here considerably distracted—brought on, no doubt, by the malign influence the aforesaid individual endeavored to exercise over them. However, after all, if they had a stated ministry; that is, an efficient one, I think that the church would improve. After laboring in that part of God's moral vineyard for several days, I organized a new church of thirteen members. Brother Hartman, ruling elder.

After remaining about one month and preaching twenty-four times, I returned to Athens county, where I, in Alexander township, received the aforesaid Free-Will Baptist church into full fellowship, with the brethren and Eldership of the "Church of God" in North America. May the peace of God be with them now and forever. Amen.

Here I will endeavor to close my epistle, and no longer trespass on your patience, by merely telling that preachers are needed throughout the western country. For I sincerely believe, had we but missionaries to send out, we could soon speed the cause of God's church through all the length and breadth of the western States. Young men of zeal, and love for their Master and the souls of their fellow-beings, is what we want. Deny yourselves, take up the cross, and come out from the eastern Eldership. God will reward you, in some way or other, which you, peradventure, do not see now. O ye of little faith! cast all your care on Him, whose promises are yea and amen.

I have got home, after an absence from my family of four months. I found them well, and intend starting soon again to the last-named place and church.

No more, but remain

Your fellow-laborer,

In the Gospel,

M. W. COOK.

Letter from Brother George Diltz.

Woodbury, Pa., Sept. 9, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I have promised to write one or more letters for the Church Advocate, and accordingly I will now undertake to fulfil my promises. It has often been the feeling of my heart to communicate a few lines for the readers of the Advocate; still I left it undone, from a sense of my incompetency for the task. However, such as I have shall I give. It has not been the study of my mind what to write on, but how to write to make it acceptable to the readers. The subject on which I intend now to write, has been on my mind ever since the good Lord has opened by blind eyes. After God, in his mercy, opened my eyes, I could see wherein I had offended my God, when I lived in sin and folly; and I seen that God's mercy was so great toward me, in saving my soul from sin and hell, that I have every reason to humble myself before Him, and live in thankfulness to Him, while I live in the world.

Among the many ways of sinning against God, dressing, in the appearance of haughtiness and pride, is one as common, perhaps, as any other that could be named. This is the subject to which I shall principally confine this letter.

But in the outset I would here remark, that I do not put religion in clothing, neither would I wish to be understood that pride exists alone in dress. And I would also wish to be understood, that I have no allusion to the world or the people that profess no religion. I am not at all astonished to see this foolish and silly practice among them; but I am much astonished sometimes, and my feelings very much mortified, too, when I see professors of religion lay such a stumbling block in the way of sinners.

I do not wonder so much to see this practice in churches, who do not believe in experimental religion, because they who do not believe in it, know nothing about it; and so of course they have never become humble in heart. But those who will say that God hath cleansed their hearts from all that is sinful, and given them the meek and lowly spirit of Christ our Saviour; when such come, dressed in all the fashions, and vanity, and pride of the world; such things I do not believe in. And I am much afraid that such are deceiving their souls.

But I wish to bring this matter still closer home. I am sometimes caused to study and wonder, when I see and behold that this unbecoming practice for Christians is also in the "Church of God." The "Church of God," so called, is a body of people that take the Bible for the man of counsel, and as a rule of faith and practice. Now, I say the Bible forbids all appearance of evil. I say I can prove by the Bible, that those members who follow the fashions are doing wrong, from the fact that the Bible teaches humility. And, moreover, the Bible requires that we should give a good example, that sinners may see and believe that there is a reality in religion, and turn to God and seek the salvation of their souls.

If ministers and professors of religion dress in splendor and grandeur, they may preach to, and pray for, sinners for days and years; but poor sinners will not profit by it, because they believe them to be proud. A few weeks ago, one of our neighbor women came home from a Methodist camp-meeting, and I heard her say that she never saw so much pride coming forward to the Lord's table, as she did that day. Now this woman thought these people were proud, and what caused her to call these people proud, nothing but the gay dresses in which they appeared. Now I have no doubt, had she of asked every one of these people, individually, the question, are you a proud person, they would all have answered, No. If, then, professors of religion consider pride disgraceful, and are ashamed of it, they ought also to be ashamed to carry the very sign of pride on their mortal bodies of dust. O my brethren, be ashamed of the ensigns of pride and vanity, and become plain in your dress, so that sinners may no longer stumble over you!

Preachers, also, who pretend to say that they are sent from God to preach the Gospel of the meek and lowly Jesus, are found guilty of going to extremes in dress. Brethren, if God has ever called you to preach, you ought to be very careful to do all that lays in your power to save souls from ruin. I believe that preachers could do much more good with the same preaching, if they would dress reasonably plain, and then preach pride down. But I am sorry to say, that sometimes they preach more in favor of grand-dressing than against it. My dear brethren, these things ought not so to be. Remember, there is a Judge of the quick and dead; and hence we should be careful what we do.

I have not written this letter for the name of having written a letter, but for the good of my brethren and sisters. If you still intend to go on in this practice of hateful and unbecoming dressing in the eyes of God and man, and still let sinners stumble over you, down to destruction, then when you appear at the bar of God, and should be so unhappy as to be cast into outer darkness yourselves on account of it, you will remember that here in this world you had once saw and read a letter which warned you of this evil; but you cared not for it.

I mean none but those who go to extremes. I am in favor myself of neat and clean dressing; but let that be plain.

I hope that all professors of religion, that may think this letter worth reading, will also think it worth a few serious thoughts, and be lead to a little self-examination.

Your brother, &c.,

GEORGE DILTZ.

A Visit to Washington County.

Brother Winebrenner:—

Elder Mellinix and myself attended several protracted meetings on his (Washington county) circuit, week before and last week. At Catsdin school-house, near Wolfsville, there was one person converted. The weather was rainy three days of the meeting. Two funeral sermons were preached during its progress. The next was held in Harbaugh's Valley, at brother Samuel Flegle's. No converts, but one person was baptized. I had the pleasure of visiting Broad Fording and preaching there, while brother M. stopped at brother John George's, (while unwell) till I returned. I was much pleased with the Fording. I think it would be a beautiful cite for a town. The brethren there have a good meeting house.—Elders McCormick and Bean live there—and I understand that neither of them wears out his license by preaching much. Some men get license and stay at home—and others get license to stay at home, when they would go out to do good. We had meeting at brother George's. This seems to be a kind family—but I say it not only of them, because they are rich; but must say the same of all we stopt with. Our journey was very agreeable, excepting that brother Mullinix was sick every day, with the ague, which threw nearly all the labor upon myself. Had there been some one to assist at our first meeting, I believe there would have been a revival of some consequence, as there was quite a favorable state of feeling. A young Methodist preacher attended the last night, and upon my inviting him (through one of the brethren) to take a seat in the stand and close the meeting, he replied: "I feel a delicacy to do so, as I am among my friends;" and refused. I know not his motives in acting so, but suppose he was afraid his character would suffer, by assisting us to do good! I never saw the roads injured so badly by the rains as they are in the hilly country every where. We passed through a great many, villages; and I am utterly astonished that the brethren preach in so few of them. Many school-houses could be got in those towns, were application made for them.

Yours, &c.,

J. F. WEISHAMPEL.

Baltimore, Nov. 19, 1846.

Elder Price and his Charge.

Brother Winebrenner:—

It has been suggested to the "Church of God" at Baltimore, that a wrong impression was made upon the minds of the Eldership, assembled a few weeks ago at Mechanicsburg, by the letters addressed to them by the said church:

Therefore, the church has authorized me to say, through the Church Advocate, that they did not wish to be understood as undervaluing the ministerial labors of Elder C. Price, or any of the preachers who have labored here heretofore; but, that on the contrary, the church is satisfied with his labors, and would have been willing to receive him back another year, had he been sent by the Eldership.

In the name of the church,

J. F. WEISHAMPEL,

One of the Elders of the first congregation of the "Church of God" at Baltimore.

Baltimore, Nov. 19, 1846.

Letter from Bishop A. Megrew.

Dalton, Wayne co., Ohio,
October 24, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:

I herein send you the names of two new subscribers for the Advocate; that is, for the remaining six months of the present volume.

I have just returned home from the West, and attended the Eldership on my way home. I found a great many sick people in the South and in the West, and a great many places destitute of preaching.

I was with brother T. Hickernell several days, at his residence, in the West—came in company with him to the Eldership, in Richland county, where we met with many of the brethren from different parts. We had a very pleasant time. All matters were adjusted satisfactorily, and the brethren appeared to be much encouraged; and I do think that the cause of God is about to flourish in Ohio again. May the Lord grant that peace and union may now continue, prevail and abound amongst us as a people throughout—this being the case, we have nothing to fear.

Brother Winebrenner, we have heard indirectly that you and brother Hahn intended to visit the West next summer. This would be very desirable. Come, brethren, if you possibly can.

Yours, truly, in the best of bonds,

A. MEGREW.

Letter from Bishop J. Stamm.

Hinkletown, Nov. 21, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

This is to let you know some of the good of our meeting. We commenced a protracted meeting on last Saturday evening. The brethren that were present, were Strohm, Kyle, Ross, Brenneman, Gable and (Ferril, a United brother.) On account of the wet weather, the congregations were not so large till Sunday afternoon. But then the house was crowded; and I am happy that I can say, that the people of this place paid good attention to the Word, and some have been pricked to the heart; and, thank God, our meeting was not in vain. The work seemed to be starting; but then the brethren went away. On Monday morning all left. I was very sorry it was so. But brother Kyle preached on that evening, and left next morning. We kept up the meeting till Wednesday evening. One person called for mercy, and I believe found forgiveness. Many more were deeply convicted, and I hope lasting impressions made. My prayer is, Lord revive thy work in this place.

I remain your brother in love,

J. STAMM.

On motion,

Resolved, That the ministers give in their reports, and stay in the house after giving in the same.

Brother HENRY MURRAY reported:

That he was glad for the privilege of meeting once more with his brethren in an Eldership capacity. And that according to previous appointment, he returned from the Eldership held at Sugar Creek, Holmes county, in the year 1845, and continued to labor with brother Megrew until spring. During that time, he stated that he realized some refreshings from the presence of the Lord—that he also saw some hopefully converted to God, but baptized only three himself—that afterwards he moved into the bounds of the "Church of God" at Moreland, and then entered upon his circuit, namely, Stark and Wooster, to which he was appointed by the last Eldership held at Sugar Creek—that he has been trying to preach Christ and him crucified; but regrets that he has not seen that amount of good affected which he would liked to have seen, and which he thinks could have been accomplished, provided his labors had not been so extensive; but that he is looking up for better times—that he feels determined, by the grace of God, to preach the Word, and requests an interest in the prayers of the people of God, that he may preach the Word with all boldness, and in the demonstration of the spirit and power—that with his brethren he intends to labor till God shall say, "It is enough," and hopes then with them eventually to range the blessed fields of the Paradise of God. He further stated that he was kindly received by the friends of Zion on the circuit, and that he loves them among whom he labors, and also that the churches among whom he labors, are in tolerable good standing, but not so lively and zealous as he would like to see them; yet hopes that they will soon again realize a refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother DANIEL WILLIAMS reported:

Beloved Brethren: I am glad to meet with you. My report will be short. On last January my son was taken ill, and continued so for six months, after which he died. During his sickness I made several appointments, which I did not fulfil; since his death I have preached some on Sabbath. I assisted brother SNIVELY and others to hold some special meetings. The meetings were good and interesting, but nothing special affected. It is true I do not preach as much as I desire; but it is in consequence of my business being such as to keep me at home. But if I know anything of myself, I should like to be useful in my day, and do intend to do all I can to promote the cause of Christ. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may be sustained under all my difficulties in life.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother ABRAHAM HOLMES reported:

That after the Eldership, held at Sugar Creek, in 1845, he returned to Lexington circuit, where he continued to labor until spring. And during that time, a few embraced religion and were baptized—that about the 20th of April last, he took charge of the Killbuck and Mohican circuit; and that since the above date nothing special has been affected, in consequence of which he felt somewhat discouraged. Although of late the congregations were large and attentive, and meetings interesting. That he is looking and praying for better times, and wishes to continue to labor with his brethren, until it shall please the Lord to call him to Heaven, the seat of bliss, where pleasure in perfection is.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JOHN BEIDLER reported:

My Brethren: I feel thankful to God that I have the privilege of meeting with you in the capacity of an Eldership. Since the last yearly meeting I tried, through the grace of God, to preach the Gospel to a dying world in much meekness. Last winter I labored in connection with brothers MEGREW and MURRAY; and during this time we had some good meetings, and some were hopefully converted to God. This summer past I labored with brother MEGREW on Sugar Creek circuit, on Sabbath; and still feel a desire to spend the remainder of my days in the field of Gospel labor. I beg an interest in the prayers of my brethren, that I may be more useful.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother ARCHIBALD MEGREW reported:

That he has been trying, since the last Eldership, to preach the Gospel to perishing sinners, and to feed the "Church of God," under his care, to the extent of his ability. Through the winter part of the season, he had the pleasure of seeing many souls converted to God, and baptized thirty odd—that in the summer part of the season, he had not seen so much good done as he would like to have seen; but still he feels encouraged to labor in the vineyard of the Lord—that the churches under his care are in a prosperous state and condition—that he is looking out for better times, and says he still feels encouraged to preach the Gospel.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother WILLIAM ADAMS reported:

That he has been trying to preach the Gospel in weakness, since the last Eldership, to a dying world—that he has seen a goodly number hopefully converted to God. Who was the means of it he cannot tell; but to God, only-wise, be all the glory. That during last winter and spring he was somewhat discouraged, in consequence of a rent that seemed to threaten the "Church of God" in Ohio; however, the cloud has apparently dispersed, and now he feels encouraged to spend his time in the Gospel field.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JAMES NEIL reported:

That he felt rejoiced, inasmuch as he had the privilege of meeting with his brethren in an Eldership meeting, and hearing them relate how the Lord had prospered them in their ministerial labors; but he felt to regret that he had not been able to labor to that extent in the vineyard of the Lord, that he would wished to have done, in consequence of bodily afflictions. Notwithstanding, he had witnessed a number of conversions, and baptized eight since the last Eldership.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother SAMUEL SHERICH reported:

That his heart is still in the work, but cannot spend as much of his time in the vineyard of the Lord as he would like to do, on account of the peculiar circumstances under which he is placed in life—that he goes out principally on Sabbath, and works for his living through the week. On this account he thinks that he cannot be as useful as he otherwise might be, if he could spend more of his time in preaching the Word.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JOHN MARTIN reported:

That he is still laboring in the vineyard of the Lord. He says, since he lives in the State of Indiana, he has seen some converted and baptized—that he feels like going on, and asks an interest in the prayers of the people of God.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother THOMAS HICKERNELL reported:

That at the time the Eldership of Ohio held its last session, he was east of the mountains. He gave a statement of his preaching excursions through the mountains, and clear thro' the State of Ohio. Also, of his missionary tour through the State of Indiana, and through the South towards Cincinnati, and backwards and forwards through the State of Ohio—that he feels happy to state, that he believes the cause of God is onward—that he had seen some converted and baptized, whilst performing his missionary excursions, and beseeches the brethren to keep their march onward and upward; testifying that he firmly believes that God will do great things for us.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother HENRY RUPP reported:

That he is still trying to preach Christ to the people according to the best of his ability—has seen some converted since the last yearly meeting, and wishes to keep his march onward till the King shall say, "It is enough; come up higher."

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother PETER HARTMAN reported:

That he is still trying to preach Christ to a lost and ruined world; but not with as much success as he would like to see—that he preaches principally on Sabbath—solicits an interest in the prayers of the people of God.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother DAVID NEIDIG reported:

That he is still engaged in preaching the Word, although principally just on the Sabbath—that he has seen some converted, and feels like going on in the work. He asks an interest in the prayers of the people of God.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That brother S. N. MILLER's case be again reconsidered.

On motion, it was then

Resolved, That the committees on his case give in their reports.

Whereupon,

The Standing Committee reported.

On motion, it was then

Resolved, That a Standing Committee be appointed for the ensuing year, consisting of five, viz: Brothers I. WHISLER, A. MEGREW, D. BAKER, A. HOLMES, and J. BEIDLER.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That brother T. HICKERNELL preach a sermon on Church Government to night.

Brother DAVID SHRINER was heard from.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother WILLIAM HOOD, from Indiana, was heard from; and inasmuch as this Eldership has been credibly informed that brother Hoon has joined a denomination designating themselves the Christian Church; therefore,

Resolved, That his name be expunged from the Journal.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That we adjourn for half an hour. Closed by brother MEGREW.

WEDNESDAY MORNING—OCTOBER 21ST.

Met according to adjournment. Meeting opened by brother S. SHERICH.

Brother S. N. MILLER's case was brought up again for further consideration.

Brother MILLER then rose and made an honorable acknowledgment,—that he done wrong by not going to the "Church of God" in Sharon, and making the apology that he promised to make at the last annual Eldership, and asks forgiveness of the Eldership: which was granted him by a unanimous vote, on condition that he will go to that church, and offer that apology, according to a promise previously made.

Other charges were then called for, and after the Eldership being made sensible that the acknowledgments made further on his part were satisfactory, frankly forgave him.

On motion, it was then

Resolved, To adjourn to meet in thirty minutes. Closed by brother MURRAY.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Met according to adjournment. Meeting opened by brother WILLIAMS.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That applicants for license be heard.

Whereupon,

Brother DAVID GILL arose and gave in his experience in reference to his call to the work of the ministry.

Whereupon,

The Eldership, believing him to be a worthy brother, voted him a license.

The Committee on Resolutions reported the following, which was adopted, viz:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the members of this Eldership not to identify themselves with secret societies.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Standing Committee of the Ohio Eldership meet on the third Monday of March, 1847, in Dalton, Wayne county, Ohio; and that said committee then and there appoint the camp-meetings for the ensuing year.

The following applications were made for the next Eldership, viz:

1. Smithville, Wayne county, Ohio; 2. Millford township, Lagrange county, Indiana; 3. Crooked Run, Ohio; 4. Sharon township, Richland county, Ohio; 5. Meudon, Mercer county, Ohio.

On the vote being taken, it was carried in favor of having it at Smithville.

Therefore,

Resolved, That we hold our next yearly meeting at Smithville, Wayne county, Ohio, commencing on the third Monday of October next, 1847.

A petition was next presented to the Ohio Eldership, by brother J. Martin, to have an Eldership formed in the State of Indiana.

On motion, it was then

Resolved, That this body co-operate with the brethren in the West, in assisting them in forming an Eldership in the State of Indiana; and that brothers W. Adams and T. The committee on unfinished business reported: That they found one item of unfinished business, namely, the case of brother Dobson and the East Pa. Eldership.

On motion,

Resolved, That this Eldership is dissatisfied with brother Joseph A. Dobson, in not obeying the citation of the East Pa. Eldership: whether it is to be attributed to him not being able in consequence of being prevented by the providence of God, or whether he has taken an advantage of the resolution passed in 1844; if the latter, we hold him highly censurable.

The Standing Committee of last year's Eldership reported: That sometime after the last yearly Eldership, they were obliged to demand the license of Wiley Harper, and also to supply the Venango county circuit, left by brother Jacob Meyers, in consequence of his sickness. Report accepted.

THURSDAY MORNING—October 29th.

Meeting opened by prayer.

Journal of yesterday was read and corrected.

On motion,

Resolved, That we now proceed to hear the reports of the preachers, and to examine their moral and official character.

Brother J. M. KLEIN, from Cambria and Indiana circuits, reported:

That he returned from the last year's Eldership to his former field of labor, and continued as before until winter, when he was prevented from attending some appointments in consequence of sickness in the family. Since last spring he has been laboring more extensively, though was sometimes discouraged in consequence of little good being done. But of late he has seen the work of God prosper more or less on his circuit. He has seen some few conversions, several baptisms, and several accessions made to the different churches under his charge. He thinks that the churches in general are in a prosperous condition at present, and that the prospect of doing good are flattering—states that he has received communications of late from various places, in the country and in towns, requesting him to preach for them. He still feels resolved to labor with his brethren in the Gospel while he lives, and after death expects to reign with them above the skies.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother HENRY BARKEY reported:

That he has preached some in his own neighborhood, and to the different churches on Harmony circuit, in the German language; and since he was appointed to preach in Venango county, in connection with brother Wertz, he has also endeavored to preach some in the English. He thinks his labors in the English language are not very profitable—desires to labor all that he can in the German language.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JOHN HICKERNELL reported:

That since the last Eldership he has been endeavoring to labor for God. Before he left Columbiana county, Ohio, he seen some souls converted. In the spring of 1846, he entered his new field of labor, Westmoreland county, Pa.,—found some of the churches in good standing. The church in Greene county was doing well: of late one was baptized. The church at Bethany was not in that prosperous condition as he anticipated: after examining into the cause of the decline, it was attributed to the extravagance of speculation in temporal matters. And again, some of the other churches have suffered much in consequence of being disappointed so much by brethren who promised to preach for them, and neglected to fill their appointments. He asks, how long will the evil of disappointing congregations exist? He further stated that the prospects in many other places are good, and wishes to continue in the field of Gospel labor.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother WERTZ, from Harmony circuit, reported by letter.

He stated that he could not be present at the Eldership in consequence of sickness: that he had been very low, but feels thankful to God that he has recovered so far that he can be up in his room again, so as to write this report. He thinks that the churches on his circuit are in a better state than they have been in the spring. He thinks his health is too delicate to promise to take an appointment at present, but promises to take an appointment next spring, if his health should permit.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother SETH RICHMOND, from Athens county, Ohio, reported by letter:

He stated that he feels inclined to labor for God and his cause: he also states that the prospect of doing good on his mission are flattering.

Resolved, That his report be adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother MUNSON W. COOK, from Adams county, Ohio, was heard from by letter.

He is said to be laboring with some success. After preaching for some time, he formed a church for the Lord.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Ajourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Met according to adjournment. Session opened by brother GLENN.

Brother JOSEPH GLENN reported:

That for some reasons he did not preach so much as he wished to do; and that in consequence of necessity he was obliged to go East of the Allegheny mountain, where he remained during the summer, and where he was gladly received and treated with kindness by the brethren—that he preached there occasionally on the Sabbath, and at big meetings. He also reports that the cause there is on the move, the brethren begin to look up with joy and expectation; and that on his return home he attended several meetings where the brethren were revived, and the Word was not without effect. He feels disposed to preach as he has done, and that he feels more interested and encouraged than he has ever before. He requests the prayers of his brethren, that he may live and die with them, and meet them in Heaven at last.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JACOB MEYERS was heard from.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother ABRAHAM LATSHAW reported by letter:

Stating that he generally preached twice every Sabbath. He wishes to live and stay with his brethren—desires an interest in their prayers.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That we now adjourn to meet again on to-morrow at nine o'clock.

Session closed by the SPEAKER.

FRIDAY MORNING—OCTOBER 30TH.

Met according to adjournment. Session opened by brother J. M. KLEIN.

Brother WILLIAM VANCE was heard from by brother HICKERNELL:

He stated that he preached sometimes—that he expects to give more of his time to the ministry in future.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother A. OSMORE reported by letter:

Stating that his labors had been very limited—that his labors were principally about home. The church in Rockland, Venango county, was in good standing; and that the church numbers at present about forty or forty-five members. He feels resolved to do what he can for the cause of God—is willing to live and stay with his brethren.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother J. A. DOBSON was heard from by brother J. HICKERNELL:

Who stated that he had been preaching occasionally on the Sabbath, and that he was engaged in farming, &c.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Brother JOHN KERR, was heard from by brother HICKERNELL:

He stated that he heard from him during the summer; that owing to the circumstances in which he is placed, he has not been able to preach much during the last Eldership year; but that his delight is in the Gospel ministry.

His report was adopted, and his license renewed.

Resolved, That we most sincerely sypathize with brother KERR, under present existing circumstances, in which he has been (unavoidably) placed by those who will take the advantage of their fellow-men.

Brother KRAFT was heard from.

Resolved, That his character be sustained and his license renewed.

Brother WILEY HARPER was heard from. After considering his case, and the irregular manner he pursued in leaving the Eldership without handing in his resignation, &c.; therefore,

Resolved, That we consider him highly censurable and not worthy of our fellowship.

On motion,

Resolved, That we now adjourn to meet again in thirty minutes. Session closed by brother J. M. KLEIN.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Met according to adjournment. Session opened by brother GILLESPIE.

On motion,

Resolved, That we now hear applicants for license.

Brother JOHN GILLESPIE applied for license. His case was examined, and license granted him.

A church in Meigs county, Ohio, was heard from.

WHEREAS, This Eldership are informed by a letter from Elder S. RICHMOND, pastor of the "Church of God" in Meigs county, Ohio:

And whereas, Said church expresses a wish to be united with this Eldership, and co-operate with us in laboring for the salvation of souls:

And whereas, also, The above-mentioned church is represented a spiritual and living body, taking the Bible alone for its rule of faith and practice, and contends earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints;

Therefore,

Resolved, That this Eldership extend her fellowship to said body: And furthermore, That this Eldership supply their wants with ministerial aid.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Eldership now proceed to station the preachers.

Whereupon,

The following preachers were appointed as follows, to-wit:

CIRCUITS.

Adams County, (Ohio) Circuit---Elder Munson W. Cook.

Athens County, (Ohio) Circuit---Elder Seth Richmond.

Greene County, (Pa.) Circuit --- Elder Daniel Wertz.

Whereupon,

The following brethren were appointed, viz: J. HICKERNELL, J. M. KLEIN, and J. BARKEY.

Resolved, That the Standing Committee be authorized to arrange the camp-meetings for the ensuing summer; and that said committee meet in the city of Pittsburg on the second Saturday in May next.

Resolved, That in future the preachers of this Eldership are to send or give in written reports of their labors, &c.

On motion,

Resolved, That we now adjourn sine die, to meet again in the Irvin township Bethel, in October, 1847.

The day is to be appointed by the Standing Committee.

JOHN HICKERNELL, SPEAKER.
HENRY BARKEY, Clerk.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Maryland State Temperance Convention.—This body adjourned on Thursday evening, to meet again on the third Wednesday in June next. Several resolutions were adopted before the adjournment—one calling upon the friends of temperance to support the organ of the cause in Baltimore, viz: the "Temperance Herald," and another recommending them to commence the work of circulating memorials to the Legislature on the subject of the license laws without delay.

Christian Beener, Esq., Chairman of the Committee appointed to draft an Address, reported one entitled, "An Appeal to the citizens of Maryland on the License Question." The address, which was unanimously adopted, embraces a number of interesting statistical facts in regard to the practical effects of the license.

Call of Troops.—We understand that requisitions have been sent out from the War Department, calling into the service of the United States nine additional regiments of volunteers to serve during the war with Mexico, unless sooner discharged. They are asked for from the following States:

One regiment of infantry from Massachusetts;

One regiment of infantry from the State of New York;

One regiment of infantry from Pennsylvania;

One regiment of infantry from Virginia;

One regiment of infantry from North Carolina;

One regiment of infantry from South Carolina;

One regiment of infantry from Louisiana;

One regiment of infantry from Mississippi; and

One regiment of mounted men from Texas.

Ireland.—Deaths from Starvation.—The accounts of the state of the country continue to be most distressing. A letter from Dungravon of the 19th says: "The condition of the people is truly heart-rending. They are starving! One of the dragoons, a very intelligent man, gave a most deplorable account of the sights witnessed by them as they came along to-day by the houses of their prisoners. They were followed by frantic-looking women and children, half naked, whose cries were unlike anything human—being husky, broken and quite feeble from starvation."

Finnegan Sentenced.—On Monday last, the motion for a new trial in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Thomas Finnegan, who, it will be recollected, was convicted at August term on the charge of kidnapping a family of free colored persons from this county, was argued by J. Reed Esq., for the prisoner, and by Messrs. Cooper and Dunkee, for the Commonwealth. The Court refused to grant a new trial, and sentenced the prisoner to five years solitary confinement and hard labor in the Eastern Penetentiary.

Pennsylvania Railroad.—The subscription books for the contemplated Pennsylvania Railroad were opened in Philadelphia on Wednesday. Since that city has subscribed two and a half millions of dollars, there is little doubt that the project will be carried into successful operation. There are many who will subscribe now who had no confidence in the enterprize succeeding, until the city of Philadelphia subscribed so liberally.

Terrific Explosion.—Beatty's Powder Mills, situated on the Susquehanna Railroad, about eight miles from Baltimore, was blown up on Monday morning last, by which five persons were literally blown to atoms. As all the persons then in the Mills were instantly killed, the cause of the explosion could not be ascertained. The quantity of powder in the establishment at the time of the calamity exceeded two tons.

Departure of Missionaries.—Rev. Messrs. W. W. Scudder, J. E. Chandler, E. E. Hastings and G. Ford, with their wives; with Rev. Dr. Scudder, his wife and two daughters, and Rev. Mr. Spaulding and wife, sailed from Boston on Wednesday morning in the ship Flavio as missionaries to Ceylon and Southern India. Religious services were performed on the occasion, conducted by Rev. Mr. Kirk.

Columbus and Cleveland Railroad.—The Work Commenced.—The Cleveland papers contain the advertisement of the Company for letting out work for forty miles of the road, commencing at Cleveland.—Proposals are to be received until the 1st of December. This looks like doing business. We rejoice at it, and hope the work will not stop until the road is completed.

Gun Saw-dust.—Mr. George Turner of Leeds, England, has discovered an explosive compound cheaper than that from cotton. Instead of cotton he uses saw dust, or any fibrous vegetable matter, which he immerses from eight to ten minutes in equal measures of nitric acid, specific gravity one and a half and of common oil of vitriol. A slight increase of the latter increases the rapidity of combustion.

Sons of Temperance.—This Order is increasing in Indiana, with a rapidity without a parallel. There is a Grand Division in the State, under the jurisdiction of which, in less than twelve months, there have been instituted no less than thirty-four subordinate Divisions.

Formation of the Alliance.—A meeting of the Evangelical Alliance was to be held at Manchester on the 4th of November, to form the British organization.

New York Election.—The Albany Evening Journal publishes a table, marked official, giving complete returns of the votes cast at the late election for Governor, Lieut. Governor, constitution and free suffrage. The following is the result—

Governor, Wright. (D.)	187,283
" Young, (W,)	198,612—11,329	maj.
Lieut.Gov.Gardiner,(D.)	201,174—13,492	"
" Fish, (W.)	187,682
Constitution—Yes,	221,414—128,801	"
" No,	92,643
Free suffrage—Yes,	85,518
" No,	224,334—138,816	"

Sickness in Camp.—The Alabama Journal states that more than 1000 men have died on the banks of the Rio Grande. The Alabama regiment alone has lost 100 men. The fall season has been unusually sickly with fevers and intermittents, and more have fallen victims to disease than to the sword of the enemy in all the battles which have been fought. Yet the northern provinces of Mexico have been considered healthy. The air is pure in the cold mountain regions, but it is possible that on the borders of the rivers the sickness has been most severe.

Christian Church in Egypt.—The Philadelphia Inquirer states that a splendid Protestant Church is now in progress in the city of Alexandria. Mehomet Ali gave the ground, and as the majority of the people interested are Episcopalians, the clergyman is of that denomination.

Oregon Railroad.—Mr. Whitney the projector of the Oregon Railroad, was in Cincinnati last week, and laid his plans before the Chamber of Commerce, which passed resolutions favoring the project, and appointed a committee to memorialize Congress on the subject.

Phonetic Stenography.—This novel system, as taught by Mr. S. Harding enjoys many advantages over the common short-hand. It is easily acquired, and when written, readily perused—a great desideratum in this matter.

The Self-Made Man.—John Young, the Governor elect of New York, was born of poor parents; he qualified himself as a teacher in a country school, was elected a member of the State Legislature, then a member of Congress, and is now Governor of the principal State in the Union.

The American Bible Society.—The monthly meeting was held on Thursday afternoon. Eleven auxilliaries were recognized. The issues of copies of the Scriptures for the past month were 77,074—the receipts for the same time were $13,290

☞ The new capitol of Iowa occupies a favorable site in Iowa city. It is built of marble, at a cost already of $80-000, and will require $20,000 more to complete it.

☞ The Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry now being organized, is to rendezvous at Pittsburg, where they will be duly mustered into service by an officer, or officers, of the U. S. Army.

☞ We learn that the office of the Magnetic Telegraph, in this Borough, is to be removed shortly from the Depot to Third street. This will be much more convenient for their patrons.

☞ A Louisville paper says that Henry Clay has again consented to represent Kentucky in the Senate of the U. States.

☞ In Denmark great distress exists owing to the failure of the potato crop and the scarcity of corn.

☞ The potato crop in Scotland is represented to be worse than was at first feared.

A HYMN.—P. M.

IN seasons of grief to my God I'll repair,
When my heart is overwhelmed with sorrow and care;
From the end of the earth unto thee will I cry,
Lead me to the rock that is higher than I

When Satan, my foe, comes in like a flood,
To drive my poor soul from the fountain of God,
I'll pray to the Saviour who kindly did die,
Lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

And when I have ended my pilgrimage here,
In Jesus' pure righteousness let me appear;
In the swelling of Jordan on thee I rely,
Lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

And when the last trumpet shall sound through the sky,
When the dead from the dust shall arise;
With millions I'll join far above yonder sky,
To praise the kind rock that is higher than I.

DIED—Near Lisburn, Cumberland county, Pa., on the 12th of October last, sister Sarah Cramer; aged 32 years, 9 months, 2 weeks and 1 day.

Sister Cramer was the fruits of a revival of religion in Lisburn many years ago. She was savingly converted to God when young in years. She ever adorned her profession by an upright walk and a chaste conversation, which preached loud to a wicked world, and constrained many to say, that truly she had been with Christ and learned of Him.

She was a member of the "Church of God" at Lisburn; and one of the few of that bleeding Zion, who stood for the truth, while schismatic teachers exerted a pernicious influence over the church, and infidelity made inroad, and filled the minds of many with the soul-withering doctrines of men and devils, which led them astray. She was one of the few who stood firm and earnestly contended for the faith that was once delivered to the saints; and with all their sufferings and privations, they mentained the honor of God and the Chistian's name unsullied. But the King of terrors has torn a sister of great worth from the little flock. After a protracted illness and violent fever of three weeks, she fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a testimony behind that there is a reality in the religion that she professed. The loss of the family and of the church, we trust, is her great gain. Her remains were interred on the 14th, in the family burial ground, and was followed by a large concourse of persons, who met to pay the last tribute of respect to one they respected and loved.—Brother Maxwell and myself talked to the people from Amos 4: 12. Truly, it was a solemn time. [Communicated.

Terms and Regulations.

The Church Advocate will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

All the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and such other persons as shall have regular certificates of their appointment from the Editor, shall be the only authorized agents for this paper.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Of the Editor and the "Advocate."

The editor has gone to Philadelphia for a few days, and has requested me to write a few articles for the editorial colums.

I therefore begin by expressing my thoughts about him and his paper, the Church Advocate.

I look on brother J. W. as a zealous and devoted laborer in the vineyard of the Lord; and am greatly pleased that our paper has again fallen into his hands.

His being so sound in the faith, and yet so liberal and forbearing to those who differ, will insure against any serious error of doctrine or practice; and also prevent the exhibition of bigotry or sectarianism.

Thus far the Church Advocate has done well. It is the silent assistant of the living ministry of a small body of people making a high profession. We say that we hold the faith as held by the Patriarchs, and Prophets, and Saints of old. We profess to be under law to Christ alone, and to be under obligation to keep all his commandments.

These, then, are the things with which the columns of our paper should be filled. Let it set forth whatever is good for men to read and know; especially what is for the soul's welfare. And let it be free to all the brethren who are able to write for the instruction and edification of others.

If we are indeed the "Church of God," we are all brethren in Christ, and all the members have equal rights as children of the same family. Only let each one find out his proper place and work, and keep in the same; then will each be useful and happy.

The World in 1846—War.

The last month of the parting year is with us. The eleven moons that have already adorned the night seasons of the year, have witnessed many scenes; some pleasant, others dark and sorrowful enough.

What a world we live in! It is not Heaven, nor anything akin thereto; except that the bright sunshine enlightens and warms and cheers the face of God's footstool, which this earth is said to be. The grass covers the earth with its carpet of green—the corn and wine and oil still yield their increase—the flowers bloom in beauty—the streams of water still abound every where, as when the world was young. So perhaps it is in Heaven.

But after all our world is only the shadow of the brighter and happier world above.

When this year began, we had the prospect of war; but not its reality. It seemed as if the two most enlightened, and free, and religious nations of the earth, were on the eve of plunging into all the horrors of war. But reason and religion prevailed in preserving peace between our nation and old England.

But not so as to us and our southern neighbor. Down there on our southern frontier, the only two republics in the world, are laboring to destroy each other. And they have ministers and priests on either side to pray for victory. Oh, ye Christian people, scattered here and there through these United States, will ye not labor and pray and preach for peace!

War may and perhaps will continue among the nations of the earth, until Christ the Lord returns again to claim the kingdom and dominion for himself. But let the children of this world fight if they wish to have it so.—The disciples of Christ, the children of the kingdom, have a higher and holier calling: they are the sons of peace.

Prosperity—the Unfortunate.

At the same time, what great prosperity has our country enjoyed through the past year.—No sickness, no famine has been among us. But the produce of the fields has been abundant, filling our barns and storehouses to overflowing. So that the surplus of our bread-stuffs can be sent to feed the hungry millions of Europe, where their ordinary crops have failed, especially potatoes.

So also has it been with the mechanic and manufacturer, as well as the farmer. All have prospered within the wide spread borbers of our land—all except the black slave of the south—and the laborers of the north and middle States, especially the multitudes of poor women, who toil for so small and insufficient pay.

Oh, ye sons and daughters of wealth and plenty, look around you, and wherever you see the unfortunate and needy, let them share in your abundance. Give them good wages; grind them not down in a bargain, but remember that you have more than your share, and they less, if the gifts of Providence were divided.

Christmas is coming—try and make it a happy season to the poor and friendless, as well as to those who have enough—for all ye have belongs to the Lord, and ye are only stewards.

Ministerial Titles.

The simple, and beautiful, and significant titles, such as Bishop, Elder and Deacon, given in the New Testament to ministers, are such as may be used with propriety in all ages. But let us not be so profuse and formal in the use of these titles.

Why not be satisfied in general with the term "Brother," especially when speaking to, or of, the younger preachers. It was thus the apostle Peter spake of our beloved "brother Paul." And they were both fathers in the church.

Let the true spiritual ministry be satisfied to be like the first race of beloved men, who labored in the vineyard, and who now rest from their labors. We shall only make ourselves ridiculous in the eyes of thinking men, if we shew the same fondness for titles which we condemn in the popular churches around us. Think of this, and let a word to the wise be sufficient.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The Fulness of the Gospel Blessing.

"In the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ"—Paul.

What minister would not desire to come to the people to whom he declares the counsels of the living God each Sabbath, and at every appointment, in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ? And yet we sometimes fear there are few who consider the full import of this expression. We humbly trust before God, and verily believe that all zealous, honest and devoted ministers, aim at the achievement of great things, viz: the salvation of the people's souls. But there are many professed ministers who do not come to the people in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ, but in their own strength, and this is the reason why the cause of Zion doth languish, and immense numbers of careless, thoughtless ones are daily falling into hell. We admit that it is right not to give unnecessary offence—that hurling the flaming anathemas of the law—such as hell and damnation—does not convert the unconverted; neither does it edify believers in Christ, and build them up in the faith of the Gospel. But the eternal truth of God commands all true ministers to lift up their voices like a trumpet, "Cry aloud and spare not," and show the people their transgressions. Zion's watchmen should fearlessly sound the alarm, looking continually to God—not seeking the applause of men, nor fearing the frowns of an ungodly world, though they should be shrouded in a hue more fearful than that of midnight darkness—and then if sinners will persist in their own way, and make their way to that place of misery, where the "worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," their blood will not be upon our garments. Coming in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel means, in general, that not only one or two be converted during one whole year, or two years' ministry, but that large numbers be soundly and savingly converted—even brought to the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel. I do not mean a large number of "hope so," and "guess so," and "think so," people; but genuine converts to the faith of the Bible. When Peter first preached the Gospel of repentance and remission of sins, he went amongst the murderers of Christ in the fulness of this blessing. Three thousand were converted in one day; soon they became five thousand, and soon ten thousand believed, (that is, they were converted) and continued steadfast in the Apostle's doctrine and fellowship, and were of one heart and soul, and great grace was upon them all. From those instances you may see what is implied by a minister coming in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ: it is when hundreds are brought to repentance, faith and newness of life; when all that appear converted, or almost all, (for there were some even in primitive times that were hypocrites) are of one heart and soul, and live in holy communion, and renounce their worldly habits and connections, and impart to each other and walk in the fear and commandments of God, and the sweet comforts of the Holy Ghost, and maintain an upright and holy deportment, both at home and abroad, then the blessed truth of God kindles like a fire, and spreads from heart to heart, from family to family, from neighborhood to neighborhood, and from country to country. When the Lord adds to the church such as may be saved; when the word of the Lord shall run and be glorified; when the Gospel is preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven, (thus it was in the primitive times with Peter, Paul, and all the apostles) the fishers of men cast a wide net, and took up large shoals of fishes. Now the case is altered; we can only catch a few fish now and then; and, peradventure, only a small portion of them are genuine, and they are only caught at certain times in the year. We will say they are fished up at camp-meetings and at protracted meetings; but before similar meetings are held at a subsequent time, many of these pests of society have slipped between the meshes, or leaped over the cork-lines of the net, and have gone; and by the next time we spread the net to make another haul, we catch these same fish; and by the time we have toiled and labored to get the net to shore, it is time to retire from the place; and upon close examination we find that a majority of what we have taken are not good; and thus it is that our camp-meetings and our protracted meetings are cursed with those pests of society, who follow us from time to time, and from place to place, and annoy us. Such creatures have an influence on the minds of those who are better disposed, and prevent them from seeking their soul's salvation; and thus the work of God is impeded in its progress. But it was not merely in the primitive times, but in various ages and in different parts of the church of the living God, since there have been revivals of religion, and mighty works have been accomplished. In the days of Sr. Augustine, and at the time of the Reformation, this was the case. In the days of Mr. Whitefield and Mr. Wesley, also, great numbers were truly converted. Whatever errors were mixed with their proceedings; whenever evidences like these are given; whenever numbers like these are brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ, and live holy lives, then the Gospel is preached in the fulness of the blessing of Christ. But these are blessings which our venerable fathers in the Gospel have told us. These things occurred long, long ago. There are many of my brethren in the ministry with myself; some a longer and some a shorter space of time, and not quite unsuccessful; but we have never yet saw any of this fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ. Our profession indeed is such, that the least success in it is preferable to the greatest in any other. One immortal soul, brought to the Saviour through our weak instrumentality, is worth more than all the glories of this wicked world. If but a single sinner truly repents, there is joy in Heaven—the only event on earth that we know of that occasions that joy. If a minister were to labor four score years in the vineyard of Christ, and be instrumental in the hand of God of gaining but one soul, he might consider himself greatly honored. Still, who that loves his Saviour, and has compassion for the souls of men, would not earnestly pray for a more enlarged success, I would humbly thank my Divine Master for even one soul enlightened and pardoned, and saved eventually through my weak instrumentality. And yet if there were only one soul on the way to eternal wretchedness, I would have a struggle with the devil for that one. There are, in the present day, an increasing number of Gospel ministers; and I would charitably hope, by all, some good is affected, and in a course of years, if we are successful in getting a few converted out of the immense mass, we will try humbly to give God the glory. But such success as I mean, by the fulness of the blessing, has seldom, if ever, been vouchsafed to any of us in these days. I am not speaking of the comparitive success, which one minister may have above another, but the united efforts of all of us put together, would be but trifling compared with that of Paul or Peter. What can be the reason for this? Is the Lord's arm shortened that it cannot save? Is the Gospel another thing than it was once? No, thank Heaven, it is precisely the same this hour that it was originally. It has never lost one particle of its efficacy. Are ministers to say that they cannot work miracles? Miracles never converted men, except as the grace of God wrought with them. There cannot be a greater absurdity than to think that miracles can change the heart. It is the power and grace of the Holy Spirit which produces that change. It was this that converted a bold persecuting Saul of Tarsus—into Paul, the minister to the Gentiles. We may inquire whether ministers, at a more recent date, do so prominently hold out the peculiarities of primitive Christianity, as the holy apostles did? whether they come with the holy law of God, as the ministration of condemnation in one hand, and the Gospel of Christ as the ministration of life in the other? whether they warn sinners like John the Baptist, not to trust exclusively in outward forms and ceremonies, and then point out to them the Lamb of God? We answer, No! And why? Because it is unfashionable, or it is not in accordance with modern custom, or the devil whispers through some Pharisee into Mr. Black Coat's ear, you must desist from this strenuousness, or you will lose your popularity. It is the work of the spirit to glorify Christ. May we not then ask whether God, the spirit, is glorified in His person, and grace in His love and power in the work of conversion!—whether we do not hold the doctrine of the Holy Spirit slightly? For if we do not honor the spirit, how can we honor our ministry? We must look for all success from God alone. If a minister trust in knowledge, talents, eloquence and human suasion, he will do nothing. It is the minister's business, indeed, to put forth every effort he can in inviting, entrusting and instructing men. But when we have done all it is in our power to do, it is the spirit of God, who alone can quicken the dead, and open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the ears of the deaf; and if we depend not on Him, we shall not, we cannot succeed. We do not expect this fulness of blessing, and are satisfied without it. There is a littleness of faith and conception of things. We do not ask nor expect this fulness. We have no idea of it. It does not enter our minds. Can we wonder then that the Lord says to us: "According to thy faith, be it unto thee." But the apostles went forth and expected and asked a fulness of blessing. When a minister is in earnest, nothing will satisfy him but this: others may be satisfied without success: they may go through a formal set of observances and be contented, instead of examining their ministry and their whole conduct, and saying, "show me wherefore thou contendest with me." If we can be satisfied without this enlarged blessing, it is certain we shall never obtain it. If a minister should say, "I have large, and attentive, and respectable congregations, and a good support; the people to whom I preach are accommodating; my circumstances are quite comfortable, and my prospects, in a pecuniary sense, are very flattering;" certain it is, his situation is a desirable one. Nevertheless, we conceive it to be rather a critical one. It is the same as if a fisherman should be satisfied, because he has a good net and pleasant companions and fair weather. Though he comes home empty, if any thing but usefulness will satisfy ministers of the Gospel, we need not wonder why there are so many idle drones on hand. It is meet and right to thank God for every blessing that we receive; but nothing ought nor shall satisfy faithful and zealous God-made ministers, but the salvation of immortal souls. Our faithfulness and earnestness should not be developod more zealously in the pulpit than in the closet. We preach Christ as if in earnest, and we go and pray as if not in earnest. There is but little wrestling with God for the Divine unction to attend us in our public as well as private capacities.—There is a lack of the spirit of prayer. Merciful God, forgive me for this sin of omission! There is a lack of that Heavenly mindedness, and that general circumspection of deportment, which should make us patterns of good works, both in and out of the pulpit. For instance, those unbecoming speeches, or unnecessary words, and trifling anecdotes, which are frequently related from the pulpit, and are calculated to excite lively rather than to produce seriousness upon the minds of the people; these, we think, might be dispensed with. Our example, as ministers, may not be dishonorable. But is it so honorable to the Gospel as it might be? Our example is not a scandal, either to ourself or to others. But can we say with the apostles: "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel?" Can we say: "Ye know how holy, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believed?" Are we men of God, Heavenly, disinterested, dead to the pleasures, interest, and honors of this world? What would Paul say if he were to come among us? I fear he would have reason to say: "All seek their own; none the things of Jesus Christ's." Are we not fishers of popularity, of ease, of fame, of money, rather than fishers of men? May the Lord help us to examine ourselves! More anon.

Sabbath-Schools.

Every "Church of God" ought to have a regularly organized Sabbath-school. This would be wisdom. Men usually pay a great deal of money in sending their children to schools and colleges to learn the things of this world. And this is precisely what they ought to do. But here the education is chiefly, if not wholly, for the present life. No sensible parent ever considers such money mispent.—Neither is it. But since one soul is worth more than the whole world, is it not incumbent upon every one to do something towards educating their children for eternity. No one will dispute this. Well, Sabbath-schools are designed for this end. And its warmest advocates have not been disappointed in the happy effects wrought upon the hearts of those who are permitted to enjoy its benefits. Thousands, now living, can testify that salvation was made known to them through this blessed institution. Thousands, now in glory, were led to fear and love God through it. And shall we hesitate in regard to pushing onward this illustrious cause? Let us give a little of our money to buy books, &c., and let us devote a little of our time too in teaching the children the right ways of the Lord. Then we will know that our time and money were well spent.

Some professors of religion are satisfied to rest at their ease in Zion. This should not be. They like to see these things go on, but neglect to lay to a helping hand. Owing to this some things exist that are positive wrongs. Of this class of persons are all those that send their children to Sabbath-schools, where doctrines are taught contrary to the doctrines of the "Church of God." Yes, they are satisfied to let their children go to places where infant sprinkling is taught, where feet-washing and baptism are scornfully repudiated and mocked at, and where the "Church of God" is nicknamed, and human creeds are given forth, and instilled into the youthful heart. My heart shudders at the thought that so little care is taken of the young, by those that profess to know the right way. Truly, "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.

But some are ready to excuse themselves by saying: "There is already one or more Sabbath-schools in our place, and why should we commence another." Well, this argument is worth just nothing at all. With the same parity of reasoning we ask, why did you organize a "Church of God" in your neighborhood; were there not other churches there before? Yes, but their conduct and doctrine was not in accordance with the Bible. Can you not establish your Sabbath-schools on the same ground? Ah! but our opponents will get angry if we do. Were they well pleased when you organized your church? "We ought to obey God rather than man." We might examine a few more paltry excuses that have a similar bearing; but we forbear. A word to the wise is always sufficient, and with fools we do not want to waste our time.

Let unsound pleas be no longer framed. By having a Sabbath-school, you can do much to advance the cause of God. Where children attend the Sabbath-school, they will generally go to hear the ministry of the Word. Extensive revivals have had their commencement in Sabbath-schools. The sooner every church organizes a Sabbath-school, the better it will be for the church and for the rising generation.

In a few years some of the scholars now taught will in turn teach others; and these, if rightly instructed, will be able to teach others the true way also.

Sabbath-School Books.

A proper selection of books to form a Sunday-school library, is worthy of our consideration. The American Sunday School Union, No. 146, Chestnut street, Philadelphia, have quite recently published a "Ten Dollar Library," consisting of one hundred volumes, from seventy-two to two hundred and fifty-two pages each. This is an extremely low price for so many books; perhaps the cheapest collection ever published. This "Library" it would be advisable to get, and would be quite a good beginning in the book way. At the same time, a few dozen of bound books of twenty-four, thirty-six and fifty-four pages each, should be bought for those just beginning to read: being larger print and easier lessons; besides less in cost. It is not prudent to give the smaller children the larger books: they seldom have patience to read them. Hymn-books can be bought at the same place at four and a-half cents each. And the American Bible Society, New York, will sell you Testaments at six and a-fourth cents each. The Baptist Depository is No. 31, North Sixth street, Philadelphia.—And the publications of the Mussachusetts' Sabbath-School Society, (Congregationalist) can be had in Sixth street, above Chestnut street, Philadelphia. But upon the whole, the American Sunday-School Union publications are best adapted, being free, generally speaking, from sectarian dross. Catalogues can be had at either place, from which selections can be made.

Correspondence---No. 4,

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

13.—S. Permit me now to offer a few words concerning the restitution of all things, which you seem so heartily to despise. Acts 3: 21: "What will be restored?" Answer: the brute creation. What part of them? Let the prophet answer. In Isaiah you will find: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them; and the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den.—They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isaiah 11: 6, 7, 8, 9.

B. B. T.—These predictions I do not and never did despise; but the time when they will be fulfilled is what we differ in. You intimate that it will take place after the consummation of time, in the New Jerusalem, which I deny. The first text of scripture which you cite, from Acts3:21,I cannot understand as having any reference to the restoration of the brute creation. The circumstance that gave rise to the words of Peter, which you cite as your foundation, was the case of the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple; and after he was cured, he held to Peter and John: this caused great consternation among the Jews; and when Peter saw it, he addressed them saying: "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this?" &c.—He then took occasion to preach Jesus to them. "But those things which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled. Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and He shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached to you: whom the Heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." Restitution signifies to restore to a former state. And hence the restitution of all things means the putting the world in a holy and happy state. This I do not deny nor despise; but believe that it will take place in the time appointed.

That portion of scripture which you cite from Isaiah concerning the brutes, cannot have reference to the restoration of the brute creation in the New Jerusalem, as you believe: for it is evident from the eleventh and twelfth verses, where the prophet speaks of the Lord recovering and assembling His people the second time; but according to your theory, it will take place after God's people are gathered. In this you are wrong; for according to the declaration of the prophet, in the time, when the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the lion eat straw like the ox, the people of God will be gathered.

Now, if the lion shall eat straw like the ox, then grain must be raised, that they will have straw to eat, and this the earth will not yield unless it has the rays and heat of the sun; and according to the theory of the second adventists, the sun will not be in existence then; because John, in the Revelation, writes that the City of the New Jerusalem will have no need of the sun; but God and the Lamb are the light thereof.

Hence, then, it is evident that the brutes will not be IN the New Jerusalem. I expect, by the leave of Providence, to write on the New Jerusalem after I am through with this correspondence. I will close this subject for the present.

ALETHES.

Letter from Bishop G. U. Harn.

October 1, 1846.

Esteemed Friend:—

The following facts may not be uninteresting to your readers. If you think so, you may give them an insertion in the Advocate. They are extracted from Mr. Jones' account of the Waldenses,(so called) in Dauphiny, Provence, Languedoc, Piedmont, Calubria, Bohemia, England, and elsewhere, from A. D. 1160, to A. D. 1530.

1. That they existed as a distinct body from the Papal church, several hundreds of years anterior to the Protestant reformation, and Luther and Calvin. Perrin, the writer of their history, inform us he had a New Testament in the Vallese language, written on parchment, in a very ancient letter, and a book entitled in their language, "Qual cosa sia l'Anti-Christ"—that is, what is Anti-Christ under date of the year of 1120! Another book entitled, "The Noble Lessons," is dated 1100.

Reinercius Soccho, an inquisitor, and a deadly enemy to them, who lived about 1240, admitted that they had existed for five hundred years before Peter Waldo, one of their preachers, in Lyons, in 1160. This admission carries us back to 660. But I do not know but what we could trace them farther; for it appears to me they descended from the "Church of God" at Milan, which is supposed to have been planted by Barnabas, one of Paul's companions.

2. That they were purely Protestant in all their leading views of the Gospel, and boldly opposed the innovations and superstitions of the Romish Pontiff. Indeed, no one can read the Papal writers quoted by Mr. Jones, but can see plainly that nearly every thing rejected by them, was the unscriptural superstitions of the church of Rome, with all her blasphemous rites and ceremonies. Hardly a charge was brought against them, by four of those writers, with any shadow of claim to truth, but what I would be willing to be charged with as a Christian at the present date.

3. That their enemies testified to their religious devotion strict and rigid morality.—Claudius Leiselius, archbishop of Turin, says: "Thier heresy excepted, they generally live a purer life than other Christians. Again, in their lives and morals they were perfect, irreprehensible, and without reproach among men, addicting themselves with all their might to observe the commands of God."

Lielenstenius, a Dominican, says of those in Bohemia: "I say that in morals and life they are good—true in words, unanimous in brotherly love; but their faith is incorrigible and vile;" that is, it was opposed to the idolatry of his church.

4. They were truly a Bible reading class of Christians. A Roman inquisitor says they can say a great part of the Old and New Testaments by heart. They despise the decretals, and the sayings, and expositions of holy men, and cleave only to the text of scripture.—Another writer says he knew one who could repeat the whole of the New Testament, and that their women and children knew more of the word of God than the priests. This of course was a heresy. Here I will note a very striking practice by which they communicated their views to others, who were above attending their meetings. Some went around with small articles of merchandize, similar to our pedlers, and solicited persons to buy of them. After they had bought, they would frequently ask if they had any thing else. O yes, they would answer, they had that which was far more valuable! On getting a promise of protection from the Romish clergy, they would proceed to quote many passages of the scriptures and apply them. This had its effect admirably. I have thought that something of a similar course will have to be pursued by the church in modern times, as her influence will grow less than what it now is. Indeed, public declamation has got so common, that there is no excitement attached to it to what there has been. And another reason for such a cause is, that thousands in our own island never hear a sermon preached in a year. Can we not get religion enough! Can we not love souls enough to induce us to pursue a course similar to the following: Let each church lay out its neighborhood into districts, and appoint its members to take charge of those little circuits, go to the houses, converse on religion, and read the Bible to the families, &c. The ministry should go over all the ground. When will this be done! Why, when we get more religion and make the effort! With whom shall it begin? Lord, give us grace to do it, for this is what preaching must be brought to.

5. They were Anti-Paido-Baptists in the strict sense of that word, or at least the greater part of them. This can be proved from the testimony of their enemies, and their own confession of faith. But let me remark, those confessions of faith were not tests of fellowship and membership, but an exhibition of their views to their opponents.

1. Their enemies say some of them hold that baptism is of no advantage to infants, because they cannot actually believe. See Jones' History of the Christian Church, page 239, quoted from a Roman Catholic writer, Reinercius Saecho.

Louis xii., King of France, hearing from their enemies of some heinous crimes, laid to their charge, sent a deputation to inquire into them, and they found all was false, and stated to him, as the result of their investigation, that among other good things, that they "observed the ordinance of baptism according to the primitive church, and instructed their children in the articles of Christian faith, and commandments of God." See the same work, page 260. By the primitive church, they meant the church in the days of the Apostles; and who does not know that Roman priests admit that infant baptism was introduced into the church after the days of the primitive church?

2. We will prove it from their own confession of faith. In the one they transmitted to the King of France in 1544, they say, in the seventh article: "We believe that in the ordinance of baptism the water is the visible and external sign, which represents to us that which, by virtue of God's invisible operation, is written within us, viz: the renovation of our minds, and the mortification of our members through (the faith of) Jesus Christ. And by this ordinance we are received into the holy congregation of God's people, previously professing and declaring our faith and change of life." Now, can anything be plainer than this? Then, well did the celebrated Lutheran Historian, Mr. Mosheim, observe "that the history of the Anti-Paido-Baptists is buried in the remotest depths of antiquity."

Letter from Bishop John Hickernell.

November 23, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I left home on the 10th inst., for a protracted meeting, to commence at the Windy Gap school house, Aleppo township, Greene county, Pa. I found the brethren doing tolerably well—commenced the meeting on Saturday evening—preached nine times before I left. The result of the meeting was good. Four professed to be converted, and the same number were baptized, and a few left to mourn over their sins.

I left the above meeting on Friday night after preaching, and travelled about five miles, and lodged with brother Jesse Evens. The next day I met an appointment given out for me near the Forks of Big Fish creek, Marshal county, Virginia; in which place I am now. I tried to preach three times to a large and attentive congregation. If I had time and help, I should like to stay here several days, and see what the Lord would do for this amalgamated and contentious people, about the system of slavery. If it were not for the salvation of the souls of men, I should not incline to cross the line and preach among them. It is here that men will plead the propriety of buying and selling the temples of the Holy Ghost, and separate man and wife, and even snatching the child from the mother's breast: yet, withal, taking the Bible for their counseller, (as they say, in which it is said: "What God has joined together, let no man put assunder." Among these tyrants, in human form, strange as it may seem, you will find the professors of Christianity. Some will argue they (the negroes) are no more than the brutes. If that position could be proven, then still the slave-holder would be guilty and liable to be corrected: for the wise man says: "The righteous man hath regard for the life of the brute."

I have been frequently asked whether I would take slave-holding men into the church. I answered, No! I think all whom God sets at liberty, ought to let the oppressed go free.

I must bring this subject to a close. When I commenced this epistle, I did not think of saying anything about slavery. But what I have written is written. Time is short with me. In a few hours I purpose to start to the Ohio river, and there get on board of a boat for the mouth of Harr's run, and from thence to Athens county, Ohio, for the purpose of holding a protracted meeting among the brethren of whom we have written heretofore. You may hear from me again after the intended meeting.

Yours, in love,

JOHN HICKERNELL.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:

I herein send you one more new subscriber and a little money, together with a little good news. I have just returned home from a preaching tower. I left home last week, and went to Crooked Run, Tusearawas county, to hold a large meeting, expecting to be assisted by Elder J. NEIL; but from some cause unknown to me, he did not attend; so I was left alone, so far, at least, as preachers are concerned. We commenced the meeting on Saturday evening. I endeavored to preach the old-fashioned Gospel to the people. On Saturday evening and Sabbath, we had large congregations, and also very attentive. On Sabbath evening I again addressed the people from the parable of the prodigal son, and, bless the Lord, not without some affect. Four presented themselves as subjects of prayer, two of which were happily converted to God. On Monday we had meeting again, and, thank the good Lord, we had a refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and the hearts of the brethren were cheered up. On Monday evening there were two more presented themselves for prayer, and professed to find peace to their souls by believing. If circumstances would have admitted of the protraction of the meeting, much good might, I think, have been done. The church there, I think, is on the march, and are looking up for better times. There are some noble-minded young men in that region of country, who have come out on the side of truth, and who bid fair to be very useful. May the Lord carry on the good begun work; and to Him be all the glory.

Yours, truly,

ARCH. MEGREW.

WASHINGTON, LANCASTER CO.,

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

This is to give you and the readers of the CHURCH ADVOCATE some information of the meeting, held at Millerstown, Lebanon county. After you left, according to notice given, we continued the meeting on Monday evening, and attended to the ordinances, viz: feet-washing and the Lord's supper. Brother BRADY read several suitable portions of God's word, and made some remarks of God's requirements of His people. He was followed by brother STAUB, a preacher of the United Brethren. He, in his remarks, said that feet-washing was one of the plainest commandments in God's word, and he for his part was not satisfied just in knowing these things, but wished to be happy in doing them. I was glad to see that he was not just a United brother in name, but was one in practice; for he united with the brethren in celebrating God's ordinances, and we had a happy time of it. After the ordinances we tried to encourage sinners to fly to Christ, when one arose in the congregation and said that she once had Christ, the hope of glory, in her soul, but lost him again; and now if there was one in the Church that could have faith in praying for her, she was willing to come out. We asked her forward to the altar. She came, and soon another came also; and a number more, Agrippa-like, were almost persuaded to become Christians. We labored with those two till nearly midnight, when they were both comforted, (not by man, as it is too often the case, but) by the Holy Ghost; and we had a feasting time of it, when those prodigals returned. The meeting was interesting and solemn throughout, and I hope that the dear people of Millerstown and its neighborhood, will yet be much profited by it: which is my prayer.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Terrible Disaster.—Wreck of the Steamer Atlantic.—Great loss of Life.—We have to record accounts of a disaster in the Long Island Sound, which recalls vividly to mind the fearful fate of the steamboat Lexington, and which, we have great fears, will even exceed in the destruction of life, the terrible record of that wreck.

The new and magnificent steamer Atlantic, Captain Dustan, was driven ashore at Fisher's Island, nearly opposite New London, on her way to this city, in the gale of Thursday, and on Friday morning went to pieces.

The loss of life, though the extent is yet unknown, must be very great, twenty-nine dead bodies having already been recovered, and this number, it is apprehended, will be greatly increased.

The following particulars were furnished by Mr. James Stetson, the second Captain of the steamer, published in an extra Herald:

The Atlantic left Allyn's Point about half-past 11, Wednesday night, with an unusually small number of passengers, numbering with the crew, servants and officers of the steamer, in all under one hundred persons. She got well under way, and while going finely, the steam pipe running into the steam chimney burst, rendering the engine entirely useless. At about the same time the wind chopped round suddenly from the N. E. to the N. W., and blew a hurricane.

The anchors were immediately hove over, at which the steamer rode through that night, which was very dark and stormy.

At daylight she was abreast of the New London light, drifting all the way toward the shore.

The steam pipes were first cut away, next the pilot house, and then the bulkheads, so as to give the wind a clear sweep through the vessel, and render less surface to its attack.

The colors were hoisted half-mast, but on the Mohegan's attempting some measures to go to her assistance, were hauled down by orders of Capt. Dustan, who knew that her efforts would be ineffectual. Thus the steamer remained all day, till towards five in the afternoon of Thursday, the wind lulled, and hopes were raised that all danger was over; but not long after the wind shifted two points, and blew with more than previous violence.

The Atlantic gradually drifted nearer and nearer to the shore all Thursday night, and for two hours, from 2 till 4 o'clock on Friday morning, lay within a cable's length of the breakers, held by two anchors. At about half past four the stern touched, and both cables instantaneously parted, and she broached to, lying broadside to the shore, in a heavy surf.

The coast was bold and rocky inside of a racy reef: had she broached to the other way, so that her bow would have reached the breakers, perhaps not a life would have been saved. The vessel went to pieces immediately; within five minutes of her striking, nothing was left of her entire but her engines. The freight had mostly been thrown overboard some time previous

Capt. Dustan was last seen by our informant when the latter received orders from him to go forward, and at the proper moment let go the chains. At that time the Captain stood upon the after promenade deck, giving his orders as calmly, and with as little apparent emotion as if upon shore. All his efforts seemed to be for the preservation of his passengers—his own fate was joined with that of the vessel he commanded.

Mr. Stetson, who, from all accounts, acted like a man from the beginning to the end of the trying scene, states that to every passenger was given one or as many life-preservers as he might choose to take, and they were the means of saving many lives. By direction of Captain Dustan, planks were strongly lashed together and pointed out to the passengers. In a word, everything was done that could be done.

All this occurred at half-past four o'clock on Friday morning.

The Atlantic was valued at about $80,000, and was insured both against fire and sea risk. The following amounts were insured in this city:—Jefferson $5,000; Mutual Safety $15,000; Atlantic $15,000; and probably $45,000 more in the Eastern offices, making in all about $80,000. She was insured at 4½ per cent. against fire, and 1½ per cent. against sea risk.

[Saturday American.

Missouri.—The Govenor's annual Message furnishes the following statistical facts with regard to the State;

The revenue for the last two years amounted to the sum of $330,000, and the expenditures to $247,000, leaving an overplus of $83,000. The bonds and dividends from the bank for the same time amounted to $20,000, and the interest on the outstanding State bonds, exclusive of $85,000 borrowed from the branches of the bank at Jackson and Palmyra, amounted to $142,000, showing a large amount to the pecuniary prejudice of the State.

Revival in the Navy.—Rev. Mr. Colton, chaplain of the U. S. frigate Congress, in a recent letter from Monterey, (California,) says:—"There is a deep interest among a large section of our crew on the subject of religion. I now hold a prayer meeting three evenings in the week, and usually meet there about sixty sailors—about thirty of whom have become hopefully pious."

Expenses of the War.—The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says—

"According to a recent official estimate, the charge on the treasury for the army movements for the next eight weeks will be ten millions."

Appointment by the Governor.—The Governor has appointed John M. Foster, Esq., of Harrisburg, President Judge of the Judicial District, composed of the counties of Chester and Delaware.

Gold.—It is stated that gold has been discovered in such quantities in Siberia, as to endanger its present value. 11,000 miners are at work there, and 23,000 more could find employment.

Sugar in Texas.—A number of planters in Texas are abandoning the cultivation of cotton for that of sugar, and according to the experiments they have made this season, they will be very successful.

State of the Treasury.—The Secretary reports that during the month of October the expenditures of the government exceeded its receipts about six millions of dollars.

Cholera in Persia.—Accounts from Trebizond represent the Asiatic Cholera as having passed into Persia, and to be making incessant ravages.

Ireland.—The intelligence from Ireland is melancholy indeed. In various districts the people are suffering from actual starvation.

Mr. Adams.—The Hon. J. Q. Adams has had a severe attack of Apoplexy, but at last advices was much better. His physicians think he will recover.

Germany.—In almost all parts of Germany much distress prevails, owing to a scarcity of provisions.

To take Stains out of Linen.—Hold them in milk that is boiling on the fire, and they will disappear.

Egypt.—Accounts from Alexandria state that the Nile had risen twenty-four feet, and made great ravages.

Cotton Powder—A new invention—A new discovery of considerable importance has lately been made in Germany, in reference to the use of Cotton in the place of powder. It is said to be superior to powder for its cheapness and for its being more easily made, and in its explosive power. By late experiments it has been ascertained, that 50 grains of cotton are as efficient as 120 of powder. A ball has been fired from a musket with cotton through an oak plank five inches thick.

It explodes without any visible smoke, and leaves no remnant behind. The cost at which it can be prepared is said to be considerably less than gun-powder.

This discovery will prove of great advantage. The Diet of the German confederation has purchased the secret of the composition of the solution, for the use of the German army, for one hundred thousand guilders; and two American gentlemen, Col. Robertson, at present Consul at Bremen, and Col. A. Mann, of Ohio, have secured the right for the United States and Mexico, and came over in the Britannia to offer the same to our government.

Experiments were made with some of the cotton powder brought by Mr. Robinson, at the War Office in Washington, on Monday, in presence of the President and cabinet, Gen. Scott, and Col. Talcott. It is to be further tested at the Arsenal."

France.—In consequence of the inundation of rivers in France, a vast deal of destruction of property and life has occurred. The Loire has overflowed its banks, and desolated towns and villages. The Rhone, the Durance, and other rivers and their tributaries, have also inundated the adjacent country. By the rise of the Rhone, 150 houses were destroyed at Roanna, on the 19th of October, with 270 boats loaded with merchandize.

Grafting the Tomato upon the Potatoe.—At a meeting of the New York Farmer's Club, Mr. Meigs read from the "Annals of the Royal Horticultural Society of Paris," an account of a successful experiment of grafting a stem of tomato upon the stalk of a potatoe, by which a crop of tomatoes was raised in the air; and one of potatoes in the earth.

It will be observed that the tomato and the potatoe are of the same genus of plants.

Death from Somnambulism.—A colored woman in New York got up from her bed in her sleep, last Saturday night, walked out on the roof of the house, fell off and fractured her skull, dying instantly.

Hopewell Presbytery, Tennessee.—In a letter from brother C. J. Bradley, he states, "Our Presbytery reports to Synod near 1000 professions since last spring Presbytery; and not many less accessions." This Presbytery has surely been highly favored of the Lord.—Cum. Presbyterian.

Buildings in Cincinnati.—One thousand three hundred and eighty-three new buildings put up during the year 1846, in Cincinnati.

Ordered to the Seat of War.—By last evening's Southern Mail, we learn that General Scott has been ordered to repair forthwith to Mexico.

Associate Reformed Church.—A statement in the Christian Instructor informs us that this body is now composed of "four Synods, twenty-four Presbyteries, upwards of two hundred ministers, more than three hundred churches, and about twenty-six thousand members."

This church has also four Theological Seminaries, viz: one at Allegheny city, organized about 1822; one at Newburgh, N. Y., established 1829; one at Oxford, Ohio, 1839, and one at Due West Corner, S. C.

There are also four Religious Periodicals devoted to the interests of the Associate Reformed church: "namely, in the order of their history: The Evangelical Guardian, edited by Rev. D. Macdill, D. D., at Hamilton, Ohio; the Christian Magazine of the South, by Rev. J. Boyce, in Fairfield District, S. C.; the Preacher, by Rev. D. R. Kerr, at Pittsburg, Pa.; and the Christian Instructor, by Rev. J. B. Dales, at Philadelphia.

The Cholera.—A London letter published in the New York Journal of Commerce, says:—

I told you a few weeks back, on the authority of the celebrated Dr. Ryan, that the Asiatic Cholera was silently, slowly, but surely approaching Europe. The accounts which you received by the last steamer, showed this sinuous and fatal progress from Scinde, in British India unto Persia, where it struck down prince and peasant, the latter in vast numbers.—It is now hovering over the frontiers of Russia and Turkey, making frightful ravages, and stealthily moving onwards, defying check or control. The British government are going to send a medical commission into Turkey and Russia, to examine the cases and report upon the pestilence to the privy Council; which is now the organized board of health for the whole country. Should the scourge arrive in Europe, it will prove an awful visitation, particularly when forming a junction with the murrain now effecting cattle, and the disease extirpating the potato.

Steam Boat Collision.—A slip from the office of the New Orleans Picayune, dated Nov. 22, says that the Sultana, Capt. Tufts, bound down the river, came in contact with the Maria, Capt. T. W. Dunnica, bound up, about 7 miles below Natchez. The latter will be a total wreck. It is said some 20 or 30 lives were lost, and about the same number scalded so badly that there are very little hopes of their recovery.

Revival.—A correspondent of the Lutheran Observer, under date Nov. 13, 1846, gives an account of an extensive revival of religion in the congregation of Pleasant Hill, Smith county, Virginia. The meeting lasted 14 days successively. There were in all 100 conversions. The work is still going on.

Latest of the War.—Tampico has been captured by our Squadron without firing a gun. The city had been abandoned and the artillery and ammunition carried away by the garrison.

The Regiment of Pa.—The Sun states that 14 companies have tendered their services, being four more than the Governor wants or is authorized to enrol.

☞ The Mexican loss at the battles of Monterey, as given by themselves, is in killed five officers, and one hundred and seventy-seven men—in wounded twenty-three officers and two hundred and twenty-one men. Total number of killed and wounded, are four hundred and twenty-six.

☞ Ten thonsand Russian Jews are expected to arrive in the Holy Land to settle there. This number will add about a third to the present Jewish population in Syria and Palestine.

☞ The London Times says that "the food of four millions of people has been withdrawn from the nation," by the present scarcity of potatoes, and "that the crop of grain is no greater than last year."

☞ The New Planet is said by an English astronomer to have a ring, and to be attended by a satellite. Its diameter is estimated at 150,000 miles, and it is 250 times as large as our earth.

☞ John Young, the Governor elect of New York, is said to have had a severe attack of hæmorrhage of the lungs, which leaves him in a very precarious situation.

☞ The Milwaukie (Wisconsin) Gazette says, that from 300 to 500 passengers, mostly emigrants, are landed daily at that place.

☞ It is expected that Girard College will be opened in the spring, in conformity with the will of the testator.

☞ Thirty-six vessels left the harbor at Cleveland, Ohio, on Sunday week for Buffalo, ladened with produce.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Test of Piety.

What sacrifice would it be to a man who has £500 a year, to devote annually £100 to the purposes of religion and intellectual improvement; to another who has £1,000 a year, to devote £300; and to another who has £10,000, to allow £4,000 annually for the same object? It would not deprive any one of them either of the necessaries or of the luxuries of life, or of anything that contributes to comfort, honor or sensitive enjoyment.—It is now high time that the sincerity of a profession of Christianity should be tried by the test of pounds, shillings and pence. That man who refuses to come forward with his wealth, when it is proved to be requisite for the purposes alluded to, ought not to assume the name of a Christian. He has never felt the influence of that divine maxim of our Saviour: "It is more blessed to give than receive."—He virtually declares that "laying up treasures on earth," providing fortunes for his family, keeping up a certain rank of society, and living in luxurious abundance, are matters of far greater importance than the approach of the millennium and the regeneration of the world. If a man is in doubt with respect to the existence of religious principle in his soul, I know not a better test than this by which to try the sincerity of his Christian profession. Is he willing at the call of God to give up a portion of his possessions to his service, and even to "forsake all," to prove himself "a follower of Christ?

Religious Gems.

God's work must always be done in God's own way. There are many persons who think they may make improvements; but they are much mistaken.

The pillar of cloud was a constant director to the Israelites. By day it went before them, a pillar of cloud which could not be misunderstood; by night it appeared above their tents, shining with a steady light. The Bible is the same to us. In every step of our journey, in every part of our pilgrimage through this wilderness of sin, it is "able to make us wise unto salvation." In every difficulty the page of divine truth may be consulted; we may at any time, night or day, look to God for direction, and we shall find it. The Israelites never marched without the cloud to direct them, except once, and then they paid for it dreadfully. If we would walk safely, let us take the Bible for our guide, and never do anything which is contrary to its directions. By the cloudy pillar, the Israelites were led in all their journeyings towards Canaan. Examine yourselves. Is the word of God your rule—the spirit of God your guide—the presence of God always sought for? Is God your refuge in temptations—your solace in afflictions—your hope in gloom—your delight in every possible condition? Remember, that "as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Remember, that if the Bible is not your study, nor the grace of God to apply it to your heart, your supreme desire, "the light that is in you is darkness, and how great is that darkness!"—Cross and Journal.

Potato Jelly.

The potato may with ease be made into a rich and nutritious jelly, and the process should be generally known. It is as follows: Let a couple of good sized, mealy potatoes be washed, peeled, and grated; throw the pulp thus procured in a basin of water and stir it well; let it stand a few minutes, and a sufficient quantity of starch will have fallen for the purpose required; pour off the water, and pour on boiling water, stirring the starch the while; and it will soon and suddenly pass to the state of jelly. The only nicety required is to be careful that the water is absolutely boiling, otherwise the change will not take place. On comparing this jelly with that obtained from Bermuda, a difficulty in discriminating between the two will be apparent. The difficulty, however, becomes more obvious on applying sugar to sweeten the jellies, for then the superior flavor of the potato jelly is at once perceived, and it is equal, if not superior, also, to arrow root in its nutritious properties.

To make Kitchen Vegetables Tender.—When peas, French beans, and similar productions, do not boil easily, it has usually been imputed to the coolness of the season, or to the rains. This popular notion is erroneous; the difficulty of boiling them soft arises from a superabundant quantity of gypsum imbibed during their growth. To correct this throw a small quantity of sub-carbonate of soda into the pot along with the vegetables, the carbonic acid of which will seize upon the lime in the gypsum, and free the legumes, &c., from its influence.—From the French.

Religious Newspapers.

1. Every year a religious newspaper contains reading matter enough to compose several large octavo volumes, printed in the ordinary type.

2. In its articles, original and selected, there is almost always a considerable variety, adapted to the various tastes of its readers.

3. If true to its character, it sustains the doctrine and discipline of that branch of the church to which it is dedicated, and takes particular notice of their proceedings in all the departments of Christian benevolence, together with general remarks upon what others are doing for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ.

4. It is, in fact, a weekly journal, in which is condensed the most important information, touching those subjects which lie nearest the Christian's heart.

5. It is to the pastor, his most efficient auxiliary in furnishing his people with the information which they need, and which it is impossible for him to communicate in his ordinary ministrations.

6. To the Christian, deprived of sanctuary privileges, it supplies in a measure the bread of life. For there he can usually find something which he can read, and upon which he can meditate with profit to his own soul.

7. It suggests modes and ways of doing good which would not otherwise have occurred to the mind, and which are found to be exceedingly useful.

8. It awakens the sympathies of many in behalf of those who are perishing for lack of vision, enlarges their hearts and leads them to corresponding action, that they may be brought to the knowledge of the truth.

9. It bears its testimony against that spirit and those practices which are corrupting, and which tend to a degeneracy of morals, and the destruction of the soul.

19. It affords important aid to the parent in the education of his children, a practical exemplification of which may be seen in the comparison of the families in which such a paper is taken, with those from it is excluded.

11. Its miscellaneous articles and its summary, while they gratify the natural thirst for intelligence, furnish very much that is useful in the ordinary affairs of life, and which is often turned to an excellent practical account.

12. It principally treats of that "kingdom which is not of this world," but which, as immortal and accountable beings, demand the attention of all. For when all else shall vanish away and be forgotten, only those great truths which is the object of a religious newspaper to illustrate and enforce, will be commended by Him who is Judge of the quick and the dead.

Roman Catholic Toleration.

The Catholics in this country claim full toleration for all their religious views and practices, and they have it in common with all other sects, notwithstanding Protestantism is the prevailing religion of the land. But where they have the power, the privilege is not reciprocated. See how it is in Spain at this time. It is stated in the English papers that the Queen of Spain has issued a peremptory order, requiring the Baptist missionaries to leave the Fernando Po. The reason assigned was that "the religion of Spain is the Catholic religion, which admits of no toleration," and that, as "the religion of the missionaries was not that of Spain, it involved, of necessity, disaffection against the authority of Spain." A few months are allowed for their departure; in the meantime they are not to preach.

Let the Catholics but once get the power in these United States, and no man who is not of their faith would be allowed to open his mouth on the subject of religion. We are quite willing that Catholics should enjoy their opinions, and preach their own doctrines as well as other sects; but we like not their use of power when they get it. We often see straws which tell us which way the wind blows.—Ex.

Cure for Croup.

We find in the Journal of Health the following simple remedy for this dangerous disease. Those who have passed nights of almost agony at the bedsides of loved children will treasure it up as an invaluable piece of information: "If a child is taken with the croup, instantly apply cold water, ice water if possible, suddenly and freely to the neck and chest, with a sponge, The breathing will almost instantly be relieved. So soon as possible let the sufferer drink as much as it can; then wipe it dry, cover it up warm, and soon a quiet slumber will relieve the parent's anxiety and lead the heart in thankfulness to the power which has given to the pure gushing fountain, such medical qualities."

Christian Liberality.

There are certain great principles laid down in Scripture in relation to giving, and the use of property generally, respecting which there is much practical skepticism. They are as follows:

1. That which we have, we hold as stewards that must give account.

2. The way to increase is to distribute. Some are rich because they are liberal.

3. That which is given to the poor is loaned to the Lord.

4. That which is done to Christ's little ones is done to himself.

A hundred to one is the rate of interest God allows now; and life everlasting in the world to come. Mark, 10: 29.—Dr. Nevins.

The Ten Commandments Versified.—The Decalogue has been thus tersely and quaintly rendered into rhyme, and would in this shape be a good exercise for the memories of young children:

1. I am the Lord thy God—serve only me.—
2. Before no idols bow thy impious knee;
3. Use not my name in trifles or in jest:
4. Dare not profane my sacred day of rest,
5. Ever to parents due obedience pay:
6. Thy fellow-creatures, man, thou shalt not slay;
7. In no adulterous commerce bear a part.
8. From stealing keep with care thy hand and heart;
9. All false reports against thy neighbor, hate;
10. And ne'er indulge a wish for his estate.

For the Boys.—Seven classes of company to be avoided.

1. Those who ridicule their parents, or disobey their commands.
2. Those who profane the Sabbath or scoff at religion.
3. Those who use profane or filthy language.
4. Those who are unfaithful, play truant, and waste their time in idleness.
5. Those that are of a quarrelsome temper, and apt to get into difficulty with others.
6. Those who are addicted to lying and stealing.
7. Those who are of a cruel disposition; who take pleasure in torturing and maiming animals and insects, robbing birds of their young, &c.

All these classes of companions are to be avoided; for if you associate with them, they will soon make you like themselves.

The Cold-hearted professor's Heaven.—I mistake in my caption. The man of the world has his heaven here below; the sincere, humble Christian has his above; but the cold-hearted professor has his nowhere! He can neither enjoy the world nor God. He has so much taste for divine things as to see the folly of earthly pleasures, yet not enough to induce him to leave all and consecrate himself to God. He attempts to serve God and Mammon; and the result is, he serves neither with any satisfaction. He cannot relish sin and vanity, and still he fails to lay up treasures above! Oh, that such might see their condition in its true light, and look about themselves, lest they should be building on false hopes, and at last meet with irremediable disappointment!—J. M. B.

Politics and Spirituality.

Rev. Mr. Oncken, the modern apostle of Germany, in a letter to the Secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society, says:

"We are in our time exposed to peculiar dangers in this country, when both our political and ecclesiastical institutions, venerable by age, are shaken to the very centre, and when the religious excitement among all classes has reached an unexampled height. The Lord keep us from the troubled waters of politics, in which the Christians of Great Britain and America have, I fear, been so much immersed as to injure the spirituality of mind and zeal for the Lord. We have just one work to do, and whatever convulsions may shake the earth, we must have our eye and heart fixed on this; to preach Christ, become all things to all men, that we may save some, and restore apostolic churches. The object of my visit to this place, is the formation of a little church. Two brethren, formerly Roman Catholics, natives of Selisia, the one residing here, the other engaged as colporteur near Landeck, but also with us at present, have testified of the Lord, and the first fruit of their laboring is, the ingathering of four souls to the Lord, whom I intend baptizing into Christ's death this evening. To-morrow morning (Lord's day) the church will be formed. In the afternoon I have a good opportunity of preaching the unsearchable riches of the gospel in the saloon of the Moravian brethren, and in the evening we shall commemorate the Lord's death with the infant church. There are several other believers in this town, convinced of the truth of believers' immersion, but fear restrains them from following the Lord at present."

Oh that Christians in America might think of these things. What is the question whether the Whigs or Democrats are to prevail at the next election, to the question whether Jesus Christ is to be acknowledged the rightful King and Lord of this people?—Watchman.

Prayer in Sunday-Schools.

A correspondent asks the following questions:—"Should prayer be neglected at the opening of a Sunday-school under ordinary circumstances?"

We answer: by no means. We could assign many good reasons for this answer. It is, however, sufficient to say, that we would think it quite as appropriate to open the public services of the church without prayer as those of the Sunday-school. We understand that the principal object of Sunday-schools is to teach the fear and knowledge of God. Have we no need of divine assistance in this great work? Can we expect to succeed without invoking the blessing of the Most High?

We should not only pray in form, but in spirit. We should use every precaution to interest the children in this solemn duty. Hence prayers in a Sunday school should be short and simple; asking for just the things we want, and not using vain repetitions. "Lord teach us how to pray."

The Praying Islanders.

About the time when the Gospel won its first converts in Raiatea, one of the South Sea Islands, a canoe with four men was upset at sea. Two of them, having embraced Christianity, immediately cried, "Let us pray to Jehovah; for he can save us." "Why did you not pray to him sooner?" replied their pagan comrades; "here we are in water, and it is useless to pray now." The Christians, however, did cry earnestly to their God, while all four were clinging for life to the broken canoe. In this situation a shark suddenly rushed toward them, and seized one of the men. His companions held him fast as long as they could, but the monster prevailed, and dragged the unfortunate, struggling victim away, marking the track with his blood. He was one of the idolaters. After some time, the tide bore the surviving three to the reef, when, just as they were cast upon it, a second shark snatched the other idolater with his jaws, and carried off his prey. The suffering man shrieked for assistance, but the two Christians, struggling amid the breakers, could give him no aid. The remarkable preservation of the praying survivors made a deep impression upon the minds of their countrymen, and powerfully recommended the "God that heareth prayer."—Tyerman & Bennet.

Education of Children.

Much has been written of late on the right education of children, and many excellent treatises and essays on the subject: but as a large portion of the community have neither ability to procure, nor leisure to read them, it has been thought good to endeavor to condense the wisdom contained in them into a few rules, which may be easily committed to memory, or framed and hung up for constant reference, and which, if faithfully observed, will certainly be attended with success.

Rules for the right education of Children.

1. Aim yourself sincerely and conscientiously to please God in all things, and to keep all his commandments.—Without this nothing can be done to any purpose, nor any success expected.

2. Be sure to get your own religion, and the religion you teach your children, from the word of God, and not from the word or decree of man; and for this end make yourself and your children, as they are capable of understanding them, familiar with all parts of Scripture.

3. From the first dawn of reason in your children, speak and act the truth in all your dealings with them and before them, using no kind of deception whatever on any occasion.

4. Pray frequently with them, and for them.

5. Endeavor constantly and in all things, both in speaking and acting, to set them a good example.

6. Converse with them, as they are able to understand, on the subject of religion frequently, freely, familiarly and affectionately, explaining its doctrines, enforcing its precepts, setting forth its privileges, and urging on the conscience of its motives; and try to find out the state of their minds toward God.

7. Use the authority which God has given you, in insisting on outward obedience to his commands, (which is all that human authority can insure) and for no selfish purpose; firmly yet kindly restraining them from every thing that is evil, or leads to evil; requiring them to attend all the ordinances of God of which they are capable, and to behave respectfully under them, and in all their intercourse with others never allow them to do what they would not like to have done to themselves.

8. Pray earnestly to God, for Christ's sake, to give success to your endeavors, and depend on him to do it.

9. Call yourself daily to an account for the manner in which these rules have been observed.

Scraps of Education.—Gold is more frequently found in grains than in lumps, and it is not less valuable on that account. So with knowledge. Fragments when united make up the intellectual storehouse. John Adams said in an epistle to his wife:—"The education of our children is never out of my mind. Train them to virtue. Habituate them to industry, activity and spirit. Make them consider every vice shameful and unmanly. Fire them with ambition to be useful. Make them disdain to be destitute of any useful or ornamental knowledge."

True Greatness.—Of great deeds I make no account, but a great life I reverence.

Making Home Happy.

It is a duty devolving upon every member of a family to endeavor to make all belonging to it happy. This may, with a very little pleasant exertion be done.—Let every one contribue something towards improving the grounds belonging to their house. If the house is old and uncomfortable, let each exert himself to render it better and more pleasant. If it is good and pleasant, let each strive still further to adorn it. Let flowering shrubs and trees be planted, and vines and woodbines be trailed about the windows and doors; add interesting volumes to the family library; little articles of furniture to replace those which are last wearing out; wait upon and anticipate each others wants, and ever have a pleasant smile for all and each.

Make home happy! Parents ought to teach the lesson in the nursery, and by the fire-side; give it the weight of their precept and example. If they would, ours would be happy and more virtuous country. Drunkenness, profanity, and other disgusting vices, would die away; they could not live in the influence of a lovely and refined home.

Does any one think, "I am poor and have to work hard to get enough to sustain life, and cannot find time to spend in making our old house more attractive." Think again! is there not some time every day which you spend in idleness, or smoking, or mere littleness, which might be spent about your home? "Flowers are God's smiles," said Wilberforce, and they are as beautiful beside the cottage as the palace, and may be enjoyed by the inhabitants of one as well as the other. There are but few homes in our country which might not be made more beautiful and attractive, not to strangers only, but to their inmates. Let every one study then, and work to make whatever place they may be in, so attractive that the hearts of the absent ones shall go back to it as the dove did to the ark of Noah.

More danger from bad Books than from Wild Beasts.

Mr. Kirk says, "It has long been the policy of the Devil to keep the masses of the world in ignorance, but finding at length that they will read, he poisons their literature."—Yes, this is undeniably true. The devil has not only writers, printers and bookstores, but colporteurs too on the field. Yesterday I saw one of them in the town of E. who follows from day to day and from place, a migratory show of wild animals, traversing the western States. "Wiser in his generation than the children of light," he visits not the pennyless homes of the people, but allures them to his stand on the gala day of show and excitement, when money is in their pockets and prudence out of their heads. I noticed among his cheap, paper-covered, "polite literature," a large assortment of about seventy varieties, which were offered in fit companionship with "the Mysteries of Paris," and "the Pirates own Book." One of the men attending "the concern" told me they frequently sold fifty dollars worth a day.

These show days and circuses are perilous days for the youth of the country, who buy and carry home this corrupting trash.—Am. Messenger.

The Fearful Child.

Samuel was a boy not quite seven years old. He used to sleep in a little room which joined the chamber of his father and mother. This little room was nicely furnished, and the bed in which Samuel slept was one of the very best sort. But still this poor child was scarcely ever willing to go to bed. Every night, as soon as his mother took the lamp away and went to her own room, Samuel would begin to cry. Sometimes it was an hour before he could get to sleep. And if he awoke in the night, he would begin to cry again, and often used to get up and go into his mother's room, weeping and trembling all the while.

One morning his father sat down by him, and began to talk with him. "My dear boy," said he, "what is it that makes you cry every night? Are you sick, or are you in pain?"

"No, father, it is not that; I am not sick, and nothing hurts me; but I am so afraid."

"What are you afraid of, my child!"

"O, father, I can hardly tell; but I am afraid of being left alone in the dark."

"Why, does the darkness hurt you?"

"O, no: but still I am afraid, and as soon as the light is taken away I begin to tremble."

"Tell me, my son, what is it that you are afraid of?"

Samuel waited a little, and looked down, and then said, "Dear father, I am afraid of ghosts!"

Samuel's father smiled, and said, "This is just what I thought. I was afraid some foolish people had been telling you stories to frighten you."

"Yes, sir," said Samuel, "I have heard a great many stories in the kitchen about ghosts and witches; and that is what makes me afraid."

"My son," said his father, "you see I have often told you that you ought not to stay in the kitchen. It is foolish and wicked for any one to alarm little children with such nonsense. If you had told me this before, I could have showed you how idle these tales are."

"My son, I wish you never to think any more about these stories. There is no truth in them. When you go to your little room, always kneel down and pray to God. Ask him to keep you from all evil in the night. God is everywhere.—God sees you in the darkest night, and takes care of you when you are sound asleep. If God loves you, nothing can hurt you by day or by night. Think of this; love God, fear him, and you will have nothing else to fear. This is the way to be truly brave and manly. The more you fear God, the less you will fear any creature

---

A poor Woman's Eloquence—The other day we heard a poor Irish woman describing her love of children. She never tired, she said, of tending them, and whenever she heard one cry her heart cried with it. There is true, genuine, heartfelt poetry in the idea—more than can be found in whole columns of sickly, sentimental trash intended for poetry.

The darkest and most contemptible ignorance is that of not knowing ones self; and that all we have, and all we excel in, is the gift of God.

Swimming with the Current.

Dr. South observes that "when the devil finds he cannot stem the current, he swims with it." This has often been illustrated in the history of the church.—The first effort of Satan is to array his servants against God's children: he will have them ridicule slander, vex, imprison, plunder and kill them. But if the current of religion comes to run too strong for him, then he will have all his servants fall in with it: he will have every body put on a form of godliness and join the church, till he thus creates for himself a strong interest within her own body, and transfer the contest from without to within her walls.

So with regard to doctrines. He will have his children oppose the great doctrines of the gospel, which humble men's pride and self-righteousness, as long as possible. But when these doctrines have fairly triumphed, he will have them first embrace, then eviscerate them.

He will have benevolent enterprises also neglected, opposed and sneered at as long as practicable; then espoused and ruined by the introduction of a worldly spirit, and worldly measures.

Puffets.—Two pounds of butter, three quarters of a pound of sugar, four eggs, one pint of milk, a gill of yeast, and as much flour as will make a good dough, set in a warm place to rise, for an hour or more, until it is light; then roll it thin—cut it in small cakes. Bake in a quick oven.

There is nothing purer than honesty—nothing sweeter than charity—nothing warmer than love—nothing richer than wisdom—nothing brighter than virtue—nothing more steadfast than faith. These united in one mind, form the purest, the sweetest, the richest, the brightest, and the most steadfast happiness.

One fault wilfully committed, authorizes the imputation of many more. When the ear is opened to accusations, accusers will not be wanting; and every one will officiously come with stories against a disgraced person, where nothing can be said in their favor.

Long Sermons.—The minister who labors constantly in one place cannot well interest his hearers one hour in each sermon. Forty-five minutes is generally as much time as should be devoted to one discourse. It is better to fall short of this than to exceed it.

Two things are causes of daily astonishment to me; the readiness of Christ to come from heaven to earth for me; and my backwardness to rise from earth to heaven with him.—Pearce,

If I had not God in Christ to think of and speak to, to make me wiser, and better, and happier than I am, and to go to when I die, I should think myself undone. Rev. T. Adams.

No man, who deserves to be well thought of himself, in point of morals, will entertain a slight opinion of the virtue of the other sex.

Value of a Christian Newspaper.

Every family ought to have a weekly religious newspaper. It is an ill way, too, to borrow, for that is cheating the printer. The small subscription price will make no man poorer, but richer—richer in temporals, but more in spirituals. A family that takes such a paper, can easily be distinguished from one that does not, by their enlarged information and sympathy. Their minds scan the moral horizon, and their hearts beat to the measure of a larger love to the church and to the world. It aids the father and mother in the religious education of their children. It furnishes Sunday reading of a pure character. It gives a higher tone to the conversation of the table and the fireside. A clergyman can tell at once, by their zeal, interest and intelligence, the households in his parish that are blessed by such a weekly messenger of truth and salvation.—Christian World.

CREAM CAKE.—Four cups of flour, three cups of sugar, two cups of butter, one cup of cream, five eggs, one teaspoonful of salaratus, dissolved in a little milk; beat it well, bake in a quick oven.

POETRY.

THE FIELD IS THE WORLD.

"The sower soweth the word."

Sow in the morn thy seed,
At eve hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,
Broad cast it round the land.

Beside all waters sow,
The highway furrows stock;
Drop it where thorns and thistles grow
Scatter it on the rock.

The good, the fruitful ground
Expect not here nor there;
O'er hill and dale, by plots, 'tis found;
Go forth, then every where.

Thou know'st not which may thrive,
The late or early sown;
Grace keeps the precious germ alive,
When and wherever sown.

And duly shall appear,
In verdure, beauty, strength,
The tender blade, the stalk, the ear,
And the full corn at length.

Thou canst not toil in vain;
Cold, heat, and moist and dry,
Shall foster and mature the grain
For garners in the sky.

Thence, when the glorious end,
The day of God, is come,
The angel-reapers shall descend,
And heaven sing, "Harvest home!"

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

CONSOLATION.

BY CRABBE.

PILGRIM, burthened with thy sin,
Come the way to Zion's gate;
There, till mercy lets thee in,
Knock and weep, and watch and wait.
Knock! he knows the sinner's cry;
Weep! he loves the mourner's tears;
Watch! for saving grace is nigh;
Wait! till Heavenly light appears.
Hark! it is the bridegroom's voice!
"Welcome, pilgrim, to thy rest;
Now within the gate rejoice,
Safe and sealed, and bought and blest—
Safe, from all the lures of vice;
Sealed, by signs the chosen know;
Bought, by love, and life the price;
Blest, the mighty debt to owe.

Holy pilgrim, what for thee,
In a world like this, remain!
From thy guarded breast shall flee,
Fear and shame, and doubt and pain.
Fear, the hope of Heaven shall fly;
Shame, from glory's view retire;
Doubt, in certain raptures die;
Pain, in endless bliss expire.

'BE NOT WEARY IN WELL-DOING.'

BY J. CLEMENT.

O! WEARY not, O! weary not
In labor well begun;
The day is short and waning fast,
Thy work will soon be done.

O! weary not, O! weary not
Until the sun declines;
There's honor gained from noble toil,
And God the work assigns.

O! weary not, O! weary not,
Though hard be thine employ;
Each sweat-drop forms within the heart
A fount of holy joy.

O! weary not, O! weary not,
For when thy task is o'er,
A home is thine of endless bliss,
Where toil is known no more.

LITERARY NOTICES.

GOVERNMENT MAP OF MEXICO.—Messrs. Groves & Co., 65 south Third street, have published a large and handsome pocket "Map of the U. S. of Mexico, as organized and defined by the several acts of the Congress of that Republic, constructed from a great variety of printed and manuscript documents, by H. S. Tanner, Esq." This is the third edition for 1646, and contains Capt. Fremont's route and table of distances, the seat of war between the United States and Mexico, and much other valuable information; it is engraved on copper 30 by 24 inches handsomely colored. As this map is sold at the extremely low price of 50 cents per copy, nothing but a very extensive sale can pay the enterprising publishers.

CHRIST AND ANTI-CHRIST.—The first part of this work is a demonstration of that great fundamental truth, believed and firmly maintained by all people in this land, Jews excepted, viz: that "Jesus is the Messiah." The second part establishes by the testimony of Scripture, authentic history, Romish Records and undeniable facts that Popery, the system half religious, half Pagan, called Romanism, is the Anti-Christ of Revelation. Here we find the old irrefutable arguments, which have stood the test for ages under the assaults of the legions of Rome, presented by a new writer.

We are sorry that there are so many complaints about irregularities in the reception of the Advocate. Some of our subscribers complain of not receiving the paper at all, and others of receiving it very irregular. We should be glad to know where the fault lies, and to remedy these unpleasant and vexatious irregularities. We hope our friends will aid us in ferreting out the same, and in getting things as near right as possible. Post Masters and patrons are earnestly requested to let us know immediately, if at any time the Advocate should fail to come in proper time and number.

The Legislature of this State will meet on Tuesday the 5th inst. The Governor's annual message will be delivered on Wednesday at 12 o'clock. There will be a State Treasurer, State Librarian, and the usual Officers of both Houses to be elected. This will be a glorification for the Whigs!

Harrisburg Company.

A company of volunteers, called the Cameron Guards, and consisting of one hundred and eighteen men, was formed under the second requisition of the President, and started for Mexico, via Pittsburg, &c., on Saturday morning the 26th ult. The company is under the command of Captain E. C. Williams.

Editor's trip to Philadelphia.

I left home in the morning train of cars on the 11th ult.,—stopped a few hours at Mount Joy, Lancaster county—called to see my daughters, Ellen Cordelia and Mary Jane, the former a teacher and the latter a pupil, in the Cedar Hill Seminary, near that place. Dined with my old friend, J. Servey, and had a pleasant interview with sundry brethren, and also with my old friend, David Cockley and young bride, of Lancaster.

In the afternoon train, of said day, I proceeded on my way as far as the city of Lancaster—stopped and stayed over night with my much esteemed friend, Judge Schaeffer.—During the course of the evening, I called to see and had a pleasing interview with Bishop E. H. Thomas, and several other brethren.

On Saturday morning the 12th ult., I took the cars, and went on to the city. I stopped with my cousin David. Winebrenner, Jr., Hardware Merchant. In the Sun and Ledger of the same date, I found a meeting announced for brother Harn and myself, in the Native American Hall, North Third street, commencing on Sabbath morning at 10 o'clock.

Accordingly, I went to the Hall at the appointed time, and preached from the text: "By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small!"—Amos 7: 2. The congregation was small, but the season was solemn and interesting. We had preaching again in the afternoon and evening, when the congregations were larger and still more promising. On Monday evening we had no meeting—I heard Mr. J. B. Gough lecture on Temperance. On Tuesday evening we had preaching again, and continued meetings every day for one week. On Wednesday brother G. U. Harn arrived and preached that evening. From that time on we preached alternately for one week. On Thursday the 24th I left for home, whilst brother Harn remained and intended to continue the meeting over Christmas, and perhaps longer.

Jacob (the church) in Philadelphia is small; by whom shall he arise? This is an important question, and yet easy to answer. He who blessed Jacob of old, can bless Jacob now. Nevertheless, the Lord will be entreated of to do these things. As literal Jacob received the blessing by wrestling for it, so must spiritual Jacob do now. But, perhaps, a preparatory work is necessary.

The truth in the cause, in Philadelphia, has been greatly injured by neglect and mismanagement. And in this, ministers and people are alike to blame.

In the first place, there is a want of union and co-operation. There are ample materials for the organization of a considerable church. But to bring them together into a social compact, or church state, seems to be the greatest difficulty. There are some of our brethren carried away by sectarian tinsels and glory. Some, too, who seemed to be quite humble and steadfast, whilst in the country, or in the interior towns, are so bewitched with these things when they get to the city, that they fall away from their attachment to the church, and her pure and scriptural principles. My soul was pained and grieved within me, to find that some of our young brethren from Lancaster, and other places, have had their hearts so far alienated from the church, that they have joined in with various sects, and ceased to meet with their brethren of the "Church of God." These things we deeply regret. For more than one reason we regret it. Were it not for these things, and a few more that might be mentioned, the "Church of God" would soon rise in Philadelphia. There are some faithful souls in the little church there, who ardently desire to see the cause rise and prosper in that great city. We hope they will hold together, and prove true and faithful to the cause they have espoused, and then we hope the time is not far distant when the church will rise, multiply and prosper, in the city of bortherly love.

The Old and New Year.

The year 1846 is now numbered with the past. The year 1847 commenced to-day.

During the past year many changes have occurred--some for the better and some for the worse. Some have changed from nature to grace—some from the ways of life to the ways of death—others from a state of peace to a state of war; and other some from time to eternity.

Some things, too, have sprung into being, during the past year, whether for good or evil, time will show, which before had no existence. Among these new things we reckon our Semi-monthly Paper—the Church Advocate. The Advocate made its first appearance on the 1st of May last. On its first appearance it was hailed by hundreds, as a most welcome visiter. And for a little while we had every reason to hope that we should succeed far beyond all expectation. And on the old ruinous credit system we might, perhaps, have got twice as many subscribers as the Gospel Publisher ever had. But the cash system being new, and withal unpopular among a certain class of newspaper readers, there was a great falling off at the expiration of the first three months. However, we are getting along pretty well, and we hope still to do better.

Will our agents and friends renew their efforts, with the new year, and see how many new subscribers they can send us! We feel thankful for past favors, and hope they will continue their co-operations for the time to come.

We hope, also, that our contributors will not slack their efforts, but continue as heretofore. We request them to send in things, both new and old, that may be interesting and profitable to the readers of the Advocate.

We expect shortly to make out and send on for collection our accounts aganist delinquents. All who suffered their papers to be stopped, by reason of non-payment, will be charged sixty-two and a-half cents, according to terms; and the only way to avoid the payment, will be to pay up for the volume, and order the back numbers to be sent on to them. Our agents will please to make them this offer.

The year '47 may be a notable year in the history of the world. And for whatever else it may be made notable, we hope and pray it may not fail to become memorable for being "the set time to favor Zion"—"the year of the right hand of our God." May the Lord our God send us both temporal and spiritual peace, happiness and prosperity!

President's Message.

On Tuesday, December 8th, shortly after 12 o'clock, the President's Message was delivered to both Houses. As it is very long, we can only present a brief extract in our columns.

After alluding to the general prosperity of our country, and the happy state of our relation to foreign powers, with the exception of one, the President proceeds to notice the war with Mexico. He says: "The existing war with Mexico was neither desired nor provoked by the United States. On the contrary, all honorable means were resorted to, to avert it. After years of endurance and aggravated and unredressed wrongs on our part, Mexico, in violation of solemn treaty stipulations, and of every principle of justice recognized by civilized nations, commenced hostilities; and thus, by her own act, forced the war upon us. Long before the advance of our army to the left bank of the Rio Grande, we had ample cause of war against Mexico; and had the United States resorted to this extremity, we might have appealed to the whole civilized world for the justice of our cause."

He then goes on to establish the correctness of this statement by explaining the cause of the war, recapitulates our grievances, the recommendation of reprisals by Gen. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren; the treaty of 1839, appointment of commissioners, their awards for over two millions of dollars, and indulgence granted at the request of Mexico, the new convention ratified by the Senate, with two amendments, with the Senate of Mexico, but three out of the twenty payments for amounts adjudicated as yet made, and over four millions of claims still unadjusted.

The President recounts the history—the annexation of Texas—the acknowledgment of her independence in the principal nations, and by SANTA ANNA himself, and the offer of Mexico to acknowledge it on condition he maintained the Rio Grande to be the western boundary of Texas—so maintained from 1803 to 1819, so ceded to spain, so claimed by Texas, and so maintained by our Secretary of State in 1811, so asserted by Congress in their acts of establishing a custom house, post-offices, and post roads west of the Neuces, nor did Congress complain at the last session of the advance of our troops to the Rio Grande.

Mexico withdrew her Minister and threatened war—was invited to negotiate and assented, but refused to receive our Minister when sent, and it was avowed that war was the only alternative of Mexico; and on the 4th of April, 1846, orders were issued to commence the war by an attack on our troops east of the Rio Grande.

Our military and naval commanders were instructed in no event to commence hostilities, but to resent aggression. Mexico was not for the Neuces, but for all Texas.

Such, he says, have been the grounds of Mexico from the beginning. PAREDES was the enemy of the United States, the friend of monarchy, and rose upon the war spirit. There was no hope of peace with him.

SANTA ANNA was not a monarchist and not committed to the war. Our Naval Commodores were instructed not to oppose his entrance to Mexico, if attempted, because there was a better prospect of peace with him than PAREDES.

He recapitulates the brilliant achievements of our army and navy, the conquest of California, New Mexico, Coahuila and Tamaulipas.

The President commends a vigorous prosecution of the war as the best means of securing an early and honorable peace. For this purpose the ranks of the regular army should be filled.

The volunteers hereafter sent should serve during the war, and will require a loan of nineteen millions for the service, until 30th June, 1848. About one half to be used during the year 1847, and the other half in 1848.

Should the war be continued, he recommends a reduction of the price of the public lands; a sale of the mineral lands, and that no appropriations be made for objects which can be postponed without great public injury. The expense to 30th June last, was about twenty-three millions and thirty-one thousand dollars.

Income about twenty-eight million five hundred thousand dollars—balance in the Treasury on the 1st July last, about nine million one hundred and twenty-six thousand dollars. Public debt, December 1st, 1846, about twenty-four million three hundred thousand dollars, of which there was due on the 4th of March, 1845, seventeen million seven hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

He recommends a branch mint at New York, and territorial Government for Oregon.

He recommends that the tariff of 1846 be maintained as it is, with the exception of war duties to be laid on sundry free articles, in the belief that it will yield a larger revenue than the tariff of 1842. He also recommends a modification of the Sub-treasury law.

Chaplains to Congress.

BISHOPS H. SLICER and C. SPROLE have been elected Chaplains to Congress—the former in the Senate, and the latter in the House.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The "Advocate."

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I feel to thank you for sending to me the publication called the CHURCH ADVOCATE. I believe it to be one of the finest periodicals of the day. It appears to be entirely free from sectarianism. How pleasant it is to see a religious periodical springing into existence, to be free from that sectarian and party warfare, which so much characterize most of the religious papers! In looking over its contents, there is a peculiar gladness and thankfulness arising in my mind, that God ever blessed me with a disposition to read, and use the various means given to us by the Almighty for improvement. I call the disposition to read a blessing, and a blessing, too, that all may enjoy who profess rationality. We often hear persons say: "I have no disposition to read,—I take no delight in it." The very reason why they take no delight in it, is because they do not feel themselves under obligations to God for the improvement of the various talents given them; consequently, they can spend their time, (which is not otherwise employed) in idleness, and in wickedly talking about their neighbors, in preference to reading and useful study.

Religious periodicals are a means of grace, and consequently given to us by the Great Giver through His servants, as well as His revealed will in the Bible, and is just as obligatory upon us to avail ourselves of these means of grace, as it is for us to read the Bible. I am not of the notion, as some are, that no other book should be read but the Bible; nor yet do I say that the reading of the Bible should give place to other reading matter.—No! It is the Book of books, and can be held as such; yet there is still time (if men are disposed) for the reading of other matter, as there is time for prayer and other religious duties.

A PATRON.

"Lovest Thou Me?"—JOHN XXI. 17.

THE foregoing great question is affectionately addressed by our Saviour to Simon Peter, one of His Apostles, and is beautifully adapted to the life of the true and determined Christian. When temptations of the greatest magnitude assail him; when clouds of darkness overshadow the view of Heaven, and "Cares like a wild deluge come," to overwhelm his troubled soul, He seeks the solitude of his chamber, or frequented place of worship, and humbly prostrates himself at the feet of Jesus, (of whom he never asks relief in vain) and through Him approaches the Throne of the most Holy and living God.

Behold the Christian in his devotions, with clasped hands, and eyes turned Heavenward; he feels himself in the presence of his Maker, and humbly, yet freely and earnestly, he calls upon the Saviour to manifest himself, and to send speedy relief to his soul. He pleads not in vain. Now he feels the power of God, like precious incense, flowing through his soul, while his voice becomes stronger, and his bosom heaves with emotion; tears of joy and gladness course adown his cheeks, as he believes himself "delivered from evil." From the bottom of his heart he shouts praises to God, for His loving kindness and mercy in sending to this sinful world the meek and lowly Jesus, for the salvation of precious souls.

Kind reader! should the question of "Lovest thou me?" now meet the eye of the Christian, in pondering over the sacred volume, would he not be inclined to answer in the language of Peter: "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee?"

Is it not a sweet and consoling reflection to dwell upon, that Jesus condescends to ask of His people, "Lovest thou me?" Oh! what encouragement for the weary traveller toward Canaan. 'Tis like

Manna to the hungry soul,
And to the weary rest!"

How important, then, is it for the Christian to examine himself and inquire: "Do I love Jesus as I ought to love Him, or as it is my privilege to love Him?" And if his heart answers "No," let him determine immediately, that by the grace of God, through faith in the Saviour, he will endeavor and strive to be able to answer in the language of Peter: "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee."

When we reflect how easy the Cross of the Saviour is to be borne, and how wofully, dangerous and horrible is the reward of sin, why should we for a moment hesitate to serve God with all our hearts, and words, and actions?—why ever grow weary? What hope has the sinner,—what inducement to sin? I answer, none, but a few short years of (so-called) earthly pleasures, which are as widely different as darkness from day, compared with the religion of Jesus Christ. And what is the Christian's reward when he leaves the shores of mortality? I need not point you to the manifold assurances of the Bible; for, if you are a Christian in truth, you have that assurance in your own heart!

In looking over the pages of a useful pamphlet, the following excellent remarks attracted my attention, the truth of which is evident to every "pilgrim for a better land:"

"If we walk with God through the wilderness of life, he will walk with us when we reach the dark "valley of the shadow of death;" and though we may not hope for the same translation as Enoch, still like him we "shall not be, because God has taken us."—J. M. GOODE.

Again, I repeat, has not the true Christian a glorious prospect—a bright assurance of Heaven—where he shall meet his friends, relations, angels, the Saviour, and even the living and true God; there to dwell forever and ever, in glory and happiness.

HARRISBURG, December 22, 1846.

Letter from Brother G. U. Harn.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 26, 1846.

DEAR SIR:—

Per your request I present you this epitome of my visit to, and our operations in, this vast sea of mortal intelligencies.

In consequence of circumstances, over which I have had no control, I have been detained east of the Alleghenies much longer than I anticipated. On this account I agreed to aid in an effort to resuscitate the good cause in this city once more; where I arrived, as you are aware, on the 16th instant. The cause of God has sustained several very hard shocks here; but its fate is far from being hopeless in my judgment.

After the prevarications and reckless hypocrisy of Smith were exposed, Elder QUIGLY labored with much exceptance and some success, till his removal, under the sanction of the Standing Committee, to a succeeding party of the South Baptist congregation; the wisdom of which step, under the then existing circumstances, I much suspect. Brother DESHIRI was then directed to take charge of the other congregation, without the church being consulted, en mass, which placed him here under unpropitious indications. During his detention, on the 22d of February last, the church, consisting of above forty members, mutually agreed to disband. Now who is to have the blame in this matter I will not pretend to say, but there has been a good deal of children's conduct on all hands, which, if it was to do over, I suppose would not be done.

The meetings you and I held in the Native American Hall, North Third street, were not without some effect, though the attendance was not large.

The Natives themselves appeared very glad to hear that I remained to preach on to-morrow in their Hall.

You will also be much pleased to learn that old mother WINPENNY embraced religion on the night after we talked to her, and sung and prayed with her, in the house of sister BRACHENS, the Presbyterian.

She has gone to Manayunk to inform her children of the change in her old age; and as she is the matron of a numerous and respectable family, she will, no doubt, do good among them.

She is so much taken with you, that she intends visiting you in Harrisburg next summer, if the Lord will.

Her son, I think the owner of the Cotton Factory at Manayunk, has got your work on Regeneration, and mine on the institution of Feet-washing.

As my work is now for sale, I should be glad if the brethren on the circuits and stations would aid me in the sale of it, as I shall be under the necessity of soon leaving for the West, if nothing contrary to my present expectations prevents me.

I think the spreading of a work of the kind will be calculated to rescue that institution, in some degree at least, from the criminal neglect and infamy now heaped upon it.

Our brethren, therefore, should not only consider it a favor to me to spread it, but a duty they owe the institution.

So far I have sold tolerably ready to advocates and opponents. The most striking failure, however, was with a certain Baptist of this place. I asked him to buy; he said if he was to buy he would not read, for his mind was made up on that subject. But, says I, we may make up our minds in the wrong; therefore, we should judge all things, and hold fast to that which is good. Yes, but I don't wish to be convinced better; for I think the Lord will not condemn me for this fault, if it should be one. This argument, I must confess, I could not confute, but thought it strange for a Baptist. Are Baptists any more consistent than Paido-Baptists? I always thought they were. I hope I am not mistaken.

REEDSBURG, WAYNE CO., OHIO, December 5, 1846.

THUS we should live, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. As our Saviour will appear the second time, the scriptures furnish evidence that He will come again, and that His coming is near; and let us be diligent that we may be found of Him in peace. Yes, we should live to Him who has done so much that we might be happy here and hereafter; and let us follow holiness; and may we be found of Him without spot and blameless. May we appear with Him in glory when He appears. And now are we living for Heaven or for earth. Are we doing things which we ought not to do, and leaving things undone that we should do? Have we done things contrary to the will of God since we have known the Saviour's love, and lived in the neglect of duty? If we have, and have not repented, let us get about the work immediately. Let us go to God and ask Him, for the sake of His dear Son, to forgive all that we have done amiss; and may we be pardoned by Him, for pardon is freely given to them that ask; and may we all serve God better for the future than we have in times that are past. May we live as it is His will, and enjoy religion; and after death, may we dwell in Heaven, and praise Him there through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Pray for your humble servant.

LINES

Composed on the death of a boy, fourteen years of age, brother of Mr CYRUS MILLARD, and that of Mr CYRUS and Mrs SARAH MILLARD, four and only children, all of whom perished when the house of Mr. MILLARD was burnt in Russell, Geauga county, and State of Ohio, March the 7th, 1843

C. M.

1. A sad event took place of late,
Which happened in this town:
Come now and hear what I relate,
And I would make it known:

2 How that a boy of fourteen years,
Four younger children, too,
All at one time, as it appears,
Did bid this world adieu!

3. The younger children's parents had
One evening gone from home,
And left the children with the lad,
Till they again would come.

4 The children peaceful rest were in,
But soon resigned their breath;
The house took fire which they were in,
That caused their dreadful death.

5. And when those parents came again—
Where are their children dear?
'Mid smoking ruins which are seen,
Their children's bones are there!

6 What trouble have their parents seen,
And trying is their state,
Yet Christians sympathize with them,
Whose loss is now so great.

7. Their house was burnt, as now you hear,
With things they in it had,
And, Oh! their children perished there,
Together with the lad.

Letter from Elder Thos. Hickernell.

DECALP COUNTY, INDIANA, November 30, 1846.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:

This is to inform you that I left home on the 12th of this month, to take a route through the State of Indiana, and stayed all night with brother CROUP, in Adams county. The next day I passed through Fort Wayne; stopped and took dinner with brother G. HARTMAN—saw DAVID also, and found all well—passed on into Decalp county, and stopped the evening of the same day with father MAYBERRY, from Schuylkill county, Pa., where I left an appointment to preach on the evening of the 2d of December. He lives sixteen miles north of Fort Wayne, and about seven miles south of Auburn. From thence I passed into Lagrange county—stopped in Milford township, in the neighborhood of brother JNO. MARTINS, where we held our Eldership meeting—preached there three or four days—found the church in rather a dormant situation; but at present seems somewhat revived, and prospects are tolerable fair for a revival. From thence I passed across south to Wabash county—stayed the first night, near Wolflake, with MOSES MAXWELL, a brother to DAVID. They complain somewhat of having the ague, although his wife has been healthy all summer—heard from one DAVID WINEBRENNER, who exhorts near Wolflake, Noble county—a man of good standing in society; but I had no time to visit him--passed from MAXWELL'S across into Whitly county, and stayed all night with brother MELOY. His wife has been very sick with the congestive fever, but has got well again. From thence I passed across into the neighborhood of brother BAKER'S, Wabash county, thirty-six miles from MELOY'S—found brothers BAKER, LATTA and HOOD, shaking with the ague—preached four times. While I was with them, the congregations were large and attentive for such a thinly settled country—prospects of a revival not as good as at some other places—left that again and returned to brother MELOY'S, and preached for a small congregation. The evening following I preached further east, six miles, near Columbia, with brother COMP'S. The day following I returned to Decalp county—commenced a two-days' meeting at brother ELLER'S, near brother J. BEIDLER'S, three miles north-west of Auburn, assisted by brother MARTIN. The meeting was good and interesting—prospects for a revival fair. To-night I expect to preach in the court-house, in Auburn, and then I expect to pass on toward home; and I want to start for Wayne county, Ohio, to assist in holding some large meetings; and also to attend to collect money for the relief project. I hope the subscribers will try to hold themselves in readiness; and, if posible, to send their moneys with the ministers to the protracted meetings. I expect to be from home for the space of six or seven weeks. I also send you a new subscriber, and expect more can be got after a while.

The health of the people in the State of Indiana has been poor this season; yet not many deaths.

THOMAS HICKERNELL.

Letter from Brother J. S. Hostetter.

SHIPPENSBURG, Nov. 19, 1846.

VERY DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Among the many nefarious doctrines now abroad in the world, I am constrained to think that the one which has for its basis, "No salvation from sin in this life," is the most heinous in the sight of that God, who is too pure to look upon sin with any degree of allowance. It has often been a question to my mind, why men advocate such a doctrine! That man cannot live without sin, but must sin daily. Is it not an absolute absurdity, that a man can be both a saint and sinner! Can a man be in light and darkness at the same time? Can a man be asleep and watch at once? Can a man be dead and alive at one time? Or can a man serve two masters? No! These are things that are contrary to good sense.

But again: Can a tree bare both good and evil fruit? Can a fountain send forth both sweet and bitter water? No, verily not! But as the tree, so the fruit; and as the fountain, so the water; and, likewise, as the heart, so the deeds and works. "No man can serve two masters;" and "he that committeth sin is the servant of sin"—not of righteousness.

But we say it is not only contrary to reason for a man to be both a sinner and a Christian; it is also unscriptural. The Bible promises a salvation from sin; and God, who is too good to require impossibilities, has said it must be: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." Now is it not a notoirons fact, that where sin is, holiness cannot be?

Besides, we say, God has promised a salvation from sin. He has invited the sinner by the prophet, (Isaiah, 1st chap.) and said: "Come and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet, &c., they shall be made white as snow." Here I would just ask, what is purer than snow when it comes from the clouds? It is also said in the first chapter of the New Testament, by the Angel of the Lord, that a child should be born, whose name shall be called JESUS; for, said the Angel, "He shall save his people from their sins." And when that Jesus made His appearance, and preached His own and everlasting Gospel, one of His declarations was, that "if the Son makes you free, ye shall be free indeed." John 8: 36. It is evident that He meant from sin; for He said just before that: "If a man commit sin, he is the servant of sin." But all that will come to Him will be freed, and brought out from under the bondage of sin.

But again, St. John says, (1 John 3: 9) "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." And again, (chap. 5: 18) "We know whatsoever is born of God sinneth not."

Once more, and enough: To be holy is to be happy; and without holiness, there is no happiness. Heaven is a happy place, and consequently holy; and where sin is, there is no holiness; consequently, the man that sinneth is not holy. Well, if without holiness no man shall see the Lord; and as death brings about no change, and as in the grave there is no work nor device, I honestly and humbly ask, where is man to be prepared for Heaven? Some will answer, in purgatory. Ah! I am afraid if you get there, you will never get out. The character a man forms in this life, he will take to eternity; and if he sins daily in this life, the spots of sin will stick to him to all eternity. And if a man even could be happy, were he admitted to Heaven, stained with sin, he would be entirely out of his element. It matters not whether I do, or who does, not live without sin: the Bible requires it.

Yours, &c.,

J. S. HOSTETTER.

Letter from Brother Henry Scherich.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, PA., November 2, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take my pen in hand to drop a few lines to you, if you see proper to give it room in your worthy paper.

A religious paper is what the church needs, especially for such as I am, living as I do, a great distance from the church. I have not the pleasure to meet with them; yet I like to hear from them once in awhile. The most that discourages me is, my paper comes irregular.

I had the pleasure of meeting with my brothers at a protracted meeting in Greene county, twenty-five miles from where I live. I met with brothers J. HICKERNELL and G. U. HANN. Brother H. preached a very interesting discourse on Sabbath at 11 o'clock. He preached against Universalism, and against the awful sin of slavery, with other important matters.

Slavery is an evil that we ought to be very careful not to countenance. In my opinion it is the greatest evil that ever disgraced the earth. For my part, I cannot fellowship a person that is a slave-holder, nor those that take its part. I advise, if there are any such in the "Church of God," I think they ought to be speedily excommunicated from the church. We, as a church, profess to take the Bible for our discipline, and surely it does not countenance slavery. It is easier to keep an evil out of the church, than to put it out, after we have admitted it in.

Some contend that the blacks are the descendants of HAM, and the Lord cursed them, and therefore they become black. But the Lord did not curse them. It was Noah that cursed HAM when he was drunk; and I do not think when a drunken man curses his son, that that curse should remain on his de-descendants to the end of time.

I thank the Lord I still try to die to sin, and live to righteousness. I ask the prayers of the church, that I may hold out faithful until death.

Yours, in the bonds of love,

HENRY SCHERICH.

MARTINSBURG, Dec. 11, 1846.

DEAR BROTHER:—

Enclosed you will find two dollars, which please place to my credit, and forward the ADVOCATE to MRS. ELIZABETH UMPSTEAD, care of JOHN SLINGLUFF, Norristown, Montgomery county, Pa.

You may also forward her one of HARN'S work on Feet-washing, and charge the same to me.

Brother BARLOW has a vacation now for a few weeks. He is now at Broad-top, assisting Brother L. to hold a meeting. Soon after, one commences at Maria Forges, and then another at Woodburg. May there much good be done!

What is brother OWENS doing! When I seen him, he promised to be up and hold a meeting here about this time, but we have not yet heard from him. The church is very anxious to have a meeting.

Our prayer meetings are interesting and well attended; and we think that some good might be done if we could have a meeting soon.

The churches here, I believe, are well pleased with the appointment of brother T. We have secured for him a comfortable roomy house in a pleasent part of the town, with which I hope he will be pleased. Remember us in your prayers.

Your brother in Chrst,

L. SLINGLUFF.

Brother ALEXANDER B. SLYTER reported: That he felt glad for the privilege of meeting with his brethren, for the first time, in the capacity of an Eldership. He said he first united with the church in this neighborhood eight months ago. He stated that he still felt encouraged to labor in the vineyard of God. His report was adopted.

Brother THOMAS HICKERNELL reported: That he felt highly gratified for the privilege of meeting with his brethren in this western region, in the capacity of an Eldership, which is something that he had long desired, and expressed a hope that the feeble exertions that shall be made use of by the Eldership in this western country, to forward the cause of God, will not prove abortive. Resolved, That the members of this Eldership do highly recommend that all those who profess to be followers of Christ, will avoid all unnecessary and worldly conversation, especially on the Lord's-day; and that they use their endeavors to abolish the same; and that they be punctual in attending to public worship.

Resolved, That this Eldership unite with the other Elderships of the "Church of God," in the general system of co-operation.

Resolved, That we, the Eldership of the "Church of God" in the State of Indiana, think it inexpedient to identify ourselves with secret societies.

Whereupon,

Brothers Martin, Slyter and Hickernell, were appointed said committee.

On motion,

A Standing Committee was appointed, consisting of five, viz: Brothers Martin, Menely Latta, Slyter and Hickernell.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

The Ship Thomas P. Cope Burnt at Sea.—The ship Thomas P. Cope, of this port, was struck by lightning when nine days at sea, and burned to the water's edge. The first mate came on to this city from New York yesterday.

He gives the following account of her loss:

The splendid packet ship Thomas P. Cope of 800 tons, Captain F. H. Miercken, went to sea from Philadelphia for Liverpool on the 26th ult., having on board, passengers and crew included, 82 souls, and also a cargo consisting of 2,650 barrels of flour, 1,450 barrels of corn meal, 7,500 bushels of wheat, 4,138 bushels of corn, 93 hogsheads and 70 barrels of tallow, 27 bales of hemp, 644 kegs of lard, 800 sides of leather, 41 cases of pickles, and 3 carriages. On the 29th ult., in lat. 41. 15 N., lon. 65 W., her mainmast head was struck by lightning, which set on fire the rigging, and descending along the mast, communicated with the hemp and tallow below. The mast was cut away, and every effort made to extinguish the fire below, but without effect. The passengers and crew worked hard until the 5th inst., when fortunately the British ship Emigrant, from Liverpool, for St. John, N. B., hove in sight and took off a part of the passengers. At night a gale sprung up, which cut off communication between the vessels, but the next morning it abated, and all hands were safely transferred from the burning wreck. The last boat's crew, previous to their departure, took off the hatches, when the suppressed smoke burst forth like the escape of steam, and enveloped the whole vessel in a cloud, which rose mast-head high. Three hours afterwards something like an explosion took place, and in a few minutes more the goodly ship was lost to the view. On the 16th inst., in lat. 42 N., lon. 67 20 W., the Emigrant was spoken by the packet ship Washington Irwing, Capt. Caldwell, and the passengers and crew of the lost ship were put on board of her and brought to Boston, where they arrived on Sunday afternoon. The Thomas P. Cope belonged to the firm of T. P. Cope and Co.; she was but one year old; was one of the finest ships belonging to Philadelphia, and is no doubt fully insured.

We understand that the Thomes P. Cope was insured in this city to the amount of $18,000. It is the general custom of the Messrs. Cope & Son to be their own underwriters, and their fine ship, the Saranac, is known to have been entirely built with the accumulated premiums saved in this way. A considerable balance was then left in the fund, and the profits since, it is supposed, will be nearly sufficient to cover their loss by the disaster to the Cope. She was built about two years since, at the ship-yard of the late John Vaughan, and was considered in every respect a vessel of the first class. Her loss will probably hurry the preparations now being made at the same yard for the building of a ship of twelve hundred tons. The contract was made a couple of months since, and the timber will probably arrive as soon as the navigation opens in the spring. The cargo destroyed along with the Thomas P. Cope was nearly all on foreign account, and the presumption is that it is fully insured by the consignees in Liverpool.

A Temperance Lecturer Fined.—The Doylestown Democrat gives a report of the trial of Dr, Joseph S. Longshore, for misdemeanor. The Dr. was in the habit of calling temperance meetings in front of a tavern, at Attleborough, and delivering lectures, on which occasions frequent disturbances took place by the interference of persons not composing or participating in the meeting. The charge of the Judge made the Doctor responsible for the disturbances—that he had no right to obstruct the high-ways. &c. He was found guilty and sentenced to pay a heavy fine.

The Steamboat Atlantic.—More Bodies Found.—The New London Sun of Monday contains the following intelligence:

The body of another victim of the wreck was found on Saturday afternoon last, about fifty rods from the scene of disaster, supposed to be that of Dr. Tourney, a boot on one leg having his name as a mark. The manufacturer's name was chafed off, but the number of his stand, 265 North Market street, remained, and was intelligible. It was entirely divested of clothing, and of every kind of apparel except the boot before mentioned, was much bruised and mangled, the skull was gone, and one leg completely wrenched off. Two skulls were picked up on the beach.

On Sunday morning, at early daylight, the body of John Walton (father of the Walton family) was also found, not much mangled, but the lineaments of the face were entirely destroyed. Mr. Walton was recognized by his dress and articles found upon his person, among which were a silver hunting watch, a jacknife, $295, ($285 in bills and $10 in gold) and some other articles of little worth. The money was discovered wrapped in a piece of blanket, which, it is presumed, preserved its "circulating" value. Pieces of trunks and valises, merchandise boxes, and other comparatively valueless articles have been collected. On the fragment of one trunk were the initials "W. S.," another had "A J. Collamore, Boston," with a dark colored wallet, containing a small sum of money.

The body of Mr. Walton was brought to this city, and placed under the charge of our city corporation.

A bag, containing the flags of the Atlantic in a perfect state, was also recovered. The wreckers, some 15 or 20 in number, are actively engaged in securing every thing. They have a temporary shanty erected for their night comforts and daily conveniences. The engine of the boat is being secured as fast as the weather will permit.

The German Reformation.—We gave an account yesterday of the meeting of the German Catholics, at the Tabernacle, N. Y., on Sunday afternoon. The Journal of Commerce of Tuesday morning gives the declaration of faith agreed upon at the meeting.

After a preamble, setting forth the incompatibility of the doctrines and practice of the Church of Rome with the precepts and spirit of the gospel, they say:

We therefore declare ourselves free from the Pope and the Hierarchy, from all Romish compulsion in matters of faith, and the unchristian conduct connected therewith; and we acknowledge as the basis of Christian faith only and alone the Holy Scriptures, the understanding and interpretation of which is freely given to reason, penetrated and awakened by Christian contemplation.

DECLARATION.

We reject the following:

1. The doctrine, that the Pope is the visible head of the Church standing in the place of Jesus Christ; and we repel in advance all professions which may possibly be made by the Hierarchy to subject the free Church again to her yoke.

2. We reject the doctrine that by ordination there is conferred upon the priests any special elevated dignity above the laity, and that by virtue of the same, authority is given them over faith and doctrine, over the consciences and the opinions of men.

3. We reject the constrained celibacy of the clergy, as an ordinance not founded upon the Holy Scriptures, but rather a contrivance devised by Popes for their domineering purposes.

4. We reject auricular confession.

5. We renounce the invocation of saints, the worship of relics and images.

6. We reject indulgences, fasts, pilgrimages, and all such hitherto appointed church regulations, which can only lead to an empty self-righteousness.

7 We reject the doctrine of purgatory.

The declaration of faith differs but little from that of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and in the organization and constitution of the congregation, they appear to have taken the Episcopal organization as their model.—Exchange Paper.

Stupendous Project!—A Railroad to the Pacific.—A Mr. Whitney has for several years been pressing upon the attention of Congress and the people of the United States, the feasibility and practicability of a Railroad from Lake Michigan to the mouth of the Columbia River. Last season the proposition of Mr. W. was referred to the committee on Public Lands in the Senate. Mr. W. asks of Government a large grant of the territory on the Route of the Road, proposing with the avails of which to construct his road. Some idea of the magnitude of this scheme may be formed by considering the length of the road, which from its commencement at about lat. 42° on Lake Michigan, runs west 1300 miles to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, and thence northwest 1300 more to the Pacific.

Of the advantage likely to accrue to the whole country from such a road, it is scarcely possible to speak in a tone of exaggeration. It would open to us a boundless commerce with China and the East; and bring Boston and Pekin as near each other, as Boston and Liverpool were 20 years ago.

The New York City Tract Society.—The 20th anniversary of this Society, and of the female branch, was held on Wednesday evening at the Broadway Tabernacle. The building was filled. Rev. Dr. DeWitt presided, and Rev. Dr. Peek opened with prayer. The annual report of the female branch was read by Rev. R. S. Cook. The contributions of the various churches of this city were $1,713.20. The Treasurer's Report was read by Mr Wm. Walker. Total receipts $11,273.80.—Total expenditures $11,266.56. Balance in the Treasury $7.24. Amount due American Tract Society for tracts furnished $1,166,72. An anthem was sung by the choir, after which Rev. Isaac Orchard read the Annual Report. There have been distributed 44,498,762 pages of tracts; 14,194 Bibles, and 16,908 Testaments; 38,774 volumns have been lent, 31,715 children gathered into Sabbath, and 5,263 into Public Schools; 15,708 temperance pledges have been obtaind.

Appointment by the Governor.—Hon. Benjamin Champneys, of Lancaster, to be Attorney General of the Commonwealth, in the place of Hon. John M. Reed, resigned.

The New Invention.—The European correspondent of the N, Y. True Sun gives an interesting account of the general production of the new gun-cotton in Europe. He says:

All the European world is in a faver of experimentalizing, and whoever has once handled a musket or a pistol, is trying to make his own gun cotton, and druggists can scarcely find acid enough to supply the universal demand. All, all are making experiments in this new species of ammunition, and the small despots seek in vain among their codes of law, for ordinances, restrictions, fines, &c., to prevent the spread of this threatening movement.

For North America this invention is of immense importance, and if the political power of a nation depends upon its principles and force of arms, America, with its glorious political liberty and abundance of cotton, may soon be mistress of the earth.

Russian Railways.—His Majesty the Czar of Russia, seems bent upon following the example of British and American nations, by rapidly extending facilities of intercourse, and connecting together most important places by the rion ribbons of the railway. Letters received in London from St. Petersburg state "that the long-talked of project of forming a railroad from the capital to the Ballishport on the Baltic, is about to be carried into execution by a company formed at St. Petersburg. The Government guarantees to the company 4½ per cent, on the capital actually expended in its completion. The same company has also obtained an outhorization to lay a railroad between Cronstant St. Petersburg, with a branch to Moscow."

Gun Cotton.—For making exploding cotton the common well-cleaned staple must be dipped in highly concentrated acid of saltpeter, (the acid which I use is made by distilling ten parts dried saltpetre, and six parts oil of vitrol or sulphuric acid,) then it is put into fresh water, which is often changed, and care must be taken to loosen thoroughly the cotton, which from the process becomes matted; after which it must be well dried. Thus the exploding article is in a state of preparation for the gun-barrel.

The effects of this article astonish every body who witness them. The smallest quantity explodes with the quickness of fulminating quicksilver powder, if struck with a hammer on an anvil. If put into a gun, a smaller quantity in weight will do as much execution as gunpowder. It is used precisely in the same manner as gunpowder—a piece of paper being necessary between it and the ball or shot, as in ordinary firing.

The New York Regiment.—The Regiment of Volunteers from this State, now quartered at Fort Hamilton, says the New York True Sun, are preparing themselves with all possible assiduity for the seat of war. A large portion of the Regiment are already supplied with their outfits, and the remainder are fast becoming so.

American Shipping.—There were built in the United States, from the 1st of January, 1845, to the 30th of June, 1845, 26,794 vessels of all kinds, with a tonnage of about 4,080,000 tons.

New Jersey Copper Mines.—The copper mines recently opened in Hunterdon county, New Jersey, are believed to be very extensive and valuable. The company having charge of them have expended $50,000 in the purchase of the property smelting works, excavations, &c., which they are sanguine of receiving back with a large profit on their Investment, very soon after they shall have their works in full operation. The ore now being raised from one of the shafts is said to be worth from $150 to $200 per ton.

Convicts For The Army.—A bill has been introduced into the Senate of Arkansas, by a Mr. Dickson, to authorize the enlistment of convicts in the penitentiary, into the army of the United States. We know not how the measure has been received in that body, says the New Orleans Bulletin, but for ourselves, we should be willing that every member who votes in favor of such a gratuitous insult to our galant army, should become an inmate of the penitentiary himself.

Philadelphia and Columbia Railroad.—The Superintendent of this link of the Pennsylvania chain of Public Works, states that the receipts on it for the year ending 1st of December, 1846, were as follows:

Total receipts, as per reports of Collectors, for motive power, truckage and railway tolls	$474,415 33
Total expenses, as per report of Superintendent, for maintenance of motive power and trucks and repair,	216,548 47
Net profit.	$257,866 86

Equal to six and a half per cent, (nearly) on (four millions of dollars) the cost of railway and machinery.

Pennsylvania Coal Trade.—The following unofficial statement from the Miner's Journal, gives the quantity of coal sent to market from the Pennsylvania mines this year and the last:

	1846.	1845.
Total	2,338,182	2,015 610

Shewing an increase of 322,540 tons over 1845.

The increase in 1845 over 1844 was 293,000 tons. The supply this year is short, and the trade will open in the spring with a clear market.

Coal in Mexico.—An extensive bed of bituminous coal, of excellent quality, has been discovered at Guerrero, a Mexican town of 4000 inhabitants, situated on the Salado River, 125 miles above Camargo. It is now worked by an American company, and promises to be of vast importance, as it removes the principal obstacle to steamboat navigation on the Rio Grande, into which the Salado empties its waters.

Singular Good Luck.—A correspondent from Havana to N. Orleans La Patria, says that the grand prize of the Royal Lottery—the $100,000—was drawn by fifty negroes, most of them slaves. They had joined to buy three whole tickets, and gave one dollar each for that purpose.—Fortunately one of those tickets was the number 3997, and on the morning of the 18th they found that each of them had won $2,000.

Legislature of Virginia.—On Wednesday both Houses passed a law appropriating $10,000 for the relief and subsistence of the Virginia volenteers until they are mustered into the service of the United States. It passed the Senate unanimously, and received every vote in the House, save that of Mr. Lanier of Pittsylvania.

Boston Telegraph.—The Boston and New York Line of Telegraph has been suspended for the present. In consequence of the many injuries sustained by the late storm in the vicinity of Boston, the Company has concluded not to repair the old wire, but will soon supply its place by a new and substantial iron one. It is expected to be ready in time to transmit the next steamer's news.

The Central Railroad.—We learn that the Bank of the Northern Liberties has subscribed 100 shares to the Pennsylvania Railroad Stock—also that the Bank of Penn township has subscribed 50 shares. The other banks of the city and county should follow these good examples. The subscriptions throughout the city and county go on bravely.—Daily Chronicle.

Princeton Theological Seminary.—The catalogue of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church, at Princeton, N. J., has just reached us. We see that there are in the first class, 53 students; in the second, 47; in the third, 58; and one resident licentiate—making a total of 159.

Be Cautious.—Writing or marking anything except the address upon newspapers, forwarded by mail, is hereafter to be punished by a fine of five dollars for each offence.

A Giant.—Wisconsin has contributed her quota to the wonders of the age, in the person of a giant boy, who is upwards of seven feet high, and only thirteen years old. He is exhibited in Utica.

Hay.—The annual crop of hay raised in the United States is estimated at 15,000,000 tons, which, at $8 per ton, the average home value is worth $120,000,000.

☞ The revenue of the Post Office Department for the past year was $3,487,199, being only $842,642 less than when the old system was in force. The expenditures of the past year have been $4,084,297 being $236,434 less than in the preceding year, under the old regiment.—New routes have been added to the extent of 5,739 miles—probably in the State of Texas.

☞ The American Tract Society, as stated by its Secretary, has now in its employ 170 colporteurs, distributing its books and tracts throughout the more destitute portions of the country, and encouraging everywhere the observance of religious institutions.

☞ Of 7,000 tailors' out of employment in London, 960 are about emigrating to Canada, and 2,904 for the U. States. They may be expected in March or April.

☞ A colored man died near Centreville, Md., one day last week, at the advanced age of one hundred and twenty-two years.

☞ The Speaker of the House of Representatives has ordered a vault to be erected in the Capital, for the deposit and safe keeping of the public moneys disbursed by his authority, under the Independent Treasury law.

☞ We notice that proposals have been issued for the execution of the printing of the next Congress by contract.—The proposals will be opened on the 9th of January next.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Marriage.

Whatever affects the church is of sufficient interest to command the attention of every Christian. Nothing can be light and trivial that may have an influence upon the prosperity of the body of Christ.—And as the church is a body in which all the members are united so closely, that when one suffers all the members suffer with it—whatever affects one affects the whole—it is of importance to guard each member against those things that may be dangerous, that every one may be sound, and healthy, and vigorous, and not weak and sickly.

It cannot be denied that marriage exerts a most powerful influence upon man—and that it will be profitable or otherwise to the child of God, according as it is entered into in the fear of God, or contrary to His will. What then is the law of marriage? Has a Christian a right to marry an unbeliever? It is contended by some that he may, but upon what I conceive to be false grounds. They say that the prohibition in scripture extends only to the intermarriage with the heathen—that as Christians were surrounded by the heathen, they were forbid to "give their daughters to the sons of the heathen, or take the daughters of the latter to their sons." But where is the proof of this? The directions seem to be of universal application, and some of the expressions used require this construction. But not to insist upon other objections to this interpretation of scripture that would confine it in some of its features to those who were so unfortunate as to dwell among the heathen, there is a difficulty presented to those who adopt it, that it would appear impossible for them to obviate. If it apply only to the heathen, then whatever the opinion of an individual may be, if he dwell in Christendom, or has been baptized, a Christian is at liberty to intermarry with that individual. If there be no other restriction than the forbidding to marry a heathen, then if a man be an infidel, "denying the Lord that bought him," believing the scriptures a fable, and its precepts and commands in no way binding upon him, notwithstanding all this a Christian woman has permission of God to marry him! A Christian and an infidel joined together in the holy estate of matrimony! Here indeed would be the mingling of water and oil. Let it not be said that this is an extreme case. It is admitted to be—but such things have been witnessed by Christians—and if the scriptures do not forbid it, but rather, by confining their injunctions and prohibitions to heathen connections, virtually sanctions it, it is not to be objected to by such as contend for the meaning which I oppose. Scripture restricts Christians only so far as to prevent marriage with the heathen, therefore it attains and consents to that with all others, let the character be what it may. This certainly cannot be correct. Reason, as well as the whole tenor of scripture, is against it. From observation and experience, it is decided to be imprudent at least; and the very doubt which arises as to its propriety is an argument against it; for whatever is not of faith is sin. What have the two in common? One is not of the world, the other is of it—one delights in the services of the sanctuary, the other counts it a weariness to attend—one engages in prayer, the other in blasphemy—the one is meek, the other revengeful. "What part hath the believer with the unbeliever?" The associates of the Christian are surely those of the same family, not those who are opposed to it—we cannot look for harmony between "aliens" and citizens. And yet will any contend that in the nearest of all relations, where the association is the most intimate, that which is forbidden in the common relations, is here to be granted—both too by the same scriptures?

Let it be added farther, that it is inconsistent with the teachings of God's word, and the prayers of Christians themselves. "Lead us not into temptation," is a portion of the great model for Christians—and many are the injunctions of scripture respecting temptation, and frequent the warnings. If one disregard these, and in opposition to his prayer to be preserved from temptation, voluntarily, and with sufficient opportunity to reflect, rush still into it, how can he expect aid from his Father to enable him to resist its evil?—If a man swallow draught after draught of an intoxicating drink, it is certain that he will be affected by it. And as in this, so in religion. By a law of our nature, "evil communications corrupt good manners"—and where is the safety of any one who, instead of avoiding, seeks occasion of such communion? There is none—he must be corrupted. It is no sufficient reply that the affection supposed to exist in such cases, is a safe-guard against the evil. This is the chief ground of danger. Were there no love, one might resist the evil more effectually. This being strong, the maimed one thinks of the companion—how that companion may be pleased. There is an impelling force to the doing of every thing that will promote peace and secure harmony—and for this purpose there will be on the one hand an urging to the performance of certain things which, from ignorance, may not be supposed to be in any way wrong, or inconsistent with Christian morals, and on the other an inclination to yield, even though doubtful of the propriety of the acts.—And thus one, and another, and another step may be taken that may lead eventually to the making shipwreck of faith, and of a good conscience. In religion every duty, however trivial (and in the eye of the world sometimes foolish) it may appear, is important in itself—and a neglect to perform is not only injurious in itself, but has a tendency to produce far greater results than could have been supposed.—One step in error may conduct one to a greater error, and end in a deadness to religious joy, and the loss of the comforting presence of the Spirit.

But Paul enjoins specially that widows shall marry "only in the Lord." The term, "in the Lord," is sufficiently understood to obviate the necessity of explanation. The only question that can rightly arise is, was there designed to be a stricter law for "widows," than for others? The widows were not, as any one may satisfy one's self by examination, such as had attained to the age of "three score years"—and were deaconesses—but such only as had lost their husbands, even if not yet of the age of "one" score years. It is the part of those who contend for the scriptural union of the believer and the unbeliever, to show that this law of the widows does not apply to others—a task that I conceive rather difficult. The apostle was giving directions for the widows in the church, and the evident design was (this is evident to any one that will read the whole) to give a rule of action that would tend to the furtherance of true piety and usefulness in the church, to preserve and promote holiness. And the rule is binding equally upon those never married and widows.

From all this it would appear that a Christian cannot marry an unconverted person—an unbeliever. It is imprudent, dangerous, and contrary to the spirit, if it be not to the strict letter. But it rather seems to be opposed to the letter even. The path of the Christian is beset with difficulties, and he need not add to them. If a righteous man "scarcely be saved," shall he increase his danger by a voluntary act that is at least not so clear as to make all agreed?—Religious Herald.

The Dying Kiss.

I was but five years old when my mother died; but her image is as distinct to my recollection, now that twelve years have elapsed, as it was at the time of her death. I remember her as a pale, beautiful, gentle being, with a sweet smile, and a voice that was soft and cheerful when she praised me, and when I erred—for I was a wild, thoughtless child—there was a trembling mildness about it, that always went to my little heart. And then she was so kind, so patient; methinks I can now see her large blue eyes moist with sorrow, because of my childish waywardness, and hear her repeat, "My child, how can you grieve me so?" I recollect she had for a long time been pale and feeble, and that sometimes there would come a bright spot on her cheek, which made her look so lovely, that I thought she must be well. But then she sometimes spoke of dying, and pressed me to her bosom, and told me to be good when she was gone, and to love my father a great deal, and be kind to him, for he would have no one else to love. I recollect she was very sick all day, and my little hobby horse and whip were laid aside, and I tried to be very quiet. I did not see her for the whole day, and it seemed very long. At night they told me my mother was too sick to kiss me, as she used to do before I went to bed, and I must go without it. But I could not. I stole into the room, and laying my lips close to hers, whispered, "Mother, mother, won't you kiss me?" Her lips were very cold; and when she put her arm around me, laid my head upon her bosom, and one hand upon my cheek, I felt a cold shuddering creep all over me. My father carried me from the room, but he could not speak. After they put me in bed, I lay a long while thinking. I feared that my mother would indeed die, for her cheek felt as cold as my little sister's did when she died, and they laid her in the ground. But the impressions of mortality are always indistinct in childhood, and I soon fell asleep. In the morning I hastened to my mother's room. A white napkin covered her face. I removed it—it was just as I feared. Her eyes were closed; her cheek was cold and hard, and only the lovely expression that always rested upon her lips remained. In an instant all the little faults for which she had so often reproved me, rushed upon my mind. I longed to tell her how good I would always be if she would remain with me. She was buried; but my remembrance of the funeral is indistinct. I only retain the impressions which her precepts and example left upon my mind. I was a passionate, head-strong boy; but I never yielded to this turn of my disposition, without fancying I saw her mild, tearful eye fixed upon me just as she used to do in life. And then, when I had succeeded in overcoming it, her sweet smile of approbation beamed upon me, and I was happy. My whole character underwent a change, even from the moment of her death. Her spirit was forever with me, strengthening my good resolutions, and weakening my propensity to do evil. I felt that it would grieve her gentle spirit, to see me err, and I could not, would not do it. I was the child of her affection; I knew she had prayed and wept over me, and that, even on the threshold of eternity, her affection for me had caused her gentle spirit to linger, that she might pray for me once more. I resolved to become all that she could desire. This resolution I have never forgotten. It helped me to subdue the waywardness of childhood, protected me through the temptations of youth, and will comfort and support me through the busier scenes of manhood. Whatever there is estimable in my character, I owe to the impressions of goodness, made upon my infant mind by the exemplary conduct and faithful instruction of my excellent mother.—The Parent's Magazine.

Lessons of Affliction.

Affliction is full of warnings. It has many voices, and these are of the most various kinds. It speaks counsel, it speaks rebuke, it speaks affection. But besides these it speaks warning likewise. Let us observe some of its words of warning.

1. It says, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." There is no enforcement of this warning so solemn as that which affliction gives. It exposes the world's hollowness and says, "love not." It exhibits to us what a withering ground its beauty is, and says, "love not." It points out to us its hastening doom and says, "love not." It declares the utter impossibility of loving both the world and the Father. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" There can be no companionship between God and the world. They cannot dwell together under the same roof or in the same heart.

2. It says, "Take heed and beware of covetousness." Riches cannot help, neither earthly comfort avail us in the hour of grief. They cannot dry up tears, nor re-unite broken bones. They cannot heal the living, nor bring back the dead. They profit not in the day of darkness.—Their vanity and emptiness cannot then be hidden. "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee, then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" It is then we find that we need a "treasure in heaven that faileth not."—"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich."

3. It says, "abstain from all appearance of evil." "Hate even the garments spotted by the flesh." It is not the flesh merely that we are to hate, but even its garments. Nor is it the garments dyed and defiled with the flesh, but even "spotted" with it. It is not merely abstain from evil, but from all appearance of evil. Suffering teaches us to shrink from sin, even from the remotest and indirect connection with it. It says, "Oh, do not that abominable thing which I hate."

4. It says, "Grudge not one against the other." Let there be no half-hearted affection in the family of God. Let there be no envy, no jealousy, no misunderstanding among the brethren. Why should we be less than friends who are both fellow sufferers and fellow soldiers here? Why should we, who are sharers in a common danger, and a common exile, bear to each other aught but the sympathies of an intense affection? Why should we not love one another with a pure heart fervently? Yet oftentimes it needs affliction to teach us this, to remove our jealousies, and to draw us together as brethren in sympathy and love.

5. It says, "Keep yourselves from idols." If there be one remaining idol, break it in pieces and spare it not. Nothing is so fruitful a cause of suffering as idolatry. Nothing so forcibly displays the vanity of our idols as a suffering. It is with this whip of cords that Christ scourges out of us the buyers and sellers; suffering no earthly traffick to proceed in his Father's house.—Rev. H. Bonar.

Pull it up by the Root.

"Father, here is a dock" said Thomas, as he was at work with his father in the garden, "shall I cut it off close to the root?"

"No," replied his father, "that will not do; I have cut it up myself many times, but it grows again stronger than ever. Pull it up by the root, for nothing else will kill it."

Thomas pulled and pulled again, at the dock, but the root was very deep in the ground, and he could not stir it from its place; so he asked his father to come and help him, and his father went and soon pulled it up.

"This dock-root, Thomas," said his father, "which is an evil and a fast-growing weed in a garden, puts me in mind of the evil things that grow so fast in the hearts of children. A bad passion, even when found out, is hard to be removed; it is of no use to trifle with it: there is no way to overcome and destroy it, but to pull it up by the root."

"You have often seen in our garden, Thomas, that when the weeds are allowed to grow, they spoil all the plants and flowers that grow near them. So it is with evil passions in the heart of a child. If a little boy is ill-tempered, we must not expect to find in him good humor, cheerfulness, thankfulnees, and a desire to make others happy. And a little girl who is idle, need not expect to be industrious, neat, or careful. As weeds injure the flowers, so bad passions will injure good qualities. If a child is undutiful to his parents, and despise the commandments of God, we might as well look for a rose or a tulip in a bed of nettles, as hope to find in his heart those graces and good desires that we love to see growing there. Now this is quite a sufficient reason why all bad passions should be pulled up by the root.

"Every bad habit, every evil passion which troubles you, you should try with all your heart and mind to overcome; you should, if possible, tear it up. But you will find your own strength but weakness, and you must apply to that Almighty friend, who alone is able to strengthen you and assist you. He can take from your heart the love of sin; and this is the only sure way of destroying it, as we have destroyed the dock, by pulling it up by the roots."

Book of Nature.

It will, doubtless, be acknowledged by all who recognize the claims of a Supreme Being, that homage to this Being is a fit subject for the exercise of the most exalted intellect. In the works of creation are developed the attributes of the invisible God, 'even his eternal power and Godhead.' The book of nature is spread open before us to be studied; and from the glittering atom that floats in the sun-beam, to that fit emblem of Deity himself, we may learn the power, wisdom and benevolence of the great Author of them all. It has been wisely and truly said, that "whatever God has condescended to make, man may condescend to look at." The most distinguished king that ruled over the most distinguished nation on earth, has left an example worthy of the imitation of all succeeding generations, in the interest he manifested in the works of nature.—He also, who taught as never man taught, directed the attention of those who listened to the words of his lips, to 'the lily of the field,' and 'the birds of the air,' for lessons of practical instruction. Turn, then, youthful reader, from the exciting novel, the product of an over-heated, and it may be, depraved and corrupted imagination, to the wonders revealed by the microscope, and learn from an examination of even a wing of gossamer, what volumes of fiction and romance could never impart. Look abroad over the face of nature, as the melting snows of a protracted winter permit us once more to behold the tender blade, springing up at our feet, ready to spread over hill and vale the green carpet of spring; see the leafless trees of the forest exhibiting signs of life and verdure, in the swelling buds, eager to clothe the grove with beauty; listen to the notes of the feathered songsters as they unite in full chorus to usher in the opening season; watch the throng of humming insects as they gaily flutter out their brief existence; and, with the poet, exclaim, "I cannot go where universal love not smiles around." Zion's Advocate.

As God looks principally at the heart, so it is there he carries on his saving work.

The New Planet.

A new planet has recently been discovered belonging to our system, lying far out on its confines, estimated to be not less than three thousand millions of miles from the earth, and requiring more than two hundred years to make its revolution round the sun. It is named "Le Verrier," in honor of the distinguished Frenchman who furnished the clue to its discovery.

The manner in which he solved this problem is intensely interesting as showing what has been and may be accomplished in mathematical and astronomical science.

Lieut. Maury of the National Observatory describes it thus:

"The discovery of this planet may be considered the greatest achievement of theoretical astronomy. Astronomers had long since observed that Uranus suffered perturbations in his orbit, for which they could not account by any known cause of disturbance. They conjectured, indeed, that it might be owing to the attraction of a planet out upon the confines of the system, perhaps, but which was considered beyond their reach.

A Frenchman takes up the subject in his closet, and there, with the perfection of mathematical skill, creates his hypothetical planet, gives it mass, assigns an orbit and a period of revolution to it, and then sets it in motion at a distance inconceivable remote.

He tries his problem, varies his conditions and tries again. At last the position, mass, orbit, motion and place are such that its attraction satisfies the anomalies of Uranus. Astronomers are astonished at his depth of research, and amazed with his results. He tells those at Berlin where to turn their telescopes; they point them according to his direction, and the new planet "Le Verrier" is there."

The astronomers of Berlin were the first to see the new planet. It has since been seen from the Cambridge, (Mass.) observatory, and from the observatory of Cincinnati. Its diameter, orbit, and distance from the sun, will soon be among the settled facts of the science.

This discovery must aid us in enlarging and correcting our ideas of the vast extent of our own solar system, and consequently of the ineffably greater extent of the material universe.

This little planet, sweeping round our sun once in two hundred of our years, far out upon the suburbs of our system, must still be nearer to us than any other sun or system—else we should lose it—the attraction of the nearer neighbor drawing it away. O, what a universe is this! And how great a God must He be whose handy work it is!—Oberlin Evan.

The Psalms have advantages which no fresh compositions, however finely executed, can possibly have; since, besides their incomparable fitness to express our sentiments, they are at the same time, memorials of, and appeals to former mercies and deliverances; they are acknowledgements of propheeies accomplished; they point out the connection between the old and new dispensations, thereby teaching us to admire and adore the wisdom of God displaying in both, and furnishing, while we read or sign them, inexhaustible variety of the noblest matter that can engage the contemplations of man.—Bishop Horne.

Kindness.

Kindness will always do good. It makes others happy—and that is doing good. It prompts us to seek to benefit others—and that is doing good. It makes others gentle, and benignant—and that is doing good.

Let it be remembered, also, that it is by the temper, and by the spirit that we manifest, that the world forms its opinion of the nature of religion. It is not by great deeds in trying circumstances that men will judge of the nature of the gospel. The world at large cares little how Ignatius and Polycarp felt, or how they died. Perhaps the mass of those around you never heard their names—They are little impressed by the virtues which Latimer, and Ridley, and Cramer evinced at the stake. But that unbelieving husband cares much for the gentle and kind spirit of the wife—for all his happiness depends on it; that brother is interested much in the conversation and the spirit of his sister—for he daily observes her temper, and is forming his views of religion from what he sees in her; that child is constantly marking the temper of the father and the mother, and is forming his views of religion not so much from what he hears in the pulpit, or in the Sabbath-school, as from the temper which you evince from one day to another. In these fields—humble though they may seem, and little as they appear to furnish a theatre for the display of eminent virtues—your usefulness lies. There, with the "gentleness" that was in Christ, you cannot but be useful; and exhibiting such a spirit you will not live in vane—Barnes.

The Free Church.

This noble body of christians are setting an example to the world. Witness the following:

"The report of the Free Church of Scotland shows that the people of that communion have within the last three years assessed themselves to the amount of five millions of dollars, raised by annual subscriptions. The secession took place in 1843, and in 1846 they are paying $360,000 a year for ministers' salaries, supporting their own widows, orphans, aged and decrepid, and giving $15,000 a year to home missions and $90,000 per annum for erecting churches. Its college costs $20,000 yearly, it grants $10,000 a year to different societies, it possesses six missions in India, the like number in Eastern Europe and Asia Minor to convert the Jews, Hindoo and Hebrew followers are kept at its expense, and its missionaries in Southern Africa have insured lives. When the short space of time is considered since the Free Church was organized and established, all that has been achieved by that body must seem most wonderful and extraordinary.

POETRY.

THE SEA OF GALILEE.

(A prize composition in the Albany Female Academy in 1842, for which a gold medal was awarded.)

BY MISS MARGARET ROBINSON, OF NEW YORK.

Bow down my spirit, and adore, while thus I gaze on thee.
Thou favored spot of all the earth, thrice-hallowed Galilee:
How down my spirit, and adore, as in the courts above,
Behold the place the Saviour trod, in sorrow and in love.

Throughout the valley rang his words, thy hill tops heard his voice,
And Hermon from its dewy height, called on them to rejoice:
Thy verdant banks his pillow formed, his footsteps prest thy soil,
And oft thy waters mirrored back the image of a God.

There is no sound along thy shore, no murmur of thy wave,
But tells of Him who left the skies, and life eternal gave.
Methinks among those stirring leaves his accents linger yet,
And fancy sees each glittering shrub with tears of pity wet.

While heartless man denied a home, thy trees a shelter made,
Thy smiles of beauty cheered his soul when faithless friends betrayed;
Forsaken, scorned, his mission spurned, no angry wish he knew,
But freely fell his love on all, as falls the genial dew.

How great that love, thy silver waves the tale can well attest,
As from a simple seaman's boat that floated on thy breast:
The God who reared those lofty hills, and gave the seas their birth,
They deigned to reach the outcast poor, the ignorant of earth.

Or, when oppressed by multitudes, He turned Him from his way,
And standing on the mountain top, He taught them "how to pray."
When streams of truth and mercy flowed among the list'ning crowd,
And the stout heart with holy fear, like oaks of Bashan bowed.

That list'ning crowd have passed away, their very names forgot,
While the heavenly word is echoeing yet from earth's remotest spot;
And like thy waves, that gospel sound shall still keep flowing on,
Unchanged by time, unspent by use, 'till all the earth be won.

"Thy conscious waters knew their God," and yielded to his will,
As moved along the troubled deep, the gentle words 'be still;'
Or when beneath the starless sky, upon the stormy wave,
He went in mercy's fairest guise, to succour and to save.

When faithless Peter asked a sign, and lo a sign was given,
He learned that faith should ever trust, tho' clouds obscure the Heaven;
For faith is like the summer flower that ope's its petals wide,
If the warm sunshine be bestowed, or if it be denied.

Lonely and sad, throughout thy midst, the holy Jordan flows,
Nor ripples with thy cooling breeze, nor mingling current knows;
So passed the Saviour through this world, mingling, but with a part,
With human passion in his frame, the God-head at his heart,

And meeting with thy western sky, Mount Tabor rears its head,
At whose broad base the Saviour once his famished followers fed;
And on whose summit as he stood, his face with glory shone,
While from the cloud the Father spoke, and hailed Him as his own.

Capernaum, where the Chosen One his purest lessons taught,
Chorazin and Bethsaida too, where healing oft was wrought—
Low on the dust their fallen towers in shapeless ruin lie,
Who in the fulness of their pride a Saviour dared deny.

Yes, tower and ruin, hill and plain, but most thou beauteous sea,
Does every varying look of thine some image bring to me—
For tho' it is with spirit eyes I've looked along thy shore,
With spirit step have trod the path the Saviour trod before.

I feel the impression on my soul, the holy shepherds felt,
When first before the manger rude, adoring they knelt—
And fain I'd pass away in peace, as tho' mine eyes had seen
The Saviour in His glory bright, nor worldly mist between

What tho' thy shore no sightless bard with classic beauty sang,
Nor clang of spear, nor battle shout, along thy margin rang,
A DEEPER charm is resting there, than MORTAL lyre can sound,
For THERE the star of Bethlehem shone, and lo 'tis holy ground.

Thou art the holy spot of earth, by prophets long foretold,
Where the righteous of the world should come, as to a shepherd's fold—
Thou art the 'Mecca of the mind,' where man in homage bows,
Thy shores the altars where the heart its purest incense bums.

Thou shalt remain when battling spear to plowshears shall be turned,
And peace and goodness fill the heart where fearful passions burned—
Thou shalt remain in all thy pride, 'till nature sinks to rest,
And unborn millions pass away, like foam from off thy breast

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DIED—On the 10th of December, in Fishing Creek Valley, sister Mary Bungen, wife of brother Michael Burger; aged 37 years, 10 months and 27 days.

Sister Bungen was for many years a member of the "Church of God," at the River School House, York county. She adorned her profession by an upright walk and a chaste conversation. She died as she lived. Her end was peace.

On the 12th she was interred in the Family burial ground, followed by a husband and ten children, and a large concourse of people, who convened to pay the last tribute of respect to one they loved and esteemed.

The occasion was improved by a discourse from the writer from Isaiah 64: 6. It was truly a weepng time.

In the death of sister Bungen, the church has lost a member of great worth, a husband has lost a beloved wife, and the children an affectionate mother: but we trust that their loss is her eternal gain.

JOSIAH H. HURLEY.

On the 26th ult., in Highspire, Dauphin county, Pa., Sister Harriet Buser, daughter of Henry and Catharine Fogel; aged 18 years, 6 months and 20 days.

Sister Buser was converted to God at a very early age, being only about eight years of age. Sometime afterwards she was baptized, and joined the "Church of God," in whose communion she lived and died.

On the 25th of November she was married to brother John Buser. On the 22d of September they were blessed with an heir—a son whom they call Israel.

On the 19th of last month, she fell sick of pleurisy, and on the 26th at, about 12 o'clock at noon, she departed this life in the assurance of faith. Among her last dying sayings were the following: "Tell my young friends not to neglect their souls—but to deny themselves of the vain and hurtful follies and fashions of the world, to devote themselves to the service of God, and to be zealous and faithful in His cause." She confessed she had not been as faithful as she ought to have been; nevertheless, she knew that God was her friend, and that she expected soon to praise Him in the kingdom above. Her last moments were glorious. She died with a Heavenly smile on her countenance. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people. Funeral sermon by the editor of the Church Advocate.

On the 3d of November, in Hanover township, Dauphin county, brother Samuel Shope; in the 21st year of his age. Funeral attended by brother Christian Forney.

On the 30th of the same month, sister Catharine Shope, of the same place and family; in the 17th year of her age. Funeral attended by brother John Lenker.

Both these young persons were the children of brother Bernard, and sister Elizabeth Shope, and also children of the living God. They embraced religion about five or six years ago, and continued members of the "Church of God," maintaining their integrity until the evening of their day, when the Lord of the vineyard called them to their reward.

I am not in the habit of extoling the dead to Heaven; yet, nevertheless, I have very good hopes of these having joined the "hundred forty and four thousand."

This dear family has, for four or five months, been severely afflicted with the "Typhus Fever," of which the two aforenamed children died, while the father of the family has been very sick for weeks. I would here say, O Lord look upon the wounded hearts of the remainder of this amiable family, and be merciful. Amen.

M. F. SNAVELY.

Sudden Deaths.—On Tuesday the 22d ult., an elderly woman named Wentz, suddenly dropped down dead in her house. She was engaged in her usual domestic duties at the time, and gave no indications of the approaching dissolution.

On Wednesday morning the 23d ult., the Hon. Wm. McClean, former Associate Judge of Adams county, but of late years a Clerk in the Office of the Auditor General, while engaged in purshasing marketing, suddenly dropped down, and was taken into the Washington Hotel, where he soon expired without exhibiting any signs of consciousness. No pulse could be discovered after he fell.

There is also a small misverbiage in the resolution touching secret societies.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

THE Legislature of this State met on the 5th inst., according to the Constitution.

The Senate was organized by electing the Hon. CHARLES GIBBONS, of Philadelphia, Speaker, and G. W. HAMERSLY, of Lancaster, First Clerk.

The House elected the Hon. JAMES COOPER, of Adams county, Speaker, and DAVID FLEMING, of Harrisburg, Clerk.

Eldership and "Advocate."

THE East Pennsylvania Eldership, at its late annual meeting in Mechanicsburg, passed the following resolution in reference to the CHURCH ADVOCATE, viz:

"RESOLVED, That the members of this Eldership be requested to use their BEST EXERTIONS to increase the subscription list of the CHURCH ADVOCATE"

This resolution is good; but to carry it out is still better. We hope that those who voted for this resolution, and all others interested, will not only bear it in remembrance, but also transcribe it in their lives by correspondent action. Nothing more is necessary to place the ADVOCATE on a permanent basis, than the best exertions of its friends and patrons.

We should have been pleased if each of the Elderships would have passed a similar resolution. However, the want of such a resolution can be no hindrance to them in using their best exertions for the increase of our subscription list. In Ohio and Indiana there seems to be a decided improvement for the better in the religious aspect of things. We hope there will be an equal improvement in supporting the ADVOCATE. West Pennsylvania, having done well, will not forget to do better still. There are men of noble spirits there, who are not want to be behind in any matter appertaining to Zion's welfare.

There is one thing more which, perhaps, ought to be done, at as early a day as possible, namely, for each Eldership to pass a resolution requiring each stationed and travelling preacher to write, more or less, every sixty days, for the columns of the ADVOCATE. Thus, each one would have to furnish six articles or pieces annually. This would be an easy task, and would add an immense interest and value to the paper. The local brethren, or missionaries, might be required to contribute their PIECES about once per quarter. In consideration of which, they might all be allowed their papers gratis.

Such an arrangement would, doubtless, make things work admirably well, and yield each Eldership a handsome revenue. It would create a new era in our plan of co-operation. Let us try it, brethren, and mark the result!

Bishop E. Logue.

WE have had a letter, a few days ago, from our pioneer bishop in the State of Iowa.—Sister LOGUE, it appears, bas been sevcrely afflicted; but is now convelesant. Owing to this protracted illness of brother L's. companion, he has been confined to home a good deal, and consequently has not preached much for some months past. He intends in future to go to work in good earnest.

He gratefully acknowledges the receipt of the aid sent him by the Board of Missions of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and promises to use it as judiciously as he can.

He requests, however, if the Board can spare him a little more, to forward it soon, and he will be thankful to receive it.

If the Board are in a situation to gratify brother LOGUE in this request, we hope they will do so without any delay. If any of our brethren have claims on the Board, we hope they will yield them in favor of our needy missionary pioneers on the frontiers.

Revival News.

THERE are revivals going on all around us In Linglestown and Highspire, among the "United Brethren;" and at BOWMAN'S school-house, and at the River school-house, among the brethren of the "Church of God," there have been numbers convicted and converted. A letter will be found in this number from brother J. H. HURLEY, giving some account of the work at the River school-house. We hope some of our brethren will furnish us with detailed accounts of the work in the rest of the aforenamed places.

Blendon Seminary.

THE Blendon Seminary, in Ohio, formerly owned by the Methodist church, has been bought by the "United Brethren in Christ," who are now actively engaged in fitting it up for an Institution of their own. This is a commendable movement for the "United Brethren." It argues an improvement and elevation in the literary character of that denomination of people. Considering their age, number and wealth, we wonder they have not founded an Institution of learning long before this. We wish them success.

State Temperance Convention.

A STATE TEMPERANCE CONVENTION will be held in this borough on the 27th inst.

The friends of temperance will please to bear this in mind, and prepare in time to have their delegates appointed.

Temperance Meeting.

A GENERAL meeting of the friends of temperance was held in the Court House, in this borough, on Monday evening the 4th inst. The meeting was well attended, and ably addressed by Mr. SCHÆFFER and others, on the subject of petitioning the Legislature for a law submitting the License Law to the ballot-box. A series of resolutions were passed, making arrangements for the circulation of petitions for signatures, asking the Legislature for a law authorizing the question of the sale of ardent spirits, as a beverage, to be submitted to the ballot-boxes in each ward and township of the county.

We hope that these petitions will be freely circulated and numerously signed. Now is the time to make a strong effort in order to secure an act of the Legislature submitting it to the voters of the county, whether intoxicating liquors shall be sold as a beverage or not.

Twenty counties of this State obtained a law on this subject last year, and we hope to see not only twenty more, but all the remaining counties in the State applying and obtaining similar acts. If not, then we should like to see a law passed exempting the temperance men from bearing any part of the public expenses accruing from the dreadful evil of intemperance.

Temperance in Ohio.

THE temperance movement which, under the auspices of the Sons of Temperance, has received a new impulse in the State, is now attracting much attention. Petitions for the passage of a law submitting the question of license to the dicision of voters of the townships, are flowing into the Legislature by hundreds.

Among the petitions was one a hundred feet long, containing four thousand signatures, headed with the name of the venerable LYMAN BEECHER.

Another containing the names of one thousand and seventy-six legal voters of Greene county, and others from Licking with the names of about two thousand six hundred of both sexes. There is strong hope that Ohio will take a place by the side of the temperance States.

American Alliance.

A MEETING will be held in the city of New York, on the 11th of February next, to organize an American Branch of the Evangelical Alliance.

The American members of the General Alliance are respectfully invited to attend.

Oberlin Institute.

The Oberlin Institution, in Ohio, was founded some twelve or fifteen years ago, and has been eminently a revival Seminary. Again and again, indeed almost every year, the mighty power of divine grace has rested down upon the students and people of the place, and scores and hundreds of souls have been converted. Prof. Finney was formerly much blessed in his labors as a minister, and scarcely less so since he has been engaged in the department of Theology. The same may be said of Pres. Mahan, and others of the Faculty. The great point at Oberlin has been to give a sanctified education. While a high standard of literary attainment has been held up, there has been a steady aim to render knowledge practical, and especially to press the importance of religious obligations. As the Institution is young, and possesses but limited endowments, it could not be expected to afford all the advantages enjoyed by other and older institutions; but for the tone of piety, the deep moral feeling pervading all its circles, we have reason to believe that it surpasses any of them. In this respect it exhibits a good model for a Seminary of learning.—The history of that school shows that academies, colleges, and Theological Seminaries, may richly enjoy the influences of the Holy Spirit; and the students may go through any or all the departments without suffering in spirituality or devotedness, but all the while be making progress in the divine life.

Pious parents who are desirous that their children should make religious, as well as literary attainments, would do well to send them to the Oberlin College. There are both male and female departments; so that sons and daughters can be educated together in one place. The school is large and the terms are very moderate.

Governor's Message.

The Governor's message was read in both Houses on the 6th inst. It is an able, matter of fact State paper, such as Governor Shunk is well qualified and want to give.

His Excellency first recites and vindicates the policy of the General Government in reference to the Mexican war.

He next gives an account of the financial condition of the Commonwealth, which he represents to be very prosperous. He shows that the receipts on the canals and railroads exceeds the expenditure one hundred and ninety-four thousand four hundred and forty dollars and eleven cents; and that the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st inst., was four hundred and thirty-eight thousand nine hundred and eighty-six dollars and sixty-eight cents.

He recommends the plan of setting apart and appropriating the nett proceeds of the public works, to the gradual reduction of the State debt; which, in the course of time, he thinks, will be sufficient to extinguish the same.

On the subject of the tariff, the Governor takes a kind of middle ground—he is neither a decided '42 nor '46 man!

On divorce acts the Governor is pretty lengthy and sound. He raises his voice against the alarming number of divorce acts which have been passed by the Legislature of late years. This is wise and highly creditable. We hope the Legislature will profit by it, and abandon this wholesale covenant-breaking business, except for good and lawful causes.

Temperance triumphant in Allegheny.

Allegheny was one of the twenty counties in the State which obtained a law last winter to have the continuance or abolition of the license law tested by a vote of the people. Accordingly, the strength of the respective parties was tried at the late municipal election, in said county, when the "No-License-Men" carried the election by a majority of about twelve hundred votes. This will do for a beginning.

Schœnbein's Patent.

Dr. Schoenbein, the celebrated chemist, has secured letters patent in the United States for his discovery of Gun Cotton. His great chemical discovery, of this article, was patented in this country in December last. It applies not only to cotton but, all fibrous materials; and all persons who have used his discovery since his application was made to our government in this country, are undoubtedly liable for damages, according to the statutes.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Solitary Musings.

Nothing can be more desirable to a Christian, (because nothing is more recreating) than an occasional retreat from the business, the bustle and the confusion of the world. There the voice of passion, and worldly desire and gain, is silenced, and every avenue is open to reflection. There, where we stand, in the presence of but ONE—that One Almighty, Eternal Being—the past, the present and the future, will rush upon the mind. We will recall the scenes of our childhood, passing on to the present, and examine the "life we lived." Was it useful? Was it exemplary? Was it holy? Have I performed, as I should, the duties I owe to myself, and those toward my neighbors with like fervor? And have I loved God above all? Here is room for reflection—ground to dwell upon with profit—cause for repentance.

What are the duties toward myself? Cultivate honor, honesty, benevolence, charity, humanity, veneration, faith: cultivate these, and you have cultivated religion—your great, your first duty. Practice these, and you perform your duties toward your God and your neighbors. Let not ease and indulgence contract your affections. Accustom yourself to think of your condition, and of the many distresses of human life, and be prepared to meet and endure your share of them. Whatever you do, consult your nature; consider yourself as a sensitive, a rational, an immortal being. Strive to keep your conscience right, and you will have pleasure—not the pleasure of the world—but true pleasure, such as violated nature cannot afford.

Is this my life?—then well may I rejoice; but is it not?—then think, O my soul, of the present! I am yet in life, in the enjoyment of my senses. If my life has been wrong, may it now commence to be right. Think of the future, the terrible, the mysterious future!—What evils it may unravel! What good it may bring forth! And how much may I promote either! How shall I meet the obscure time to come! Be just!—be prepared for any emergency. One thing is certain—Death! The grave, the dreary grave, is gaping for your ashes. Think of that dark abode. But ere you are there, the soul will have taken her flight to (where?) the presence of your Judge! The Book of Life will be opened! The final judgment will be passed, and the sentence executed! The sheep to the right, the goats to the left. God and happiness on one side, Satan and misery on the other, to all eternity!

> Pause before you take another step!
> Where now, ye lying vanities of life!
> Ye ever tempting, ever-cheating train!
> Where are ye now?—and what is your amount?

Maiden! thy rosy cheek will fade; the color is not permanent; but a moment, and it is succeeded by the fallow of the grave. Thy eyes will behold the shining vanities of this world no more; thy ears will be deaf to the caresses of thy friends. The frailty of this world will have no more charms for thee. There is an end to all perfection.

Youth! thou who seest a variety of pleasing prospects in this world; thou who lookest upon this earth as if it was thy eternal abode; I pray thee, stop! even thy next step may be fatal; another heave of thy breast, and all is over. To-night thy soul may be asked of thee! Behold thy condition! Turn, if thou hast time, and fly from destruction.

The grave, yes, the grave, will soon devour this corruptible body; but the soul is destined for another port. "I'm glad that I am born to die!" Listen! Did I not hear a trumpet in the distant skies? Whose are those shouts of triumph that rend the air? The day, the great day, is come! "The places are prepared; the mansions shall be filled! Come ye blessed of my father, and inherit everlasting life." Hosanna to the Son of David! Glory to the Highest!

But, hark! Wherefore that woful sound! Why those sad lamentations! Why is it that not all are joyful on this glorious day? Behold that multitude clothed in mourning apparel! See their flickering lamps! There is wailing and weeping! The Bridegroom is come, and found them sleeping! The time to purchase oil is past! "Go ye into eternal damnation!"

Eternity! mysterious word! Lend ear, ye mortals, and reflect! How shall we contemplate its meaning? Thousands of years are but an atom in its space! Millions of years may pass, yet eternity is in its infancy. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word abideth forever!"

A few Thoughts on Faith.

We read that all men have not faith. And again, without faith it is impossible to please God. The Apostle also says, that "faith without works is dead." James 2: 17. Hence, we should not only have the grace of faith, but we should also have the power and exercise thereof.

For instance: Peter had the grace of faith in the heart, but wanted the power and exercise, in the case of confessing and owning Jesus Christ before men, when in the High Priest's Hall. Matt. 26th chap.

Moses and Aaron had the grace of faith, but wanted the energy and exercise, in the case of bringing forth water out of the rock, only by speaking to it; and their want of faith did appear, in that they smote the rock twice, when they should have but spoken to it. Num. 20th chap.

Again: The disciples had the grace of faith in their hearts, and the gift of miracles, but yet wanted the exercise thereof, in that case of the child possessed with a dumb spirit. Mark 9: 17, 18, 19.

The above instances show the want of that active power and exercise of faith; and because they did not believe, the Lord left them to themselves, to try and prove them, that they might more fully know their own weakness, and so keep a more constant dependance upon divine assistance. Now the exhortation of Paul to Timothy: "Wherefore, I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift that is in thee." A man may have excellent gifts and parts, and yet the church of the most High be never the better of them, unless those gifts be stirred up and kept in exercise.—Reader! be careful from him that hath not; i. e., exerciseth and improveth not, shall be taken away, even that which he hath. O! believe; know that the life and comfort of thy soul, under the most precious ordinances, and in the performance of holy duties, whether with thyself or others, lieth not so much in thy having of true grace, or in thy having of faith, but in the activity and exercise of that faith which thou hast. Oh! therefore, beware and take heed, that thou neglect not "to stir up the gift that is in thee." The life of ordinances, the sweetness of the Word and promises, the comfort and fruit of holy duties, is lost, when once the exercise of faith is lost. Take away the exercise of faith out of the heart of Christians, and what are the most pure and powerful ordinances? They become like so many broken cisterns, which can hold no water. And, therefore, it is that the devil doth so industriously tempt the saints of God to spiritual slumber and security, that, so hindering the exercise of their grace, he may deprive them of the spiritual fruit and comfort of all God's ordinances; and thereupon tempt them to doubt and question whether they be his ordinances or not; and at length, if they be not sincere, prevaileth with them to cast off ordinances as fruitless and unprofitable, and to cast reproach upon them. And hereupon hath the devil taken advantage to sow those cursed tares, and corrupt opinions of non-ordinances. Formalists, nominal Christians at best, although they differ among themselves, yet do agree in this, to cast all the reproach they can upon the precious and Heavenly ordinances of Jesus Christ: and this hath the devil done whilst professors were fallen asleep, and had lost the life, exercise and activity of their grace; as it is written, Matt. 13: 25, "But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat."

The preaching of the Gospel is a most powerful and precious ordinance of Jesus Christ for the conversion, edification and salvation of the souls of men. Rom. 1: 16. But this Gospel may be clearly, powerfully and faithfully preached, and yet those to whom it is preached have no fruit, no profit by it, for the want of faith. Heb. 4: 2: "But the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Oh! therefore, when thou goest to hear the Word preached, Christian, beware that thou stirrest up the grace that is in thee; and in particular this grace of faith, without which the Word preached will not, cannot profit thy soul, though the Apostles themselves; yea, though an Angel from Heaven should be the preacher! The fruit and benefit of the Word preached doth not depend so much upon the grace and gifts of the ministers, as upon the faith of the hearer; that is, if it is God's word and truth.

So likewise prayer; it is a most precious and powerful ordinance of Jesus Christ, for the obtaining of all things that we stand in need of at the hands of God. Matt. 21: 22, says sufficiently on this point: "And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." And upon this very consideration, some have called prayer the key of Heaven; but faith is the hand which turns this key. Now as the key without the hand is useless, so prayer without faith is fruitless; thou mayest, therefore, Christian, pray, and be much in prayer, and yet lose all thy labor, unless thou exercise thy faith in prayer: thou mayest bring the key of Heaven, and yet find it fast locked against thee, unless thou hast a hand of faith to turn this key.

To my beloved brethren, let me say, make use of this gracious ordinance of prayer, and do as did the woman before the unjust judge, and not cease until God doth revive His work from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Oh! brethren, how good it is when our souls are filled with the love of God; and if sinners will not turn and serve God, let us try to be found of Him in peace when He shall come; which, perhaps, will be soon. Let this suffice for the present. I may in future have something more to add to the above.

ABRAHAM ANDREWS.

I Have no Gift.

This is the language made use of by some disciples of Christ, especially when invited to aid their brethren in carrying on a meeting of prayer or experience. The language implies that something important had been denied them in the Providence of God, and which denial gives them sufficient ground for refusing to engage in those important religious duties. Would they refrain from going into a family party, or social circle! Or, when there, would they abstain from all conversation with those about them, on the plea that an important divine gift had been withheld from them! Would they sit there mute, grave, and gloomy as an owl, on the plea that the gift of communion with others had been denied them!

Did we ever see such professors at their place of business with a pad-lock upon their lips, apparently incapacitated from communicating their thoughts to the throng about them! Had they no words! Had they no power of utterance! Had they not common sense, and good sense, too; and did not passing occurrences open their mouths! And did not those about them learn that they had the gift of thought and feeling, and the gift of Job, or the means of letting their thoughts be known!

And have they no thought and feeling in regard to the things of God! Now does it require anything more of a gift to communicate such thoughts and feelings, than about social or business affairs! If out of the abundance of the heart the mouth can speak, in the one case, can it not in the other! Shall one of these territories be open to all the offices of the lips, and the other closed against them all!

Let those professed Christians, that excuse themselves from the active duties of religion, beware of the danger of intimating that their Maker, God, had denied them any essential gift for such duties. If, in all the social and business affairs of life, they find themselves not without the gift of transacting them properly, they have certainly made a false estimate of the case, when supposing God has denied them the power of useful speech upon divine things among their brethren. They must not run the risk of displeasing God in this manner. And they ought to think of the guilt and danger of thus witholding from the interests of the kingdom of God, the influence that might be given it by their open and decided action in its behalf. Their denial of qualifications in this matter, when other scenes, where this quality is required, show it is not wanting, endangers the actual denial by an offended Saviour, of some important benefit now enjoyed. It is a dangerous position for them to occupy. More anon.

Letter from Brother A. D. Williams.

Hamilton College, N. Y.,
December 30, 1846.

Rev. Mr. Winebrenner:—

Sir: A friend has put into my hand a copy of your Treatise on Regeneration: by which, in connection with other sources of information, I learn that you and your people hold sentiments very nearly synonymous with those of the denomination with which I am connected—the Free-Will Baptists.

I have written a notice of your work, which will probably be published in the organ of our denomination—the "Morning Star." If so, a copy of the number containing it will be sent you. It is said that the two denominations differ only in Church Polity. If this be true, it may not be amiss that we become respectively better acquainted with each other; for if in this country there exists two classes of people so similar, it is certainly to be desired that they cultivate an acquaintance, and strengthen the bonds of Christian affection.

Our principal doctrinal distinctions are summed up in few words. We are Aminian Baptists, preaching open communion with all Evangelical denominations. We are also decidedly in favor of the various benevolent enterprises of the day, including Anti-slavery and peace.

There are in the connection about one thousand ministers, and fifteen thousand communicants, mostly in the northern States,—some sixteen hundred being in Pennsylvania, (my native State.)

The state of religion with us is rather low at present; yet some of our churches are enjoying very precious seasons of revival.—Truly, in the present moral and spiritual desolations of this land, such refreshings are like bright Oasis, where vernal verdure blooms.

You will confer a favor by replying to this as soon as practicable, and furnish me with information in relation to your people, as you may be able or willing; and in return I shall be glad to embrace the opportunity of imparting any information which may be in my power. Most respectfully yours,

A. D. WILLIAMS.

Brother WILLIAMS will be answered shortly by letter; in the mean time he is referred to an article on the "Church of God" in the "History of all the Religious Denominations in the U. S." Published by HUMPHREYS, CLYDE & WILLIAMS, Philadelphia. EDITOR.

Things in the City of Brotherly Love.

Philadelphia, January 7, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

If you consider the following worthy of a place in the columns of the Advocate, it is at your disposal.

According to public notice, there was preaching in the Native American Hall, Third street, above Poplar, on Sabbath the 27th of December last, by brother Harn, who, you are aware, remained in this city a few days after your departure. It was expected that brother Flake would be here to assist him; but owing to previous engagements in Lancaster, he did not get as far as this place by that time.

The congregations in the evening and afternoon were small; but in the evening there was a pretty good house; better, I think, than at any previous meeting during the series. The subject of his discourse in the evening was from Amos 4: 12, and from the interest manifested by those present, I have no doubt more than one felt the necessity of a preparation to meet their God, although not a single individual was found willing to avow or manifest a willingness to forsake the pleasures of sin, that they might enjoy the smiles of a reconciled God, and have a right to that inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled.

I am sorry brother Harn could not remain another week; for I feel confident that his labors would not have been in vain. Already, as we have seen by his letter in the last Advocate, some good has resulted from the effort while with us, and, I have no doubt, much more will follow.

Your remarks in the Advocate of the 1st inst., in regard to the affairs of the church in this city, I am sorry to say, are too true; but I humbly pray that all who have heretofore (whether in the city or country) united with the "Church of God," will lay to a helping hand, and aid those who are again making an effort towards the permanent organization of the "Church of God" in this city. There is certainly great need of their assistance; and if all would join together, heart and hand, it would not be long ere a bright and glorious day would arrive in the history of the church in this city, and numbers would be found flocking to her for admission.

Many members of the different churches in this place have become convinced of the necessity of coming out upon the principles of the Gospel; but as they can find no church here which comes nearer the truth than the church they are already in connection with, they of course remain where they are. All that is wanted is union and harmony upon the part of the friends of the "Church of God;" and if this be accomplished, my word for it, twelve months will not elapse before there will be one of the most flourishing churches in this city, that there is in our State. Would to God that the friends of the church would awake to their own interests, and become united.

On Sabbath last, the 3d inst., the usual afternoon prayer-meeting was held at the house of mother Dawson. But few of the "little few" were present; but, notwithstanding the number was small, the Lord did not despise the day of small things, and in answer to their prayers visited them in a special manner, and before the meeting was brought to a close, one more was added to their number—a young lady who had been solemnly impressed with the necessity of once more yielding her heart to God at the meeting on the Sabbath previous; but through the interference of some of her friends, was prevented from so doing. During the whole week the spirit of the Lord strove with her. She sought, but found no mercy, until, at the meeting on Sunday, she came out openly, when, after an hour or so of earnest and devoted prayer, she found the Lord to the joy and comfort of her soul. May the good Shepherd protect the lambs of His flock, and all His true and faithful followers, leading them into all truth and righteousness, that their end may be eternal life!

A Friend to the Church.

Good News!

York county, Pa.,
January 8, 1846.

Brother Winebrenner:—

As it is always a source of joy to God's people to hear that He is saving sinners from the error of their ways, I will drop a few lines to inform you and the readers of the Advocate, that the Lord is once more reviving His work at the river, in York county.

Pursuant to previous notice, we commenced a protracted meeting there on the last evening in the Old Year. I tried to talk to the people on the subject of revivals, from Psalms 85: 6. We had a profitable time. The power of God came down upon the people, and one found the Lord the first night. The meeting was continued, and is still going on with increased interest. Sinners are falling on the right and on the left.

Last evening there were eight forward to seek the Lord. Sixteen have already found the Lord precious to their souls since the commencement of the meeting. The convicting power of God is not confined alone to the school-house where we meet, but people are troubled at home, and are sending to us, and asking us to pray for them. O! may the good Lord continue to work among the people in Fishing Creek valley till scores are brought to God.

The time was when the Lord had many witnesses in this place; but as the Prophet of God has said many have gone back with a perpetual back-sliding, and have been trying to satisfy themselves with the husks upon which the swine fed; but no man gave to them. And now, seeing themselves afar off, and in a perishing condition, they are beginning to arise, and, prodigal-like, are seeking shelter in their Father's House.

May the good Lord continue to bring them in, and may He preserve the young converts of the Cross, is my prayer! Pray for us.

Nothing more at present, but

Remain yours, in the patience
And kingdom of the saints,
JOSIAH H. HURLEY.

P. S.—Since the above was written, two more have found the Lord. In haste,

J. H. H.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Flood in Ohio—The City of Dayton Inundated.—An extra from the Dayton Empire gives the particulars of the destruction done by the flood at that place on the 2d inst. The citizens were aroused about one o'clock with the ringing of bells, warning them of their danger. The water had already broken over the lower levee and inundated the whole western part of the town. The rise continued until perhaps five o'clock in the morning of the 2d, when it remained stationary until about noon. Of the ten bridges across the canal, four have been swept away, and the others all very materially injured. The loss to the State from the injury to the aqueduct and the public works will be very heavy—that of Dayton and citizens immense. Many will probably lose all they owned. The Cincinnati Commercial of the 4th says:—

"We learn from Wm. Morris, Esq., who came from Dayton yesterday, that the cause of the flood was this: The Hydraulic Company had built a dam across the river above the city, and dug a canal from thence to a reservoir, which was in the immediate vicinity, the bottom of which was some ten feet higher. The great rains and floods in the Miami caused the reservoir to break, and pour itself out upon the city, which was immediately deluged several feet deep. The destruction of property in Dayton is awful to tell—the loss is put at over $1,000,000, some say as high as $2,000,000.

National Appropriation Bills.—The appropriation bills reported in the House from the Committee of Ways and Means amount, in the aggregate, to nearly forty millions of dollars.

The amount of the Army bill is $29,538,704 25. Of this sum there is for the pay and subsistence of officers and men; transportation of troops; purchase of horses, mules, &c,; ordnance and ordnance stores; manufacture of arms, &c. &c., for the army proper, $6,813,373 25; for the pay subsistence, ordnance, and transportation and supplies, for the volunteers, $17,932,331; and to supply deficieneies in the existing appropriations for the pay, travelling allowance, transportation and supplies of volunteers, under the act of the 13th of May, and joint resolutions of the 8th of August, $4.793,000.

The amount of the Navy bill is $8.920,204 49, of which $2,500,000 is for the inerease and repair of vessels; $469.417 for improvements on Navy Yards; $275,000 for the Dry Dock at Brooklyn; and $320,546 for the support of the Marine Corps.

The amount of the Indian appropriation is $1,179,324, of which $124,000 is for fulfilling the recent treaty with the Cherokees, and $110,000 for that with the Pottawatamies.

Steam Navigation on the Canal.—Three boats have recently arrived at Pottsville, Pa., direct from New York city, via Philadelphia. Each boat contained forty-five tons of merchandise, and travelled at the rate of six miles an hour, lockage included. Two of the boats are of iron, and it is intended to open a regular steam transportation and passenger line between Pottsville and Philadelphia.

Dreadful Scenes in Illinois.—The civil war in Massac, and the adjoining counties in Illinois appears to be raging with unabated fury. On the 4th ult. about eighty of the citizens, took several of the Regulators prisoners, conducted them to the village of Metropolis, and confined them in a large house. On the 6th they took several additional prisoners, whom they confined in like manner. Some two or three days afterwards, the Regulators raised a strong force, marched to the Metropolis, released their friends, and took several of the opposing party prisoners, who, after some indignities and admonitions, were released in a few days. These Regulators, who recognize no law but their own, will still maintain it; the Governor's proclamation to the contrary notwithstanding.

[Saturday American.

The Wonder of the Age.—The Magnetic Telegraph is now in successful operation between this city and Philadelphia. The proceedings of Congress up to the period of adjournment in the previous evening, are now in print in this city every morning: in other words, we have the report as soon as they have it in the morning papers at the Capital. It is sent by way of Baltimore and Philadelphia, the distance being from 450 to 500 miles. Foreign news will now be reported and published here within a few hours of its arrival at Boston or New York! If this does not realize the idea of "annihilating time and space," it certainly approaches very near to it.—Pittsburg Presbyterian.

Writing on Newspapers.—The Postmaster General has issued a circular to deputy Postmasters, directing them to remove the wrappers from all transient newspapers, printed circulars, price currents, pamphlets and magazines received at their respective offices, and if found to contain any manuscript or memorandum of any kind, either written or stamped, or any marks or signs, except the name and address of the person to whom directed, the document shall be charged with letter postage, by weight; and if the person to whom it is directed shall refuse to pay such postage, the postmaster is to send it to the office from whence it came and have the offender prosecuted for the penalty of five dollars. The name of the sender, written, printed or stamped on the wrapper of a newspaper, subjects him to the same penalty.

Telegraph Despatch.—The message of Gov. Young to the Legislature of New York was transmitted, verbatim, from Albany to the N. Y. Tribune, by Magnetic Telegraph.

The message contained 5000 words, or 25,000 letters, and was written from two instruments in the Albany office, and read in the New York office at the average rate of 83 letters per minute, or two and a-half hours for each instrument.

Professor Morses' original estimate to Congress for the despatch with which communications could be sent by his Telegraph, was 30 letters per minute; here we see the number almost trebled in a long public document.

Export of Breadstuffs.—The aggregate value of the breadstuffs exported from the port of Philadelphia, during the month of November, is $393.347.

Statistics of Slavery.—The Paris Universe declares that the substantial accuracy of the following table of slaves may be relied on: In Brazil, 3,000,000; United States, 2,700,000; Spanish Colonies, 800,000; French Colonies, 250,000; Dutch, Danish and Swedish Colonies, 100,000; South American Republics, 400,000; Texas, 30,000—total, 7,330,000. It is estimated that in the Russian, Austrian and Prussian dominions, including Poland, there are not less than 70 to 80 millions of human beings in this degrading state.

Massacre of the Nestorians.—A correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle states, in a letter dated at Constantinople, Nov. 7th, that the Kurds, under their savage leader, Beder Khan Bey, had massacred three thousand Nestorians, in the most cruel and horrid manner, and sacked and destroyed thirty-six villages. The Kurdish chief has sworn that he will exterminate all the Nestorian people—and it was feared that he would execute his threat on all who could not reach Persia.

The "Appeal."—It is designed to place a copy of the "Appeal," published by the State Society, in every house in the State, as far as practicable. There will be no difficulty if the friends of temperance in their respective neighborhoods, make collections for the purpose, and take charge of the distribution. A mere trifle contributed by each of a few individuals in a district would be sufficient to provide the requisite number of copies.

New York Election.—From an official statemant, given in a late number of the New York Tribune, we take the following: For Congress, total Whig vote 199.736; do. total Democratic 178,143.—Whig majority 20,593.—Liberty party total 12,027.—Native American total 637.—Irregular Democratic total 120.—National Reform total 793.

Amended constitution, Yes 221,528, No 92,436.—Equal suffrage to colored persons, Yes 85,306, No 223,845.

Atlantic Steamships.—The arrangements now being made, both in this country and Europe, will soon give New York the benefit of a rapid and constant intercourse with the old world. The French line of steamships, the Bremen line, the Cunard line from Liverpool, and the Great Western Company, will make about eighteen steamships running between that port and ports in Europe. This will give that city a great advantage in a commercial point of view.

Improvement in Printing.—The correspondent of the National Intelligencer speaks of a new Printing Press in London which has been tested, and will strike 10,700 impressions per hour. They have also a type-setting machine in New York, which the Commercial Advertiser says is calculated to perform the work of seven men, or to set 7000 ems per hour! This with the labor of one man and a boy.—This is the age of improvement.

The Public Printing.—The bids for the public printing for the next session of Congress were opened this morning by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House, and the contract has been awarded to the Albany Argus junto.

Telegraph to New Orleans.—It is estimated that the revenue from the line of telegraph between Washington and New Orleans will reach $149,580 a year, and that the expenses will not exceed $63,636.—It is expected that government will furnish a large portion of the necessary capital, on condition that the work be completed in four months.

Selling Ardent Spirits.—The Zanesville Conference (Ohio) of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, have unanimously determined that it is the duty of the church to expel from its communion those members who, after having been duly admonished, continue to use to excess, or to abuse, ardent spirits, or who may be engaged in the sale of ardent spirits.

Munificent Bequest.—By the will of Elijah Waters, Esq., of Milbury, Mass., whose decease occurred a few days since, the First Congregational society receives in cash $5000, and the parsonage $1600 more; American Bible Society $1500; A. B. Foreign Missions, $1000; Home Missionary Society, $1000.

The Central Railroad.—The Philadelphia Ledger states that less than two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is now required to complete the balance of subscriptions necessary, with the amount voted by the city, to secure the charter of the great Philadelphia and Pittsburg Railroad.

Thanksgiving among the Indians.—Thanksgiving this year has been nearly universal in the U. States, and has even extended to the Indians. John Ross, the principal chief of the Cherokees, appointed the 17th of the last month to be observed in this manner.

Baltimore Trade.—The number of passengers that arrived at Baltimore, from foreign ports, during the year 1846, was as follows: From Bremen, 8,332; from Roterdam, 663; from Amsterdam, 152; from Havre, 526; from London, 172; from Liverpool, 166. Total, 9,911.

Caution.—Never enter a sick room in a state of perspiration, as the moment you become cool your pores absorb. Do not approach contagious disease with an empty stomach, nor sit between the sick and the fire, because the heat attracts the thin vapor.

Travel between the East and West.—The number of passengers between the East and West is about 800.000 annually.—Of this number last year 230.000 were carried on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and only 56,000 by the Philadelphia and Columbia railroad.

Danger of Gun Cotton.—The Bavarian government has interdicted the sale of explosive cotton, on the ground that this prepared material cannot be distinguished from that which is in its ordinary state, and therefore may occasion serious accidents.

Colportage in France.—During the last three months there have been sold by colporteurs in France, 33,000 copies of the Scriptures.

Congress.—Iowa has been admitted into the Union, being the 29th State, a large increase on the original thirteen.

Decrease of Crime.—The Rochester Democrat states that there are now but eleven criminals confined in the Monroe county Jail—not one female. The usual number at this season is 40 or 50. This is the first time the female cells have been empty for a number of years.

Municipal Election in Pittsburg.—A glorious triumph has been achieved in our preparatory Municipal Election. Every Ward gave a majority against the License privilege; hence, every grogshop will hereafter be broken up.

Slavery in Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople of the 30th October, announced that Lord Palmerston has sent a note to the Porte, demanding the total abolition of slavery throughout the Ottomon Empire.

War Expenses.—Each of the five steamers which carried the Pennsylvania Regiment to New Orleans, receives $4,000—in all $20,000, simply for transporting 1000 men to N. O.

Flour and Tobacco Business.—Eight hundred and fifty thousand barrels of superfine flour, and upwards of seventy thousand hogsheads of tobacco were inspected at Baltimore last year.

Sheep.—Mr. Clay, it appears, is paying more attention to aggriculture than to politics. He has imported a lot of eight Leicester sheep, costing $100 each, originally.

Education.—A wealthy farmer in Kentucky says: "I would rather be taxed for the education of the boy than the ignorance of the man. For one or the other I am compelled to be."

"Tit for Tat."—Our colored friends in Hayti have adopted a new constitution, which provides that no white man shall hold real estate or become a citizen of that republic.

Wealth of Chicago.—According to the assessor's last return, the property in that city amounts to $4,500,000. The taxes on the same are $37,000. The population is 14,169.

Tea.—The annual consumption of tea in the United States is about 18,000,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hints to Preachers.

The following hints, which we copy from the editorial columns of "The Pulpit," are too plain to be misunderstood, and too good to be forgotten.

LONG SERMONS.

Long sermons are not profitable—scarcely sufferable.

It is only on extraordinary occasions, and from extraordinary speakers, that they can be tolerated at all; and it is doubted whether, on any occasion, or from any man, a sermon of an hour and a quarter to two hours in length, can be as useful as one which comes short of an hour. Three-quarters of an hour is full enough for the average length of sermons. It were better that they fall short of that time than exceed it. Young preachers can be seldom justified in preaching more than thirty minutes.

There are many preachers who are always unpopular where they labor, who would pass well if they would put all the thoughts of an hour's performance into one of half an hour, or less. A young preacher who can talk good sense and good divinity for twenty minutes, does well, and he stands a thousand times better chance to make a useful preacher, if he be content with that, than he does to act from the notion that brevity is a mark of a small mind, and that, to pass well, he must preach as long as the generality of preachers do. Dr. Clarke said, when he was well advanced in the ministry, that he often preached but ten or fifteen minutes, and that for the reason that he had no more to say upon that subject at that time; and what he had said he did not consider worth a repetition then and there. A preacher should never exhaust his subject, but leave it fruitful; then people will come again.

APOLOGIES IN THE PULPIT.

These are seldom justifiable. The time spent in them is worse than thrown away. It is seldom necessary to inform the congregation that "we have not had time to prepare," &c. And then, in the discussion of the subject, we should avoid the practice of many who are constantly advertising the congregation that much more might be said upon this part of the subject, and much more upon that—and that such and such things must be passed over for want of time—promising to come to a close, and still continuing to speak—drawing, apparently, to a close, and then branching out again—frequently remarking, "I fear I shall weary your patience."

PULPIT PHRASEOLOGY.

It is very common to hear a minister of the gospel, when speaking of himself alone, in the pulpit, say "we." In private conversation he speaks of himself only in the singular, but when he gets into the pulpit he suddenly becomes plural. To assume to be more than one anywhere, is certainly not very modest, though some, probably, adopt this phraseology through a mistaken notion, that to use the personal pronoun "I," is more immodest. The pronoun "I," should be sparingly used; yet when one speaks of himslf alone, it is always more modest to be "I," than to assume to be "we." The term "we" should sometimes be used in the pulpit; for instance, when the faults of the people are referred to, in the room of saying you, a speaker may couple himself with the congregation, and say we. And when he speaks of himself in connection with other ministers, the term "we" should be used. But when he gives notice of what he proposes to do, firstly, secondly, or thirdly; or of what he has done, let him never stretch himself beyond his measure, and get into the plural. These suggestions are in accordance with the practice of some of the best modern speakers.

The same errors are seen in the correspondence of many who write for periodicals. They, however, drop from the pen with the same impropriety as from the pulpit. Kings and editors only should say "we," when they mean "I." The writer is not very partial to the use of the term among editors: but it is almost a universal practice, and so it passes.

EXCESSIVE MODESTY.

Some preachers are so excessively modest, that they commence their public exercises in so low a tone as to be scarcely audible. Weak lungs are sometimes made an excuse for this, but it is a groundless excuse in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. Let a minister give out his hymns, read the Scriptures, commence his prayer, and give out his text clearly and distinctly, pitching his voice on a medium key. It is distressing to hear some ministers commence in a whisper what should be distinctly uttered. But while, as preachers, we guard against the stillness and moderation of death on the one hand, we should guard against abruptness and irreverence on the other.

Evangelical Alliance.

The Preparatory Committee of the American Division of the Evangelical Alliance met, according to appointment, on Thursday, the 10th ult., in New York. The draft of the constitution was, it appears, prepared, and they have called for a general meeting of all the American members of the Alliance, to be held on Tuesday, Feb. 2, 1847, at 11 o'clock, in the lecture-room of the Mercer street Presbyterian Church, New York.

The basis of the organization which they will then present, we have not heard. It will be necessary for the American members to meet and adopt their constitution previous to the reception of new members. We shall hear more of this scheme for union when the constitution is adopted, and the door open for the reception of members.

We love union among Christians; we are ready to do as much as lies within our power to promote it; but we are yet to be convinced that the plan contemplated by the Evangelical Alliance is the wisest and best. We are open to conviction, however, and, when we see a prospect of valuable results from such an organization, we shall be happy to aid it onward.

Beautiful Sentiment.

When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies within me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every immoderate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tombstone, my heart melts with compassion: when I see tombs of parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom me must soon follow; when I see the kings lying with those who deposed them, when I consider rivals laid side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their disputes, I reflect with astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind. When I read the several debates of some that died yesterday, and some centuries ago, I consider that great day when we shall all be contemporaries, and make our appearance together.

No man ever trusted in God, but he found him faithful, nor in his own heart, but he faund it false. Whoever has Christ, cannot be poor, whoever is without him, cannot be rich.

Cold Water.

If you are dry, drink pure cold water. It is safe, salutary and invigorating.

If you would use a beverage provided by God, and free from the poison and impurity found in intoxicating drinks, use pure cold water.

If you would have a good relish for food, and have it well digested, drink pure cold water.

If you would enjoy a calm state of mind and be saved from impatience, fretfulness, and evil passions, drink nothing but pure cold water, and this will contribute largely to such a result.

If you would save your property, spend nothing for inebriating liquors and drink cold water.

If you would live long, drink cold water. Those who use this as a beverage usually live longer than those who drink intoxicating liquors.

If you thirst for disilled drinks, and the curse of intemperance is upon you, drink cold water, and nothing else. It is a sure remedy for drunkeness.

If you would have good animal spirits and enjoy good health, bathe as often as convenient in water of a suitable temperature. The benefits are incalculably great.

If public speakers are affected with bronchital difficulties, let them wash the throat and stomach externally with cold water in the morning, rubbing these parts hard. This if done in season will affect a cure.

If you are to be out in wet or very cold weather, wash the hands, face and neck, the parts that will be most exposed, in cold water. This will preserve very much from the bad effects of the weather, and especially from taking colds.—Morning Star.

Consecration to God.

The time will come, and I cannot but hope that it is near at hand, when all the difficulty about funds for the spread of the Gospel will be done away—when christians will learn a lesson, which hitherto they have been very slow to learn, that the richest enjoyment of wealth is to give its increase to the treasury of the Lord; and that the sweetest of incentives to labor, is the hope of gaining something that we may aid in furthering the cause of God. The excuses for our want of liberality are utterly futile—they are worse, they are often impious. If we are Christians, let us act like Christians, and not dishonor the sacred name by a base, selfish, avaricious spirit, which keeps back from the treasury of the Lord what is due. If we are Christians indeed, we owe not only our wealth, but ourselves to the Redeemer, who has bought us with a price. Was He willing to purchase our salvation by pouring out his blood, and shall we be unwilling to give liberally of what he has given us, to promote his cause? The very heathen will rise up in judgement against narrow-hearted Christians; for they expend ten times as much on their idols, as these do in supporting and propagating a religion which is truly divine, and which is the only hope of salvation. O that men would remember that they are but stewards, and that God will require a strict account of the manner in which they dispense what has been committed to them. Rev. Dr. Alexander.

A Short Sermon.

Honor the Lord with thy substance. Prov. 3: 9.

This text enjoins an important and particular duty: Honor the Lord. Can frail man do this? The humble soul at first shrinks from the idea. But upon a little consideration, takes courage, and asks, how can I do this great work? The Scriptures, which will furnish the man of God for every good work, comes to his aid, and at once solves the doubt: With thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.

The term substance has a definite meaning here, which no one can doubt. It includes all kinds of property, or goods.—The doctrine of the Bible upon this subject, is, that God is as much honored, or served in the proper use of property, as by prayer, exhortation, or any other duty. God as much requires the use of our property in his service as he does the use of our own tongues or our thoughts. If the Christian's heart is right he will be just as happy when engaged in a contribution for any benevolent object or for any necessary expense, as when engaged in prayer or praise. The reason is plain. He is honoring God. For the want of this common sense scriptural view of this subject, many otherwise good Christians are tried, when ask to contribute of their substance for any benevolent cause, or even if others contribute, especially on the Sabbath. They do not consider that it is honoring God. If they did, they would not doubt that the holy Sabbath was the most appropriate season. When the time shall come that all church members consider that God can be honored with their substance a great and glorious victory will be achieved over the dragon, and God's word will be glorified.—Morning Star.

Stated Prayer.

There is no religion without prayer.—Have stated times for devotion. At least begin and end every day with God. Take time from sleep rather than want proper time for prayer. Watch against formality in your devotions. It is heartfelt prayers that are alone acceptible to God. Besides your intercourse with God at stated seasons, often look up to him, and ever go to him in the name of Jesus. Go into your closet, and down upon your knees with as much reverence, as if you beheld the great and blessed God.

You require to be often reminded of this. For whether in child hood, in youth or in manhood, we are all too apt to have a wandering heart in prayer, and repeat an outward form with the lips, but with a heart, alas, far from God.

Oh! pray against heartlessness, as one of the most powerful temptations of your spiritual enemy. Could you ascend into heaven every morning and evening to offer your devotion to the Most High, and then return to earth again, what a life of holiness you would lead! What fervent prayer and thanksgiving would you offer—consider that the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good, and that "all things are naked and open before him with whom we have to do."

A Great Event.—The conversion of a sinner to God is an event never to be forgotten.—Robert Hall.

CARRIER'S ADDRESS OF THE "CHURCH ADVOCATE."

[JANUARY 1, 1847.]

My Christian Friends; A happy New Year to you all;
The Carrier, (like Time) would make his annual call,
To relate of scenes gone by, and of the Future tell,—
And kindly thus advise you:—"In the coming year excell

"In progress, on your pilgrimage, to God's eternal Throne,
Where trav'lers, faint and weary, will have a blessed home!—
Where they shall see the Saviour, and with the angel band,
Behold their Holy Father, and dwell at His right hand."

The Past! "like a dream, upon which mem'ry loves to dwell,"—
Pleasing theme for the Christian—can he say "all is well;"
That the love in his soul confidentially reveals
That the time was improved—and his Saviour he feels,

Hath led him through dangers,—often girded him up,
And sweetened, with hope, misery's sin-bitter'd cup—
Hath made his soul tranquil when darkning clouds would appear,
Or whispered "take courage, for thy Saviour is near!"

The Present is now before thee, and is thine to improve—
To grow in grace and wisdom, and thy Saviour to love;
That, when Death shall overtake thee, and hasten thee away
To the coffin, winding sheet, and mouldering clay;—

That thy Faith in the Saviour, who has suffered and died,
(Whose blood, for man's redemption, flowed free from His side,)
Shall be strenghtened with Grace. Then, in peace close thine eyes,
While a bright host of angels bear thy soul to the skies!

Of the Future—the Bible beautifully explains,
How God's people inherit their reward, where He reigns;
And where care is a stranger—grief or trouble unknown;
Where they shall find a bless'd Saviour—their Maker—and Home!

Oh! who'd not be faithful, for a few fleeting days?
And serve Jesus, the kind Saviour, and follow His ways—
That, when'er He shall bid thee "Come thou hither—come live,
The just reward of thy service, come thou and receive!"

Yet, Oh! how eager is man, in his worldly pursuit;
To garner up the vain treasures which yield him no fruit,—
Leave no hope for the Future,—and no safe-guard through life,
No protection from danger, temptation and strife.

The cross of the Saviour which is so easy to bear
Man oft boldly refuseth, yet he dreadeth with fear.
The dispensations of God, who can stop his frail breath,
Who may send in a moment the messenger—Death!

The prospect of Heaven, the Christian's home above,
Fills his heart with emotion, and disperseth a love
In his soul—where, in triumph, his Redeemer doth reign,
Who can remove every doubt—every fear—every pain!

Life is but a bubble, on the vast ocean of Time—
To improve it's our duty—to neglect it is crime;
We possess it one moment, in another 'tis gone
To its Maker, who gave it, and who judges alone!

To the Advocate, my patrons' I'd next turn my muse;
Welcome visiter to thee, ever bringing good news,—
The production of toil,—and willing labor of mind
In its well printed columns, the kind reader will find.

With theatres and plays, or such nonsensical trash
As the fashions and humbugs—or political flash,
Our pages are not fill'd. But 'tis our principal aim—
To spread a free salvation, in Jesus' holy name.

In the year that has departed and gone o'er its round,
Carnage, war and contention, have polluted the ground
Of the "fair sunny South"—with flowing streams of man's blood.
How debasing, disgraceing, to the image of God!

My kind patrons I have done with my imperfect lay,
So, come now, be generous then I'll hasten away:
The Carrier, assuredly would think it quite strange,
Should you refuse to hand over a nice bit of change!

Phonography.

At a meeting of the citizens of Hamilton, held in the Session Room of the Baptist Church, to witness an exhibition of the attainments of the pupils of Mr. David Parsons, in the science of Phonography, the committee, appointed to examine the principles on which the science was founded, the fitness of the science itself for practical purposes, &c., made the following report, through their chairman, Dr. J. S. Doughlass:

Pronography, (from Phone, sound or voice, and Graphein, to write,) the art of representing spoken sounds by written signs, and Phonotypy, (from Phone, voice, and Typos, a type,) the art of representing spoken sounds by printed characters or types, is founded upon the science of Phonetics, (from Phone, voice,) and as invented by Isaac Pitman, of Bath. England. The history of Phonography and Phonotypy, is equally interesting and instructive. It is impossible, however, on this occasion, to give the particulars of the discovery of Phonetics and the thousand means of bringing to maturity, the art of writing and printing. It will be sufficient to say that the science has been discovered over twenty years, and that the arts founded upon it have been maturing until the year 1845, when they were pronounced perfected.

Mr. Pitman says, in a public speech at Ipswich, Eng., May, 1845: "It is rather a curious fact that it was three years after the publication of Phonography, before I became aware that any one else had ever attempted to write according to sound. I then met with a copy of two or three systems of short-hand, founded upon phonetic principles and published about 1760. I have since met with book after book upon the subject, from Bishop Wilkins down to the present time, and in such numbers that one is almost led to wonder how it is the world has not been phonographized long ago." About 1840, the second edition of Mr. Pitman's system of Phonography was printed, in the form of a small chart, and during the same year, over 20,000 copies were sold. The third edition, at the close of 1840, was but a demi-octavo copy of the former, with fuller explanations, &c. Such was the progress of phonography that, during the same year, over 30,000 copies were disposed of. At the close of 1841, another edition, in the same form, was printed, and so on till January, 1845, when the seventh edition was issued, and the system considered complete. During the year 1842, the Phonographic Journal, the Phonotypic and Phonographic Journal, and the Phonographic Correspondent were established, and are now in successful operation. Such has been the progress of these sciences or arts in England that, during the month of June, 1845, twelve Phonographic Journals were established. All these, with a large number of others, in different parts of the kingdom, and in Germany, France, &c., are yet alive and receive good support. The Islands of the Ocean are represented by now and then a Phonographic publication. Among these is the Truth-Seeker by Dr. Leeds, Isle of Man.

Books of all kinds, the Bible, histories, school books, &c., are now published in different parts of Europe and America.—Children and the heathen, who have been hitherto without any written language, are being taught to read the Bible, and to write in the course of three or four weeks, and thus years of time and toil usually spent in these acquisitions are saved.

Among the teachers, writers and advocates of Phonography, might be named a great number who stand high in literature and science. In a work published in 1845, entitled "A Plea for Phonography and Phonotypy, by Alex. John Ellis, B. A., Fellow of the Cambridge Phil. Soc., and formerly scholar in Trinity College, &c. &c.," he says: "In August, 1843, he became acquainted with Mr. Pitman, since which time both have worked together with assistance from many others—men who stand first in public estimation.—Printing was commenced in January, 1844. The phonotypic alphabet was perfected in April and published in June, 1845. During the whole of that time, unremitting attention was paid to the working of the alphabet and a great number of experiments tried, so that a crude and undigested system is not offered to the public." He further remarks: "It is sufficient to state that, independently of its advantages as a system of phonetic writing, it forms, when applied to the English language, the most effective short-hand ever, or that can be, invented, and we have the satisfaction of adding that it is generally appreciated, especially by scientific men, as an art philosophical, simple and necessarily practical, as upwards of 160,000 publications have been sold within a short time past, and the Manual itself, saying nothing of a multitude of other works, has now a ready sale of 2,000 copies a month, and the Phonographic Correspondent, written entirely in phonographic characters, numbers 2,000 monthly subscribers. Printers throughout the country are now well acquainted with the art, so that Phonographers and Reporters can have their writing set up from phonographic characters." Mr. Reed says: "During the last year, (1845) more than 500 lectures on this subject have been delivered in this country, and probable no less than 20,000 persons have made themselves acquainted with the art. Meetings are continually convened to discuss and proclaim its advantages. Festivals are held to commemorate its triumphs. Indeed, so active is the correspondence of phonographers that, during the last year, it is computed that about 200,000 letters have been posted in the new characters. About 100,000 copies of the system have been circulated, and there were no less than 8,000 phonographic and phonotypic publications sold monthly. The system was already introduced into the first schools and colleges in the kingdom."

Phonography was introduced into America in 1843, by S. P. Andrews, formerly of England, but since that time a resident of Boston. Since that period, it has been taught in all parts of Massachusetts, in different parts of New York, Georgia, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia; in each of which States are published papers devoted to Phonography and Phonotypy. Among the multitude of scientific men who strongly recommend the immediate introduction of the art into all our schools, and who have written in its defense, may be mentioned, Hon. Horace Mann, Secretary of the Board of Education in the State of Massachusetts, a gentleman who has done more for the cause of education than any other man in America, Rev. E. N. Kirk, John Neal, of Portland, Maine, S. L. Pomeroy, Bangor, Maine, and J. E. Worcester, author of the standard Dictionary, who intends to issue an abridgment printed in phonotypic type. Prof. Reynolds, in Pennsylvania College, has written some able articles in defense of the art. His articles have brought out communications from Prof. Haldeman, of Marietta College, who is now preparing school books in Phonotypy and a work on Phonography. There are now employed lecturers in all parts of Massachusetts and in the States above named. Mr. Andrews states that, wherever he lectures, he frequently has more than a thousand persons in attendance.—In May, 1845, a public phonographic examination of a large class of boys, gathered from the various schools of Boston, was held in Tremont Temple. The audience consisted, it is said, of nearly 2,000 persons, who expressed themselves highly delighted with the art and with the success of the pupils.

A Phonographic Institute is established in Boston, where hundreds are taught every month. There is also an American Phonographic Society established at Boston, with over 1,500 members in 1845, with a large increase since that time.—During the last year, the art was taught in the State Normal School at Albany, and during the last fall, it was brought before nearly all the Teachers' Institutes in the State.

Its numerous learned advocates claim and predict for it nothing less than a speedy and universal triumph, and, independently of its intrinsic merits, its past history would seem to afford strong presumption that their prediction will be realized.

Report accepted and adopted.

After which, resolutions were read and adopted by Mr. Parsons' pupils; which we must defer till our next number.

The Wife.

It need no guilt to break a husband's heart; the absence of content, the mutterings of spleen, the untidy dress, and cheerless home; the forbidding scowl and deserted hearth; these, and other nameless neglects, without a crime among them, have harrowed to the quick the heart's core of many a man, and planted there beyond the reach of cure, the germ of dark despair. O may a woman, before that sad sight arrives, dwell on the recollections of her youth, and cherishing the dear idea of that tuneful time, awake and keep alive the promise she then so kindly gave. And, though she may be the injured, not the injuring one—the forgotten, not the forgetful wife—a happy allusion to that hour of peace and love—a kindly welcome to a comfortable home—a smile of love to banish hostile words—a kiss of peace to pardon all the past—and the hardest heart that ever locked itself within the breast of selfish man will soften to her charms, and bid her live, as she had hoped, her years in matchless bliss—loved, loving and content—the source of comfort, and the spring of joy.

A Mothers faith and Love.

At length, on the third day, when the bloody procession was over, Leclere was made to stop at the usual place of execution. The executioner prepared the fire, heated the iron which was to sear the flesh of the minister of the Gospel, and approaching him, branded him as a heretic on his forehead. Just then a shriek was uttered—but it came not from the martyr. His mother, a witness of the dreadful sight, wrung with anguish, endured a violent struggle between the enthusiasm of faith and maternal feelings; but her faith overcome, and she exclaimed in a voice that made the adversaries tremble, "Glory be to Jesus Christ and his witnesses."—Thus did this French woman of the 16th century, have respect to the word of the Son of God—"Whosoever loveth his son more than me, is not worthy of me."—So daring a courage at such a moment might have seemed to demand instant punishment; but that Christian mother had struck powerless the hearts of priests and soldiers. Their fury was restrained by a mightier arm than theirs. The crowd falling back and making way for her, allowed the mother to regain, with faltering step, her humble dwelling. Monks, and even the town sergeants themselves, gazed on her without moving; "not one of her enemies," says Theodore Beza, "dared put forth his hand against her."

D'Aubigne.

A dying Child's Request.

A child, late of Brimfield, Massachusetts, on its death-bed, requested that the largest piece of money in its possession might be given to the American Board, for the education of children in China.—Accordingly, a few days since, a quarter of a dollar was brought to the Missionary House, and paid over to the Treasurer.—This was the largest piece of money which the child had; and it was, indeed, a precious gift.

Suppose all Christians should act upon the same principal, and consecrate the best of their possessions to the work of missions. The father offers his first born, and the mother her daughter. The merchant or mechanic contributes the largest share of his profits to the enterprise; and the farmer, in disposing of the products of his fields, remembers, first of all, the claims of the heathen. Would there be any difficulty in finding missionaries to send forth to the dark places of the earth, or in obtaining the means of supporting them?

Woman.—The government of families leads to the comfort of communities and the welfare of states. Of every domestic circle, woman is the centre. Home, that scene of purest and dearest joy, home is the empire of woman. There she plans, directs, performs, the acknowledged source of dignity and felicity. When female virtue is most pure, female sense is most approved, female deportment most correct, there is most social manners.—The early years of childhood, those most precious years of life and opening season, are confined to woman's superintendence; she therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtues, and all the wisdom that enrich the world.

POETRY.

DAILY WORK.

Who lags for dread of daily work,
And his appointed task would shrink,
  Commits a folly and a crime;
    A soulless slave—
    A paltry knave—
  A clog upon the wheels of Time.
With work to do, and store of health,
  The man's unworthy to be free
    Who will not give,
    That he may live,
  His daily toil for daily fee.

No! Let us work! We only ask
Reward proportioned to our task;
  We have no quarrel with the great;
    No feud with rank—
    With mill or bank—
  No envy with the lord's estate.
If we can earn sufficient store
  To satisfy our daily need,
    And can retain,
    For age and pain,
  A fraction, we are rich indeed.

No dread of toil have we or ours,
We know our worth, and weigh our powers;
  The more we work the more we win;
    Success to trade!
    Success to spade!
  And to the corn that's coming in!
And joy to him, who, o'er his task,
  Redeemers toil is nature's plan;
    Who, working, thinks—
    And never sinks
  His independence as a man:

Who only asks for humblest wealth,
Enough for competence and health:
  And leisure, when his work is done,
    To read his book,
    By chimney nook,
  Or stroll at setting of the sun.
Who toils, as every man should toil,
  For fair reward, erect and free;
    These are the men—
    The best of men—
  These are the men we mean to be!

HYMN.

If I've fulfilled my daily task aright,
  And every duty done:
Then joy to me when dark'st shades of night,
  Shall cloud the sinking sun!
    How cheering, then how calming
      The golden lingering ray;
    The eventide is charming
    That ends a well spent day.

But woe to him, whose eye that hour is dim
  With sin-remembering tears!
No anguish ever can restore to him,
  The joys of wasted years!
    Oh, precious is the power,
      And time that God hath given!
    May I each passing hour,
      Lay up some store for heaven!

Come, thou almighty King,
  Help us thy name to sing,
    Help us to praise!
  Father all glorious,
  O'er all victorious.
  Come, and reign over us,
    Ancient of days.

MARRIAGE NOTICES.

"I saw two clouds at morning,
Tinged with the rising sun;
And in the dawn they floated on,
And mingled into one."

MARRIED—On the 7th inst., by Elder W. McFadden, Mr. Henry Rodarmel, to Miss Harriet Fisher, both of Harrisburg, Pa.

"A happy couple may they be,
  While here on earth they stay;
And happier in eternity,
  Is what we humbly pray."

On the 12th inst., by the same, Mr. Henry Higgins, to Miss Emily Stine, both of Harrisburg, Pa.

On the 31st of December last, by Elder Thomas Strohm, Mr. John Brach, to Miss Nancy Kapp, both of Elizabethtown, Lancaster county, Pa.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DIED—On Tuesday the 5th inst., John Edward, only son of Andrew J. and Margaret Harbaugh; aged 2 years, 5 months and 15 days.

Edward was a fine promising boy—but he was suddenly cut off in a severe attack of convulsion. The paroxysm came on about 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, and never left him till he died, about 12 o'clock that night.

Edward, our only son,
  Is numbered with the dead;
His race on earth he quickly run,
  And then to heav'n he fled.

Two years, five months, one-half,
  His life-glass only run:
Then Edward died, and angles waft
  His soul, to see God's Son.

We parents acquiesce,
  Though none our grief can tell;
Tho' Edward we no more caress,
  Yet doubtless all is well.

Gone from all evil now,—
  From wrath and misery;
He's happy 'round God's throne we trow,
  To all eternity.

This thought relief doth give,
  Amidst our gloom and grief;
May grace enable us to live
  In hope and firm belief:

That when we die we'll find,
  A resting place on high;
With Edward, saints and angels kind,
  Far, far above the sky.

Fires in Harrisburg.

On Wednesday, the 20th ult., in the evening about 8 o'clock, a fire broke out in a large brick house in Front street, occupied by Mrs. Steuley, and owned by the Harrisburg Bank, which destroyed the upper stories of the front building. Mrs. Steuley also lost a large portion of her furniture.

The same night, about 4 o'clock in the morning, another fire occurred, which destroyed the back shop of Mr. G. Faber, situated on the corner of Front street and Blackberry alley.

Book Depository.

Our friends and brethren, within the West Pa. Eldership, are hereby notified that we have appointed brother G. U. Harn, V. D. M., of Pittsburg, Pa., our General Agent for the sale of our books in said Eldership. All persons who may want English or German Hymn-books, Reference and Pronouncing Testaments, German Testaments, Views of the Church, Treatise on Regeneration, Sermons on Christian Baptism, Wandering Soul, History of all Denominations, Traveller's Guide to the West, Stolen Child, Youths Guide, Baxter on Conversion, Almost Christion in German, Fuller on Backsliding, &c., will please to apply to brother Harn, our authorized agent as aforesaid.

Job Work.

As spring is coming on, and some of our friends and patrons will probably have some jobing to do, we hope they will not forget to give us a share of the same. We shall try to accommodate all who may choose to give us a call, on reasonable and satisfactory terms. Those at a distance can send us their jobs through the Post Office, and the cost thereof shall be deducted from their account.

Fruit Trees.

We shall have on hand a choice lot of fruit trees next spring: such as Peach, Apricots and Plumb trees. We have among them July, August, September and October Peaches, of the best varieties. Also, a choice variety of Plumb and Apricot trees. Persons wanting trees will please send in their orders in time. Those orders which remained unsupplied last fall, we shall try to fill in the spring, unless we are notified to the contrary.

Agents Wanted.

We wish to employ a few travelling agents for the sale of our books. ☞ See advertisement on our last page. Persons wishing employment in this business, and who can come well recommended for correct business habits, may find immediate employment on liberal and reasonable terms.

Railroad Bridge.

This excellent bridge was made crossable about the 1st of December last, and is now also so far completed, that the cars are again crossing on it. The first train of cars crossed in the afternoon on the 28th ult. The public are now again accommodated as formerly, before the destruction of the bridge. Our markets and business transactions, generally, have greatly improved since the erection of the bridge.

Revival Intelligence.

We are informed that the revival at the River school-house, York county, has resulted in the conversion of twenty odd souls, and that eighteen of whom have been added to the "Church of God" in that neighborhood, and to the church at Newberry.

The protracted meeting at Mechanicsburg has also resulted in the conversion of several souls.

There is a revival now in progress in Fairview, (alias Neidigstown) where some half dozen or more have professed a happy change from nature to grace.

The Elizabethtown meeting we have not heard from.

Brother Lininger writes that there have been several conversions at Woodbury, Ocwick, and other places. His letter will appear in our next, it being too late for this number.

Locomotive Explosion.

A most terrible explosion of a locomotive boiler took place on the Reading railroad, near Mill Creek, about eight miles from Philadelphia, by which seven men were killed.—This shocking and fatal catastrophe was caused, it is said, by not keeping up a proper supply of water, and the sudden introduction of water into the boiler when the flues were intensely heated. A more detailed account of this fearful accident may be found in the interesting communication, in this number, headed, "Things in the City of Brotherly Love."

Legislative Proceedings.

Judge Banks, of Reading, has been elected State Treasurer.

Mr. Glime, of Lebanon, has been elected State Librarian.

The Tariff resolutions have finally passed, after an interesting and protracted debate.

Among various acts already passed are the following, to-wit:

An act to provide for the payment of the interest on the public debt of this Commonwealth, falling due on the first days of February and August, 1847.

A bill relative to the State Printing, and supplementary to an act to create the office of State Printer.

An act to provide for expenses incurred by the Pennsylvania volunteers, who have been mastered into the service of the United States during the existing war with Mexico.

An act incorporating the Pennsylvania railroad company.

A bill incorporating the Conestoga steam-mills at Lancaster.

A bill for the suppression of gambling.

A bill relating to election districts, &c. &c.

National Education.

Our readers will find a very interesting article, under this caption, among the selections in this number. This great and benevolent enterprize originated among the people of the city of Cincinnati, and is conducted by a committee of gentlemen from different denominations in that city. The leading objects contemplated are—first, to devise and carry out a system of means to secure the proper education of American children who are destitute of schools; and, secondly, to secure a supply of properly qualified teachers. Both these objects are matters of prime importance.

We should be highly gratified to see Normol Schools established all over the country, and especially here in Pennsylvania. Will not the present Legislature, made up of so many wise heads and benevolent hearts, wake up to this object, and copy the example of the State of New York, and adopt measures for establishing one or two of these schools in this State? What can be more vitallyim portant to make our present Free School system effective and permanent, than a good supply of well qualified teachers? This, together with a proper selection of school-books, is all that we want to complete the system. The best, if not the only way to get the former, is to establish Normal Schools; and the best way to secure the latter, is for the Legislature to authorize the holding of an Educational Convention, for the purpose of adopting a uniform system of school-books. We hope that both will be done by the present Legislature; and by the doing of which, they would forever distinguish themselves in the history of Pennsylvania.

But to return, we conclude by calling the attention of our readers to the article in question.

News from Mexico.

Papers from Mexico bring intelligenec that the Mexican Congress have declared General Santa Anna to be duly elected President of the Mexican Republic.

The Mexican Congress have also declared that they will not enter upon any treaty for peace with the United States, until the American forces are all withdrawn. These things afford but little hope of a speedy peace.

Later dates from Mexico, via Havana, have been received by the New York Sun and Express. They contain a communication from Santa Anna to the Mexican Congress, demanding eight millions of dollars for the purpose of carrying on the war; and he tells Congress, unless the money is raised the country is lost.

Report of the Superintendent of Common Schools.

The school year ended on the first Monday of June last. The State Appropriation for the year was two hundred thousand dollars. This divided among the accepting districts, gave to each taxable forty-nine cents. The appropriation for the current school year, 1847, is two hundred thousand dollars. This divided among the accepting school districts, will give to each taxable fifty cents.

The report represents the number of school districts for the last year, one thousand two hundred and twenty-five; of these one thousand and sixty-seven accepted of the provissions of the common school law, leaving one hundred and fifty-eight non-accepting districts, being nineteen less than in the year preceding.

The report has appended to it a table showing the comparative view of the system since its establishment in 1835. It is as follows:

Number of districts, - - - - -	807
Accepting districts, - - - - -	536
Number of schools, - - - - -	762
Length of time the schools were open, three months and twelve days.
Teachers, - - - - - - -	808
Scholars, - - - - - -	32,514
Average cost of teaching per quarter	$1 12½
1846.
Number of districts, - - -	1,225
Accepting do. - - - - -	1,067
Schools, - - - - - - -	7,096
Time open, five months and one day.
Teachers, - - - - - - -	8,468
Scholars, - - - - - -	338 805
Average cost of teaching per quarter.	$1 23

These results are indeed gratifying, and cannot but gladden the heart of all true friends of education.

State Temperance Convention.

This body met in the upper room of the Court House on Wednesday the 27th ult.; and was temporally organized by calling Judge Edson, of Warren county, to the Chair, and appointing John F. Wolfinger, of Northumberland, Secretary.

Several preliminary matters of business were then disposed of, amongst which was the appointment of a committee to nominate officers for the permanent organization of the Convention. This committee retired, and after a brief absence returned and reported the following:

President,

Gen. ABBOT GREENE of Union county.

Vice Presidents,

Wm. H. Bigler, Clearfield.
Rev. Jno. A. Gere, Cumberland,
Dr. Jos. Speck, Perry,
Wm. W. Paxton, Adams,
Judge Edson, Warren,
L. Jewel, Philadelphia,
R. C. Hale, Mifflin,
Jas. Sprole, Columbia,
Jos. Weaver, Jr., Delaware,
Rev. Robert D. Morris, Bucks,

Secretaries,

John A. Wier, Dauphin,
John F. Wolfinger, Northumberland,
Rob't M. Palmer, Schuylkill,
Dr. Geo. Moore, Lancaster,
Henry Y. Slaymaker, York,
John Smith Franklin,

The Convention adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock in the Baptist church.

The Convention remained in session two days, and transacted some important business.

They passed a set of strong and excellent resolutions; a copy of which we sought to procure for publication in this paper. For this purpose we waited on the Secretary, who had charge of the same, several times; and, although he promised to give us a copy at first, it was manifest in the end that he did not mean to do what he said. We hope the Convention will be more fortunate in appointing more obliging Secretaries hereafter.

Mr. Gough entertained a very large audience on Wednesday evening, in the Methodist meeting-house, with a long and excellent lecture, in his usual felicitous style.

He will lecture again on next Wednesday evening before the "Female Benevolent Society," of Harrisburg.

How to Lighten Pulpit Labor.

The following directions are extracted from an article in the Richmond Christian Advocate, under the above caption. We commend them to our ministering brethren with great confidence, having tested their salutary influence in our past experience.

"1. Be fully satisfied in your own mind that you have been moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the Gospel.

2. Be sure to keep the love of God burning upon the altar of your own heart.

3. Make the best preparation, in the way of study, for your pulpit labors, that your time and other circumstances will allow.

4. Go from your knees to the pulpit, carrying a deeply devotional spirit with you.

5. When about to deliver your message, remember that Christ, the author of your commision, has said: "Lo, I am with you."

Preach with humble dependence upon Almighty God for suceess; and having done thus much, leave the event of your labors with Him who has commissioned you to preach and give yourself no trouble as to the result of your labors."

Our Sister Patrons.

By reference to our list of acknowledgments, it will be seen that our sisters are coming forward to patronize the Advocate. In that short list will be found some nine or ten sisters; and among them, as usual, and as in days of old, the Marys and Elizabeths, and others of no small renown. We opine this augurs well for the Advocate. If we can but enlist woman's influence in favor of our enterprise, then all is safe. We hope we shall soon have more of our sister's names to record on our list, and also that they will come forward and take a stand with our numerous contributors.

Corn Bread.

A Recipe for making Corn Bread.—Take as much corn meal as you wish to cook, scald it well by pouring boiling water over it, and stirring it thoroughly; then mix it to the consistency of batter, with milk; if it is pretty rich, it won't hurt it; but mind the mixing part that it is thoroughly done; the more the better. Put in one egg, a tea-spoonful of salæratus, and a table-spoonful of butter or lard. Mix the whole thoroughly together, till the ingredients are entirely incorporated through the whole: mind, I say, the mixing; the more the better. It is now to be baked as usual, about three quarters of an hour, and you will have the finest corn bread you ever ate.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

The Skeptic's Salutation.

Good morning, Mr. Christian: I have a few things to file against your professedly religionists, as an evidence to my mind that there is a strong probability of deeception.

The first is a loud laughing and trifling minister. He is, in my estimation, a sort of moral voleano, standing in the midst of his hearers, belching forth torrents of noises and pestilential lava, which obstructs many in their way to Heaven. The evils he thus effects will probably never be counterbalanced by his future usefulness. My advice on this subject is, when he is in the pulpit he should never be allowed to come out, he instructs so well; and when he is out, he should never be permitted to re-enter, because he laughs so loudly. Now, sir, such aets on the part of Gospel trumpeters have sunk religion into the dust, in my estimation. And this is not all; but,

Secondly.—I have been investigating some of the principles of your high-toned laity, and among them I find the following objections:

O, Covetousness. Many of your Christians, who would shudder at the commission of open profanity, are quite contented to have their hearts deaf to the calls of humanity, and hardened by the cursed influence of avarice.—Their prayers are always ready, but their purse is ever closed. They are strangers to the luxury of doing good. Those covetous, tight-fisted Christians, are like the grave, which never says, "it is enough." They are like Solomon's leech, always crying "give, give. What are they doing for the advancement of Sabbath-schools, the cause of foreign Missions, and for the Gospel at home? Why some of your ministers who are no doubt doing some good in the world, are complaining for the want of a comfortable support. Are these things pure Gospel fruit? No, verily not!

Thirdly.—Violence of temper is another evil chargeable on some professors of religion.—Does this correspond with the meekness of the Christian character? Does it agree with the conduct of Christ? Where is your gentleness among your shouting sisters and praying brethren? Violent tempers produce violent actions. A headstrong disposition and ungovernable spirit, have been the curse and bane of many a Christian society. A man endued with such a temper is the last person who ought to govern others, because he cannot govern himself. I ask, is a domestic tyrant, a turbulent oppressor, an ecclesiastical despot, a way mark to the land of promise?

Fourthly.—Detraction is also found among you Christians. Those who are not guilty of evil speaking and backbiting, often do more injury by base insinuations than they would by specific accusations and open charges.—Connected with this is a spirit of envy, which will pass by a thousand moral beauties to expose a single blot. "Cursed is he that smiteth his neighbor secretly." Detraction is generally accompanied with dissimnlation, and I know not what can be more awful than the habit, not only speaking lies, but of manufacturing of them. These evils, in my opinion, proceed from deep corruption. If these persons were what they pretend to be, the world and the church would not be infested with drones.

Fifthly.—Want of love is, to my mind, a gross inconsistency. Some professors will rend a Christian society, and destroy every particle of affection rather than abandon a preconceived opinion, or relinquish a selfish motive. These things ought not so to be.—You say you are brethren, and should you not act as brethren? Jesus Christ not only preached love in His sermons, and petitioned for it in His prayers, but He practised it in His life. I would say, to every Christian, go and do thou likewise.

In conclusion. A sanctimoneous appearance, and a canting conversation, will not counterbalance errors in practice. We skeptic's always decide upon the goodness of religion by the conduct, or rather by the misconduct of its professors. A holy life is the best and most convineing argument for Christianity and I know not what right those have to imagine that they are Christians who cannot give this evidence. "By their fruits;" said Christ, "ye shall know them." This is all for the present. Probably you will hear from me at a future period. Christian turned in silence from his informant, whispering as he leaft him.—Ah, too true!

THINGS IN THE CITY OF BROTHERLY LOVE

NO. II.

Philadelphia, January 25, 1847.

Dear "Editor:"—

Many things during the course of a week take place among us, which might prove interesting to your readers; but to make a choice where there is such a diversity of cases, is a task which I feel myself illy competent to perform; but according to promise, I will proceed to give a portion of the news, leaving you and yonr readers to judge of its worth.

Religion is rather at a low ebb at present, although there are some manifestations of good in several of the churches. Revivals are in progress at different places throughout the city, althongh not to a very great extent, and some few are giving up their worldly pleasures for a bright inheritance beyond the skies.

Among those who have been favored by God, is to be found the "little few" of the "Church of God." There have been some tokens for good. At their prayer-meeting, held on the 17th inst., there was quite a solemn and interesting time. Two persons presented themselves as subjects of prayer, and not in vain; for ere the night threw her sable curtains around them, their captive sonls were set at liberty; they were emancipated from darkness into light, and they are now happy on their way to a brighter and better world. One of them, I have understood, intends visiting brother Thomas, at Lancaster, this week, in order to have him administer the ordinanee of Christian baptism. On the same day, the New Episcopal Church of all Saints, located in Moyamensing, was opened for divine service. Bishop Potter preached in the afternoon. Altogether it was a remarkable day—the snn shone bright and clear—the streets were thronged with persons going to and from church; but, strangest of all, not a riot or disturbance of any kind took place to desecrate the sacredness of the day set apart for the worship of God.

The Lamp Black factory of Mr. Matlack, on Rush Hill, which has been burned near a dozen of times within the last eighteen months, was left minus of its roof during the snow-storm.

The extensive Calico Print works of Briggs and Quicksall, located in Frankford, were partly consumed by fire on Friday the 15th. The loss was very heavy, though covered by insurance.

The city Police have succeeded in arresting a gang of counterfeiters and forgers, four in number, two of which were females, who, for some time past, have infested our city. Dr. Lungren, one of the gang, had on him when taken fifteen hundred dollars in spurious ten dollar notes, on the Bank of Wilmington and Brandywine. Three of the prisoners have been committed by the Mayor in default of heavy bail.

It seems as though the good-law executors of our city are in luck just now, for they have succeeded in arresting two notorious characters, who glory in the classic soubrette, Jack Shiphard and Joe Blueskin, real prototypes of those celebrated rogues, who were once the terror of London, as these two heroes were to the good people of Moyamensing—a district celebrated for its paupery, debauchery, crime, and the lowest grade of degredation.

A convention of gentlemen from this city and the interior of the State, favorable to the Northern or Sunbury and Erie railroad, was held at the Museum on the 21st. Hon. John L. Gillis, of Elk county, presided. Several committees were appointed, and able addresses delivered.

A House of Industry for the employment of the poor, during the present winter, has been opened in the district of Southwark. The arrangement originated with the Board of Managers of the Christian Home Missionary Society. It is a good institution, and cannot be too warmly commended to the support of the community.

The Odd Fellows of Germantown are erecting a handsome hall in that place. It will cost, according to contract, four thousand eight hundred dollars.

The Catholic churches of the city and county are making the most vigorous efforts to raise money sufficient to erect a cathedral of elegant architecture and capacious dimensions, and I believe thus far their efforts have been crowned with considerable success.

We have had some excessive cold weather within the two past weeks, during which time the ice-men were very busy in putting up a supply of this luxury for the next summer.

On Saturday evening, the 23d, a very large meeting of the firemen and citizens of the city and county was held at the Philadelphia Museum, to adopt measures to prevent the passage of the bill, now before the Legislature, authorizing the city councils to prohibit the county and independent fire companies from attending fires in the meeting. Near two thousand persons, it is said, were in attendance.

On Thursday evening, the 14th, an appalling accident occurred upon the Reading railroad, which has been truly termed one of the most awful catastrophies that has ever been recorded. Seven human beings were suddenly removed from time into eternity, there to give account for the deeds done in the body.

The explosion happened about nine miles from Philadelphia, and the noise was heard for at least four miles. The boiler and machine were blown to atoms, and the seven persons attached to the train were torn to fragments, and scattered in thick profusion for a great distance around the scene. At one place the arm of one of the unfortunate beings, in connection with the head or leg of another, could be found. The head of one man was completely smashed up; another was found separated from the trunk; and an arm was picked up in a field with a tin-cup in the hand. The bodies were all horribly mutilated, torn, blistered, burnt and blackened.

The scene in the vicinity was of the most awful and heart-rending character. By the side of the remains of the engine was a huge rock covered with blood from the bodies that had been dashed against it. The surrounding rocks and trees were bespattered and stained with blood. In the branches of the trees were bits of clothing and shreds of flesh. On the ground, here was an arm, there a leg, and yonder some other portion of a body. Let the eye turn where it would, it met some terrifying or heart-sickening evidence of the awful catastrophe,—immense pieces of the boiler, shivered portions of the engine, fragments of human flesh, or spots of human gore!

The sufferers were principally Germans, and almost strangers in our land. Three of them had families.

The cause of the explosion has given rise to a great number of surmises and conjectures, and I see that the Legislature has very properly appointed a committee to investigate the cause of this dreadful affair.

Another accident occurred on the Germantown railroad, corner of Ninth and Poplar streets, on Saturday the 21st inst. Henry Dewalt, an aged citizen of the Northern Liberties, was run over, and almost instantly killed. Mr. D. had reached the advanced age of one hundred and six years.

The new bridge at Trenton, which has been so long talked of, is to be erected. It is to cross the Delaware above the falls.

The Schuylkill is now frozen over tight below and above the dam, and affords a fine opportunity for those who are fond of skating to engage in that recreation.

The packet ship Wyoming left this port on Saturday for Liverpool. The freight list of the Wyoming amounts to about twenty-one thousand dollars.

Truly, yours,

LEONARD.

A few Questions.

Lancaster city,
Jan. 20, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

In view of brother E. Logue's request for more help from the Missionary Board, and in consideration of other pressing demands from other quarters of the Lord's vineyard, I have thought to institute a few questions to my brethren in the ministry, touching the suggestions made, and the plan adopted by resolution by our late Eldership, for raising money for missionary operations. And,

1st. Did all the churches in the bounds of the Eldership hold meetings on Thanksgiving day, or did they not?

2d. If so, did or did not they generally bring their thank-offerings to the treasury of the Lord, as suggested in the notice of the special convocation of the House of Israel on that day? But,

3d. If not, have those delinquent churches raised missionary collections since in lieu of the above plan? And,

4th. Have all the churches, or not, formed missionary societies according to the plan authorized by resolution of the last Eldership?

I believe the foregoing interrogatories cover the whole ground, respecting the plans of our late Eldership, for raising money to sustain our destitute brethren laboring in destitute fields as missionaries.

Now I am satisfied that it is only by a strict adherence to, and a scrupulous carrying out of, the above schemes, that our missionary operations can be successfully carried on. And in view of the above fact, and your suggestion to assist brother Logue, it would give, I think, general satisfaction, as well as stir up a spirit of emulation among the churches in the cause of missions, if the preachers, in charge of churches, would answer the above questions in the columns of the Advocate. Besides, it would give the Board an opportunity of directing their course in the distribution of the funds that may come into their hands. I hope, therefore, we shall hear from all the churches very soon. Any person having money in their hands for missionary purposes, will please pay it over to brother Wm. Hinny, treasurer, Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, Pa.

Yours, fraternally,

E. H. THOMAS.

P. S.—In answer to the inquiries above, I would remark: The church at Lancaster observed the 26th of November as a day of Thanksgiving and religious devotion, and also raised a small collection; and on the first of January formed a Missionary Society under the following articles, as a Constitution, which you may publish if you see proper, though very imperfect in details, yet may answer as a sort of land-mark for other churches who may wish to form a similar society.—About fifty persons united on the first evening—all that were present. E. H. T.

The Earth Despoiled.

Springville, Lancaster co.,
December 28, 1846.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

A few thoughts occurred to my mind which I thought to communicate, by way of comparison, to the numerous readers of the Advocate, if you think them worthy of a place in its columns; and if so, I shall think myself amply remunerated for my labor.

The earth may be at present compared to a mother, who has been bereft of her most promising children. She is desolate and despoiled of those charms which variegated and embellished her surface. Nevertheless, she is not deprived of all her children: here and there we discover vegetables and evergreens, which seem to brave the rigor of the winter. We instance the wild hawthorn which shows its purplish berries. The yew-tree elevates itself like a pyramid, and its leaves have preserved their verdure. The feeble ivy creeps still about our walls and remains unshaken, while the tempest roars around it. The laurel extends its green branches, and has lost no part of that dress that adorned it in summer. The box-tree, though humble in its appearance, shows, here and there among the snow, its verdant branches.

These trees and some others preserve their verdure in the coldest climate, and in the severest seasons. They are emblamatic of the pleasing advantages which they possess, whose minds are well cultivated, and whose dispositions are sweet and pliant. The lustre of dress, which dazzles only the eye of the vulgar, is a vain and transitory brightness. The shades of the most brilliant colors fade; all external graces have but a short duration, and will sink beneath the shade when compared with the internals of religion. Hence, we say, virtue has charms which survives them all. As, says the Psalmist, "They who fear the Lord are like trees planted by the side of a river; they grow and extend their branches afar; they bring forth fruit in their season, and their leaves wither not; they comfort those who seek the shade, and the traveller blesses them."

How amiable are the truly pious! They borrow not their beauty from the external and arbitrary goods of fortune: their true ornaments are within. The tempest of adversity may at times shake them and cast them down, but they cannot overcome them; and shortly their heads will be raised above all stormy regions. If unexpected misfortune reduces them to poverty, they are still rich, because they possess the approbation of God, have a good conscience, and a hope full of blessed immortality. The Lord holds them by His right hand, and does not suffer them to stumble.

Nature is now deprived of that beauty, and those charms with which it was adorned in the summer. The fields and gardens, where we walked with so much pleasure, are now useless and deserted, and nothing remains that can invite us to frequent them. Is not this a striking emblem of what our life shall be when we shall have attained to the winter of our days! Then all the charms, of which we were so vain in the spring and summer of our life, shall disappear. Vexation, troubles, and other infirmities, incident to old age, will not permit us the relish, the amusements of youth. And, dear reader, if we act a rational part, our desires shall expand after a better life. In the winter we are surprised by the night which comes upon us unexpected; perhaps, having in view to finish a certain work, the evening comes and suddenly interrupts our labor. Here, kind reader, is an emblem of the night of death; it will probably come when we least expect it. This meditation leads me to consider the venerable aged. In the winter of their (pious) lives, they resemble those plants which, during this season of the year, still preserve their verdure. How many storms of life have they borne with constancy! How many alluring objects have they seen wither! A pleasing sprightliness, the happy remains of the spring of their lives, is still discoverable in them. However wrinkled their foreheads may appear, whatever ravages the hand of time may have made upon their bodies, it is still adorned with those virtues which recompense them for the loss of external beauty. Dear reader, may we not say, "O that the winter of our lives may have so many charms!" In this season of the year, when the evenings are long, we may have leisure, in a quiet retreat, to cultivate our understanding, study our own hearts, correct our errors, and acquire power from God to walk uprightly. We cannot now cultivate our fields and our gardens; but we may at least cultivate our souls, and endeavor to render ourselves happy and useful to our neighbors, by administering to their wants, both in a temporal and spiritual point of view. If you are poor, with myself, and enjoy but a small portion of the good things of this world, then give of that what you can. But this being the case, do not excuse yourself with the vain fancy that you may rest at ease, because your gifts and means are limited. There is a work for us all to do. If your gifts are so limited, your talents so small, that you cannot exercise in public, use your efforts in private, and above all, let your conduct speak volumns for the Christian character, and the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

Correspondence---No. 5,

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

14.—STORRITE: Permit me to offer a few words on the destruction of the wicked. They are composed of combustible matter. I cannot find in the Bible that the wicked are immortal; but the contrary.

"As smoke is driven away, so drive them away; as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God." Psalm 6: 8, 2. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezekiel 18: 4. "For the wages of sin is death." Romans 6: 23. "Yet he shall perish forever like his own dung." Job 20: 7. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psalm 37: 20. "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire!" Isaiah 33: 14.

How can anything remain of the wicked if they are compared to straw, chaff, wood, fat of lambs, wax, their own dung? And the Prophet Obadia declares, "They shall be as though they had not been."

BELIEVER IN BIBLE TRUTH.—Permit me to offer a few remarks on the above. First, I shall quote certain portions of scripture to prove that man is a two-fold or compound being, which you denied when you was here.

"Delight in the law of God after the inward man." Rom. 7: 22. "But though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Cor. 4: 16. "But let it be the hidden man of the heart." 1 Pet. 3: 4.

Now this is sufficient evidence that man is a two-fold being; and this two-fold being is represented by the word of God as body and spirit. For, says the Apostle, "Ye are bought with a price; therefore, glorify God in your body and spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. 6: 20.

But some of you deny that man is possessed of a spirit; for this reason I will quote a few passages of scripture, which will fully prove the assertion.

"And formeth the spirit of man within him." Zech. 12: 1. "My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." Luke 1: 47. "Paul's spirit was stirred in him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." Acts 17: 16. "I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother." 2 Cor. 2: 13. "His spirit was refreshed by you all." 2 Cor. 7: 13.

You intimate that it cannot be proven from the Bible that the wicked are immortal. If this be so, then how will you reconcile the saying of Christ: "Ye must be born again." Will this mortal, or material body, be changed in the new birth? I answer, No! For it is evident, and can be proven, by the immutable word of God, and the laws of nature, that the body will never be changed in this life, but will be subject to diseases as long as it remains in its present state. For there is no difference between the bodies of the righteous and the wicked. For instance, look into the Bible, and mark daily occurrences, and you find that the righteous were and are afflicted with sickness and disease, as well as the wicked. When a sickness pervades the land, the righteous and wicked suffer alike. And if this mortal body will never be changed in this life, but is liable to be infected with disease, it is a matter of fact, and beyond all contradiction, that it is the inward man, the soul, that must be changed.

Hence we read: "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Romans 12: 2. "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind." Eph. 4: 23. "Put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him." Col. 3: 10.

And hence this change, or new birth, so astonished Nicodemus, although he was a ruler of the Jews, that he exclaimed: "How can these things be?" So even it is at present, when conversing with unregenerate persons on the subject; they cannot understand the nature of it; and, in fact, no person can understand it unless he experiences it. I cannot conceive how a person can be born again, who does not believe in the immortality of the soul; and how can a person, who denies the immortality of the soul, believe in the new birth? I stated before that the body will not be changed in the new birth. And if the soul is not immortal, how will it be made immortal in the new birth? Will any materialist answer the question?

Again, every person who believes in the doctrine of the Bible believes that man, in a state of nature, is not what God wants him and requires him to be; and therefore he has employed efficient means to bring about the intended change. There are two grand means that God makes use of to bring about the intended change, viz: His spirit and word. Christ said that the spirit shall convince men of sin, righteousness and judgment. If the wicked are not possessed of an immortal principle, what shall the spirit of God operate upon? For it cannot be supposed to operate upon matter only. Nor is the operation of the spirit of God ever felt by flesh and blood; and if it is not flesh and blood that feels it, then there must be some principle in man that feels it, and this principle is the immortal soul implanted in man by his Creator.

ALETHES.

Revival Intelligence from Ohio.

January 19, 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take the liberty of giving you and the readers of the ADVOCATE a succinct account of the state of religion in the State of Ohio. A number of protracted meetings already have been held in different places, and I am happy to say not without effect. A number of places have had some refreshings from the presence of the Lord, and the brethren in the ministry are still going around to different parts preaching a crucified and risen Jesus to the people; and I hope and trust we shall have a great deal more intelligence to communicate, which will be calculated to gladden the hearts of the sons and daughters of Zion.

I left home the 19th of December, and landed in Wayne county about the 27th. After which I hunted up some of the brethren in the ministry. Finally, I received intelligence of brother HOLMES holding a protracted meeting at Chester. I then repaired thither and found him much worn down in consequence of poor health. I took his place and preached for him several evenings. One or two knelt down to be prayed for during this time. Afterwards I left for Smithville to commence a large meeting there, but could not get across the stream called Killbuck. I then turned around and went to Union to assist in holding a large meeting there. Brothers S. N. MILLER and HOLMES were in attendance. When I came thither, brother D. NEIDIG also just returned from Blooming Grove, bringing us the joyful intelligence of twelve that had embraced religion and six baptized; and thinks if the meeting had been protracted, much more good might have been done. We then kept up our meeting at Union till the Wednesday evening following. Those that were converted and reclaimed together were four or five in number. I then started again for Smithville, inasmuch as I heard the waters had fell. When I came thither the protracted meeting was broke up. I was informed that six had embraced religion, and two were baptized during the meeting.—It is supposed by some that much more good might have been done if the meeting could have been protracted. There was no minister present from a distance but brother MURRAY. He is a little man, and does not present a very majestic appearance when standing up before a congregation; but yet he still goes forth, David-like, in the name of the God of the armies of Israel, and every now and then where he is found handling the Gospel sling, a stout-hearted Goliah comes tumbling to the foot of the Cross.

The brethren in the vicinity of Smithville complain on account of the indifference and distance exhibited on the part of the brethren in other churches not coming to assist them; and I do think they have just cause for complaining. I hope the faulty may repent and do better.

I left Smithville and commenced a special meeting in the brick meeting-house, in the bounds of the church near Reedsburg. During my stay one old lady launched into liberty, and now is going on her way rejoicing. There was a good feeling among the people when I left, and the brethren considerably hurt being the meeting could not be protracted longer.—But as I had other large meetings on hands I left. We hope to have some more encouraging intelligence to communicate soon.

Yours, truly,

THOMAS HICKERNELL.

Letter from Elder J. Hickernell.

BETHANY, WESTMORELAND CO., PA., January 12, 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Since my last to you I have been in Athens county, Ohio. Were I to give you a minute detail of the journey, it would consume too much paper. Let it then suffice to say, that I left the Forks of Big Fish Creek, Marshall county, Virginia, for the Ohio river, in order to get on board of a steamboat. After inquiring for the best place to hail a boat, I was advised to cross the river and walk down to a small village on the bank of the river called Sunfish. I did so, and before I got to the town, a boat passed me and stoped in order to take in some freight. I got on board of her and sailed for Coleport. The weather was getting very cold. That night about two o'clock we landed safely at our place of destination. I then inquired for lodging, but there was none to be had about the wharf boat. I next started for a public house—found one not far from the river, but the accommodations were all taken up excepting the floor. Being very much fatigued, and having a large mantle with me, I laid myself down on the floor, having a good fire, and rested tolerably well.—The next morning I took some refreshment, and started for the "Church of God" in Alexander township; which was about seventeen miles distant, but I soon found I could not do it. The roads were very bad, and it was snowing at the same time with a prodigious wind. I hailed a man with a two-horse wagon who took me in. I suffered much with the cold that day. The gentleman with whom I was travelling seemed to be a religious man. He took me within three miles of the place for which I started in the morning. I paid him twenty-five cents and then took it a foot three miles and lodged with brother G. CHASE, where I was hospitably entertained. The next morning brother G. C. took two horses and conveyed me six miles; I then took it a foot two miles, when I arrived in Canon township, Athens county, where a small church was formed the time of the camp-meeting.—That night I lodged with brother RICHMOND, a brother to Elder S. RICHMOND. Here I remained for several days and preached. The people in this neighborhood are very wild.—There were no convertions, but I thought the meeting would have a tendency to civilize some of the young people of that neighborhood, so much so, that they would cease to hoop and howl going to and from religious meetings. The church, however, is doing tolerably well. Much good could be done in that county if proper means were used. In this time brother RICHMOND, after being on a visit to Pennsylvania, met me in his own neighborhood. We then started for a protracted meeting in Alexander township. When the meeting commenced times were dull; but as the meeting progressed, the members of the church became more spiritual, and several backsliders were reclaimed. I think upon the whole the church was much profited by the meeting. May the Lord bless the churches in Athens county! We hope Elder RICHMOND will let us hear from them through the ADVOCATE. If it had not been so late in the season I should have stayed longer and assisted brother RICHMOND to hold another meeting in a place where I learned the prospects were better for conversions than either of those other places. But in consequence of my appointments being out on my own field of labor, I was obliged to leave. I again started for the river, was taken down by a certain brother, found the river very high, so much so, that the line boat that I wished to get into was some hours after her time. After getting into her she went slow while on the deep the boat having the mighty current and large drift to contend with. I thought of St. Paul. Her wheels were considerably broken. The next day they stopped to mend them. Time was taken up, and we were considerably after the regular time. I soon found that I should miss several of my appointments, being providentially hindred. I thought to take it as patient as I could. I was landed on the Virginia side after night; of course here was another trial; but I started with courage, ex pecting to stop at the first house I met with, which I accordingly did. The next day I had twenty-five miles to go for an appointment, but could not reach it in consequence of having Fish Creek to cross so often. I here will state that I met with a church of people who practiced the Gospel the same as the "Church of God." If I had time I should go and pay them a visit. I travelled on that day, and got to the place where I had an appointment the evening before. I was very tired; as soon, however, as the people of that neighborhood seen me, they gave out meeting and came on to the house in which I lodged. I tried to preach as well as I could. The next morning I had thirteen miles to go for forenoon preaching. I started early, and met the church after the appointed time. I now got to where my horse was, but I was considerably reduced. The same fatigue I never went through. I must now bring my epistle to a close.

Yours, fraternally,

J. HICKERNELL.

Letter from Elder John Gillespie.

NEW STANTON, January 13, 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take my pen in hand once more to drop a few lines for the ADVOCATE; if you think them worthy a place in the columns of the same, you may give them an insertion.

I am still in Stanton, where all seem to prosper but the principles and practice of the "Church of God." However, since I last wrote things seem to be more encouraging. Some have fallen in love with her Gospel order; and I believe when opportunity will offer, they will unite in fellowship with her.

I have just returned home from the field of labor, after being absent near two weeks, assisting our much beloved brother, J. HICKERNELL, in holding a protracted meeting with the church near Perriopolis. We found the little flock their laboring under somewhat discouraging circumstances, owing perhaps to the loss of some of their brethren by the hand of death, whilst others grew weary in well doing, and turned back to the world again. But notwithstanding all these difficulties, there still remain a few faithful—names who are trying to make sure work for the kingdom. May the good Lord bless them, and pour the oil of gladness in their souls daily!

Well, we commenced to hold forth on Saturday evening, the 2d of the new year, and on the following Sabbath we were joined by brother WM. VANCE, who is a whole-hearted, good natured, bold herald of the Cross, who preached for us twice, then left for home. So brother HICKERNELL and myself continued to preach and labor on during the week; and, though we cannot say that we saw any special conversions, we believe their were some powerfully convicted, and we hope, in God, they may soon be converted.

There were four baptized, two received into the fellowship of the church, and in all we had quite a refreshing time from the presence of the Lord. The brethren and sisters, I think, feel encouraged to continue on in the good old way. I often think it cannot be possible that any of the brethren or sisters can get discouraged in the service of God, when we reflect that, amidst all the sects and organizations of men, we have the sure foundation whereon we build, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone of the whole superstructure. Who can say aught against it? I have never known a man to prove an item to the contrary. Neither can they. Then, ye ministers and members of the "Church of God," go on, for ye have almighty power, infinite wisdom, and boundless love on your side. Never yield an inch of your ground to the devil nor his allies. Standing as ye do, on holy ground, invite all around your pious march to join, knowing that your reward is in Heaven, from whence we look for the coming of our Lord in the majesty of His power, to take vengeance upon all that oppose you, and obey not the Gospel of Christ.

I shall now close for this time. When we shall have good times, we will let you hear from us. May the good Lord keep us all faithful, and at last bring us to rejoice together around His throne in glory.

Yours, in love,

JOHN GILLESPIE.

Elder M. F. Snavely's Appeal.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

If you can find room in the ADVOCATE, please publish these lines for the satisfaction of the brethren on my field of labor, inasmuch as it has pleased God to afflict me so much that I cannot attend to my labors this winter.

I have been laying idle, as respects preaching, for some five or six weeks, and at this time my complaint, so far as I am able to judge, is very little or no better. My throat is still soar, and I have considerable pain under my shoulder-blade on the left side; and my nervous system seems too much prostrated to recover fast.

Some of my medicine I have to inhale night and morning, which I have done for four weeks, and must still continue on. Were it not for that inconvenience, together with the danger of taking cold after such steaming, I should like to visit my dear brethren over the circuit. I long to see them, and I have troubled myself much that my field of labor is lying unattended to.

I thought some of my brethren would sometimes supply some of the appointments. In this I was disappointed, save Linglestown and FORNEY'S, which are attended alternately by brothers LENKERT and FORNEY; all others want supplies. I have only to say, I can't help it. It is the Lord that is afflicting me. I would rather preach every night, and go through all weathers, (as formerly) than to have my present lot. But Job said, "Shall we receive good from the Lord, and shall we not receive evil." Surely the will of the Lord must be done. If, however, it please the Lord that I can, I want to go around and see my brethren before I move, though I should not be able to preach for them.

We expect to move, if possible, on the first Monday in March, for several reasons best known to ourselves. After that, all communications to me must be addressed to Newburg, Cumberland county, Pa.

Perhaps some of my brethren at a distance, on my circuit, may think they are under no more obligations to poor me, now since I am unable to preach to them. But I would say, dear brethren, we must still have wherewith to subsist on. The fault is not mine that I am thus imprisoned, as it were. My good brethren at Highspire came, or sent on their new year's blessing, punctually, as soon as the quarter was up, for which we feel thankful. No more of this—a hint is enough. Pray for me. Perhaps if the warm weather comes on it may get better with me. Adieu to all!

Letter from Elder Jacob Brewer.

ANNVILLE, January 6, 1847.

BROTHER J. WINEBRENNER:—

I wish to state to the friends of Zion, through the ADVOCATE, how our protracted meeting turned out, commencing on Christmas day, held at the Schuylkill river meeting-house. We had a joyful time. There were three mourners out the first night, seven the second, and two on Sunday evening. Six embraced religion.

We also had a protracted meeting at Middleport. In this place we held the ordinances of God's house. On Sunday evening we had mourners, who embraced religion. There was a Methodist lady in meeting, who was dead to the life and power of religion; but there was such a power came down, that she began to shout and praise God, so that she lost one of her over-shoes; but her soul became shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace.

Yours, in love,

JACOB BREWER.

ATHENS CO., O., Jan. 1, 1847.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I employ a few leisure moments in writing for the ADVOCATE. Enclosed you will find the names of five new subscribers for six months, and one for a year. I hope soon to send you some more money and more subscribers.

As it regards the work of God in this place, I have but little to say; because brothers HICKERNELL and COOK have written respecting it. But still I would add a few words on this subject. There is great room and a lond call for laborers here. Are there not some young brethren in Pennsylvania who might be useful, and whose hands are unemployed, that could come this way? Will they not try and penetrate these western wilds? Come, brethren, work for the Lord!

I think the cause here is on the advance. The churches still have their face set to go to the New Jerusalem; and we are still crying, "Sinners, come along." I have held two protracted meetings since brother J. HICKERNELL was here, and one is in progress yet. At the first one I was alone, but still I tried to preach the Gospel, and I think the labors were not lost. At the present one I am assisted by brother ELI PERKINS, of the "United Brethren. It has been in progress about a week. Some good has been done, and we are looking for better times. No more at present.

Yours, in Christ,

SETH S. RICHMOND.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Great Fire at Boston.—Nearly a Hundred Houses Destroyed—Great Loss of Property.—The Boston Journals of Friday and Saturday furnish the particulars of a very serious conflagration which took place in that city on Thursday night, by which nearly one hundred buildings were destroyed. It commenced in Haverhill street; the papers generally say in the tavern called the Neptune House. The flames attacked the adjoining wooden buildings, and spread upon each side with great rapidity. A strong north-west wind prevailed at the time, which, added to a scarcity of water, (it being low tide) baffled all the exertions of the firemen to extinguish the flames. The fire extended back and upon each side, until nearly all the buildings between Haverhill and Medford streets on the one hand, and between Causeway and Traverse streets on the other, were a mass of ruins. It was not extinguished until about 3 o'clock this morning. Nearly all the buildings destroyed were of wood, mostly work-shops and stables, though some tenements were burned, and about seventy families were rendered houseless. On most of the buildings and stock, there was but little insurance.

Anti-License in New York.—Only one county in the State, the small county of Richmond, voted for continuing licenses to sell liquid poison, and this by only a majority of 45. All the rest went "No License" by majorities of from 59 to upwards of 4000. The majority in the State for "No License" is with in a small fraction of 68000!

Canal Commissioners' Report.—The following is the gross statement of the receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of Deeember, 1845, andending 30th Noverber, 1846.

The receipts for motive power charges, and for use of State, trucks on the various railways, including fines and for old materials sold, were $394,397 65, and for the tolls, rents, fines, &c., $904,097 11.

The expenditures for maintaining motive power on the Columbia Railway, including management and repair of trucks, $157,846 23. For maintaining same on the Allegheny Portage Railway, $103,-260 62. For repairs on the various roads and divissions, $383,743 78. For compensation of collectors, weigh masters, book-keepers, inspectors, &c., $65,080-28, which sums up—

Total Receipts	$1,295,494 76
" Expenditures	709,930 91
Receipts over expenditures	$585,563 85

Deduct from this contingent expenses of Canal Commissioners office—such as pay of Canal Commissioners, Clerk, &c., $5,041 72, which will leave $580,522 13 as the net revenue produced by the Canals and Railroads of the Commonwealth during the period specified.

More Volunteers.—The Pittsburg Dispatch says:—The evening before the departure of the Cameron Guards for the seat of war, two of them, (each having a fair one on his arm,) accompanied by a squad of jovial looking lads of the Regiment, visited Esq. Steel's office, on Forth street, and requested that he should proceed to make each twain "one" in law; which was accordingly done, to the evident satisfaction of the whole crowd, including a few of our citizens, who happened to be in at the time. Their names are as follows: Mr. George Simons, who married Miss Malinda Johnson, and Mr. Thomas Clendennin, who took to wife Miss Sarah Irvine. The men were from Harrisburg —the young women (handsome ones, too,) from our own city—and all parties left for the seat of war, the bridegrooms having received permission, before the knot was tied, to take their wives with them. We have heard that similar matches occurred before other Aldermen.

New Jersey.—The Message of Gov. Stratton, of New Jersey, is brief and to the purpose. The condition of the Treasury is thus alluded to:—

I have again the pleasure of congratulating you on the prosperous condition of the State, as exhibited in the following statement:

Balance in the treasury, Jan. 10, 1846,	$5,278-98
Received during the year from all sources, including a special loan of $10,000,	158,669 30
	$163,948 28
Disbursement during the same period including $10,000 of the special loan above, and $5,000 balance of the loan of the previous year.	155,174 47
Leaving a balance in the treasury on January 4, 1847, of	$8,773 81

Mexico.—Santa Anna was chosen President by two majority. He will remain at the head of the army, and the executive department will devolve upon Farias, the Vice President.

Gen. Salas, the retiring executive, states the force at San Louis to be 22,000, and the expenses are estimated at $868,789 per month.

The whole expenses of the war for six months are estimated at $3,678,000

The first act of Congress was to lay on the table the American overture for peace. A resolution was then passed to progress with the war. An act was then passed to raise $500,000 a month for the support of the army—how it is to be raised does not yet appear.

Expenses of Government.—The appropriation bills already reported amount to the following sums—

Army	$6,813,373
Volunteers	17,932,331
Navy	8,920,204
Deficiences for volunteers	4,793,000
Civil and diplomatic, (est.)	6,044,399
Loan and Treasury Notes	23,000,000

Fortifications	1,672,165
Pensions	2,102,690
Interest	1,408,344
	$73,865,830!!

A pretty round sum to be provided for by Congress in the present state of the finances.—N. Y. Express.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

GOVERNOR WM. SLADE'S AGENCY.

The friends of education have been greatly gratified to learn that the Hon. Wm. Slade, late Governor of Vermont, has relinquished political life, to devote himself to the interests of popular education in our country. The following outline of the plan to be pursued will therefore be interesting:

The enterprise is conducted by a Committee of gentlemen from five different denominations, located at Cincinnati, and styled the Central Committee for Promoting National Education. Gov. Slade is Secretary and General Agent of this Committee.

The object of the organization is to devise and carry out measures for securing the proper education of more than two million of American children who are destitute of schools. The two leading measures aimed at are, first putting in motion agencies that shall raise up schools and create a demand for teachers; and secondly, securing a supply of properly qualified teachers to meet this demand.

Attention will first be directed to the West, because there population is increasing fastest, and there also, is to be the future seat of empire. A great and increasing interest is now felt at the East, in behalf of the educational wants of the West, and lest this interest might be perverted to individual, or sectarian projects, the present organization is composed of gentlemen from different denominations, and the funds collected will in no case be applied till wise and well informed men at the West, of different denominations, and resident on the fields of action, have been consulted.

There are portions of the West where schools and teachers can scarcely be excelled and where no aid is needed. But there are other portions where, though there are many ready to contribute money and effort for the cause of education, yet they are a small minority, and in communities where wealth is in the form of lands and produce, where but little money circulates, where State debts occasion heavy taxes, and where contributions are in constant demand for providing places of worship, school-houses, colleges, roads, bridges, and other material of society, which in older States is already secured. It is in these portions of our country that a liberality is manifested in contributing for such objects, which, considering the relative capital, is rarely equalled at the East. It is hoped and expected that the more favored portions of the West will join their contributions with those raised at the East, in aid of those more destitute.

The first application of the funds must be in employing agencies to raise up schools. In many and very large portions of our country the people would be very willing to pay for schools, and yet, from the engrossing pursuits of other objects, they take no measures to secure them. In other large portions no value is felt for education, and ignorant parents are raising ignorant children without any wish for schools. In such districts experience has shown, that the employment of agents to awaken an interest by lectures and other methods, and to organize schools and send for suitable teachers is in the highest degree successful, and this method will be pursued as far as means will allow.

In regard to the business of preparing and locating teachers, it will be found, that there are at the West as well as at the East, well qualified teachers who need aid in findind suitable situations. And it will be found also, that much less expense is involved in training teachers on the soil than in seeking them from abroad; while well qualified teachers, accustomed to the climate, society and habits around them, would, in many respects, be superior to such as might be obtained elsewhere.

For these reasons, a prominent part of this enterprize will be to secure, as far as possible, means and agencies for aiding all at the West who have the requisite qualifications and desire to be employed as teachers. But when it is considered that there are so many promising avenues to wealth open for men at the West—that women are the best teachers for young children—that there is a general deficiency of female population at the West, and a redundency at the East—it is manifest that if our country is to be supplied with teachers, a great portion of them must be women, and a very large proportion of these must be found at the East.

What a demand would be made for teachers, were the wants of our country to be fully supplied, may be conjectured from these facts. Ohio is the best supplied with schools of any Western State, and yet, last year her Secretary of State ascertained that one hundred and thirty thousand children in that State were without schools. Allowing the ordinary proportion of pupils to teachers, five thousand teachers are now needed in Ohio alone, to supply that State as Massachusetts is supplied; while to furnish the destitutions of our whole country, as presented by the census, would, at the same rate demand fifty thousand additional teachers.

In the past history of education, it has usually been the case, that at the South and West, whenever attempts have been made to raise up schools, one of the first measures has been to send to the East for teachers, while at the East, there always is a super-abundance of teachers. But in examining into the character and history of female teachers sent abroad, a great diversity will be found. Some are energetic, well educated, enterprising women, led by benevolent motives and qualified to succeed in anything they undertake.—But others thus migrating, go forth some from a restless love of change, some from a romantic desire of excitement and adventure, some merely for a livelihood, and some from a wish to raise their position in society. Among these, some will be found lacking in a proper education, others in an ability to communicate knowledge or to govern a school, others in tact and common sense, others in good temper, and others in persevering energy. In such cases disappointment and disgust are the reward of the friends of education, who have striven to raise up schools. Many failures also have occurred from the misplacing of very good teachers; for a person would succeed admirably in one position who would utterly fail in another.—Many difficulties also have resulted from placing teachers in new positions uninformed of the peculiarities, or prejudices of society around them, and uninstructed in the proper mode of meeting them.—No person or collection of persons can locate teachers properly, who have not the means of gaining a distinct knowledge of both the teachers to be employed and the places where they are to be stationed, and great evils and disappointments have resulted from attempts of this kind without such knowledge.

In reference to the preparation of teachers for the peculiar duties of their office, few are aware of the many failures that have resulted from its neglect. In illustration, (a single case among many) one of the largest eastern States, as stated by its late Secretary of State, "for want of this indispensable pre-requisite good teachers, has wasted five millions of dollars and ten years of time, to say nothing of labor expended and obloquy encountered, and must now recommence from the foundation."

With reference to these past evils, it will be a prime featrue in this enterprize, to secure well qualified teachers, and also to secure their appropriate location. With reference to this and also for the purpose of raising funds, Ladies Associations have been formed in many of the eastern cities, who pay their funds to the Central Committee at Cincinnati, and who each have a Committee to aid in selecting teachers.—These Committees will take suitable measures to find such female teachers as have the appropriate character and qualifications, and recommend them for employment.—As soon as the agencies employed at the West raise up schools, and thus create the usuel demand on the East for teachers, a suitable number will be selected, and in the first instance, assembled at Albany, where Miss C. E. Beecher and two or three other ladies who have been practical teachers, will spend a month or more in preparing the teachers selected for their future duties. Except in peculiar cases, these teachers will be those who already have had experience in this vocation.—During this time, they will be admitted into the State Normal School, an institution for educating teachers, for which the State of N. York pays ten thousand dollars annually, and which is admirably conducted. Here they will learn improved methods of education as carried forward both in the Teachers Department and in the Model Schools connected with it. At the same time, Miss Beecher and the ladies associated with her, will aid in their preparation in other respects. Miss Beecher, during the month, will give lectures on the best modes of organizing schools in different circumstances, on modes of governing schools by moral and religious motives, and yet, so as to avoid sectarianism, on methods of introducing certain branches of Domestic Economy into schools, on the difficulties peculiar to different kinds of schools and modes of meeting them, and on the peculiar states of society in different portions of the West, the difficulties to be met, and the modes of accommodating to them. Miss Beecher has been a practical teacher for fifteen years, and has traveled and resided in five of the largest Western States, and given much attention to preparation for such instructions.

After this course of training, Miss Beecher and the ladies associated with her, will be acquainted with the character, tastes, habits, acquirements and wishes of these teachers, and will also consult with those employed at the West to raise up schools. Thus the business of preparing the teachers, and of locating them properly, can be performed with ease and success. In selecting teachers some will be taken for High Schools, some for Select Schools in large towns, some for Common Public Schools, and some to go as missionary teachers to the most neglected and destitute places.

It is expected, that in most cases, tuition fees will support the teachers, and that where good situations are provided, the previous expenses will be refunded to the Central Committee, to be again used for the same purpose.

After one experiment of this kind has been successfully accomplished, it can be repeated again and again, both at the East and at the West. And it will be the prominent aim of this enterprise to secure a constant supply of highly qualified female teachers for every department of education, and to make such arrangements that they shall always be appropriately located.

An arrangement will be made shortly to meet all applications of persons and places wishing good teachers, so soon as this plan goes into operation, of which notice will be given in the newspapers generally.

A Friend of Education.

Fervent Prayer

WILL ALWAYS BE SUCCESSFUL IF IT BE OFFERED,

1. In secret.—In the private place there are few objects and circumstances to distract the thoughts. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret."

2. Frequently.—Secret prayer is the life of the soul; without it our spirituality becomes weak, languishes, and dies. The living Christian often visits his closet.—"Pray without ceasing."

3. Regularly.—We should have at least three regular seasons set apart each day for this sacred exercise. Without regularity, it will be often omitted. Daniel entered into his chamber, for this purpose, three times a day. "Evening, and morning, and noon, will I pray."

4. At the same altar.—In some retired part of the dwelling consecrate a particular place, at each time of retiring for prayer, will thrill the soul with emotions of the most healthful character. The young convert lingers, with peculiar emotions, at the spot where God removed from his soul the mountain of sin. When Daniel prayed, he entered into his chamber, and looked towards Jerusalem.

5. With humility.—We have been great sinners. God is holy, and cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance.

6. Forgivingly.—We must forgive the small offences of others, if we would have the Lord forgive our great ones. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."

7. Submissively.—There must be the utmost willingness to be, or do, what will accord with the will of God. The strong desire must be, not to have his will the same as ours, but to have ours the same as his. "Thy will be done."

8. Earnestly.—We must feel intensely interested in the exercise: we must be importunate in our supplications.—[Let the reader peruse, intelligently. Luke xi, 8.]

9. Believingly.—We must believe the "great and precious promises" of God. When we ask for spiritual blessings, we must expect them. "Believe that ye have them, and ye shall have them."

If all Christians should observe these few brief rules, would not their hearts glow with sacred fire, and would not sinners be converted to holiness, the whole Church be sanctified, and the name of our blessed Lord soon be a praise over the whole earth?

Wm. H. De Puy.

Secret of living always Easy.

An Italian bishop having struggled through great difficulties without complaining, and met with much opposition in the discharge of his episcopal functions, without ever betraying the least impatience, an intimate friend of his, who highly admired those virtues, which he conceived it impossible to imitate, one day asked the prelate if he could tell him the secret of being always easy. "Yes," replied the old man, "I can teach you my secret, and will do so very readily. It consists in nothing more than in making great use of my eyes." His friend begged him to explain. "Most willingly," said the bishop. "In whatever state I am, I first of all look up to heaven, and remember that my principal business here is to get there: I then look down upon the earth, and call to mind the space I shall shortly occupy in it: I then look abroad into the world, and observe what multitudes there are who in all respects have more cause to be unhappy than myself. Thus I learn where true happiness is placed, where all our cares must end, and how very little reason I have to repine or complain."

A Note on Vain and Proud Young Preachers.

Mr. Editor:—You will agree with me, that all who are called preachers at the present day are not models of christian perfection; and that, in many instances, they are not suitable examples for the imitation of those who wish to follow the Saviour. It is a pity, indeed an alarming evil, that the gospel of peace should ever be committed to men who are vain and proud; who look down to others, and expect others to look up to them: and yet such is often the case. Our young preachers are particularly given to vanity and pride, and many of them seem to study nothing but the art of dressing, assuming a commanding appearance, and letting off chaffy, bombastic speeches from the pulpit.—Christian Index.

Three Faults of Nurses.

1. To lisp in baby style, when the same words in an endearing tone would please as well; the reverse should be; the voice ever, emphatic, and each syllable distinctly articulated, for imitation.

2. To tell of witches, ghosts and goblins; such superstitions, impressed upon young minds, are rarely gotten rid of.

3. To direct a child to act like a man; whereas it is not often becoming for a little boy to ape the man, but only to conform his demeanor to his age; every age has its own peculiar docorousness.—New England Galaxy.

Printing 3000 Years ago.—The Rev. Mr. Jamieson, who was for ten years a missionary in Thibet, preached in Dr. Swift's Church, Allegheny, Mr. J. states that the art of printing has been practiced in Thibet for 3000 years. They can only print 3000 copies a day, however, from each form—so that if they were ahead of us in type, we are far ahead of them in press work.

Reading the Bible.—Those who wish to read the bible regularly, will do well to supply themselves with the "Christians' Annual Directory," a tract of sixteen pages published by the American Baptist Publication Society. It gives a series of daily readings by which the whole Bible may be read in the course of a year. The series begins with the first of January.

Woman.—The government of families leads to the comfort of communities and the welfare of states. Of every domestic circle, woman is the centre. Home, that scene of purest and dearest joy, home is the empire of woman. There she plans, directs, performs, the acknowledged source of dignity and felicity. When female virtue is most pure, female sense is most approved, female deportment most correct, there is most social manners.—The early years of childhood, those most precious years of life and opening season, are confined to woman's superintendence; she therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtues, and all the wisdom that enrich the world.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

A glorious hope is theirs, whose life
Is hid with Christ in God;
Who meekly walk the narrow way
Their great Redeemer trod.

Who turn from all the joys of earth,
With calm and fearless eye;
Seeking an everlasting home,
And treasures in the sky.

The world may frown, but what to them
Are all its toils and strife?
They look beyond its narrow bounds
And seek for endless life;—

For endless life, and endless bliss,
On those celestial plains,
Where angels bow, and seraphs burn,
And where the Saviour reigns.

They hope to join the adoring strains,
Amid the ransomed throng:
And pour, to notes of angel lyres,
Their everlasting song.

Oh! glorious hope!—vain world depart!
What art thy joys to me?
Oh! Jesus, teach my erring heart,
How I may hope in Thee.

"A STITCH IN TIME."

Show me the wife that's on the watch
For every little rent or scratch,
And cures it with a timely patch,
Before you know it;
She is a woman fit to match

LITERARY NOTICE.

Prof. Finney's Theology and Moral Government.

The above work has been advertised in the Star, but no expression (as I know of) either approving or disapproving, has been given of its merits. Older and more experienced brethren are better prepared to judge; but as it has been of great service, to my mind, in settling and confirming great truths, and clearing away the MISTS and darkness that have been thrown around some of the plainest and and most important points and questions, now agitating the religious world, I feel it my duty to recommend it to all, especially to ministers. One of Prof. Finney's excellencies is, his great clearness on all subjects that he presents. You can understand him whether you approve or not. In reading his 33d Lecture of the above work, on Human Government, I often thought it would be a great blessing to have that Lecture published by itself and scattered broadcast over the world. The subject of Regeneration occupies five Lectures, and is worth its weight in gold—and, in fact, the book as a whole is the best embodyment of Theology (the Bible alone excepted) that has ever come under my observation. I speak not only my own views, but those of several brethren that have had access to the work. May the blessing of Heaven rest on brother Finney and all others who are engaged in spreading light, truth and love, over the moral darkness of this whole world.

A series of meetings will also be held by the "Church of God" at Shippensburg, commencing on Saturday the 20th inst.

A two-days meeting will be held at Shepherdstown, Cumberland county, on the first Saturday and Sabbath in March next. Brothers Mackey and Winebrenner may be expected, if the Lord permit, to attend the meeting.

THE ADVOCATE

Is printed and published in Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge, Harrisburg, Pa.,

By JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M., Editor.

Terms and Regulations.

The Church Advocate will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

All the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and such other persons as shall have regular certificates of their appointment from the Editor, shall be the only authorized agents for this paper.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third and Eighth Numbers.

We again request our friends, who can spare the third and eighth numbers of the Advocate, to send them to us through the mail or otherwise. These numbers have run out, and we wish them for the two-fold purpose of filling up new orders and perfecting our files. We will allow six and a-fourth cents for every number sent to us in good condition.

"Publisher" Agents.

The Agents for collecting the outstanding accounts of the Gospel Publisher, are referred to a communication from one of the Board contained in this number. It is earnestly desired that this matter should be closed up as soon as possible. The Agents are therefore earnestly and respectfully requested to finish up this work between this and spring. Please read the letter referred to, and act accordingly.

The Harrisburg Bridge.

There is a prospect of having this bridge rebuilt next summer. The company, it is said, have succeeded in obtaining an adequate subscription or sale of stock to insure the rebuilding of the bridge between the island and the Dauphin shore. This may be gratifying news to some of the old stock-holders, as it will enhance the price of their stock; but it will be a bad speculation for the new stock-holders.

More New Contributors.

Our elder brethren are taking up their pens, and are furnishing long and strong articles for our paper. This is as it should be. This is what we have long been looking for. They ought to have been foremost in the ranks of our contributors; but as they were not, we are glad to find them willing to lend us their aid in the end of the volume.

Our readers will find an excellent discourse, in this number, on Patriotism, which will be read with interest. They will also find an article from brother Wm. Miller, on the inexpediency of human societies. His reasoning, though good in the main, is perhaps not altogether unexceptionable. Yet, as we are claimed on his side of the house, we shall leave it to those who are identified with the other side, to point out his discrepancies if they can.

Circulate your Papers.

To circulate religious papers is a grand means of doing good. "And he that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is a sin." If then our brethren, who take the Advocate, and who do not file their papers, can do good among their neighbors by circulating it, let them not refuse or neglect to do it, lest it be imputed to them for sin. But a still higher and better reason for so doing is, and ought to be, the pleasure of doing good. To glorify God and to do good to our fellow-men, is the prime end of our being. In any and every way, then, as we have opportunity, let us labor to do good to all men, and especially to them who are of the household of faith.

The Church in Baltimore.

We have received a letter from Baltimore, stating that the church there has authorized their pastor, brother C. Price, to purchase the Cove street meeting-house; which, it would seem, can be bought for eight hundred dollars. Terms, two hundred dollars in hand, two hundred dollars in six months, and the balance in a year.

This purchase, in our opinion, is a judicious move on the part of the church in Baltimore. The house in Cove street is a neat little place—forty by thirty feet in dimensions. It is located on a corner lot in a thrifty part of the city. The price is low—less than cost—and the terms are easy. We hope they may prosper, and be able to meet the payments without defalcation.

Our friends in the country will now, no doubt, do more than ever to aid the brethren in Baltimore to purchase and pay for their little Bethel.

Mount Joy Bethel Injured.

The storm on the 3d inst. has done considerable damage to the Bethel at Mount Joy. The south gable-end of the building was blown in, which, in its fall, broke down a part of the joice and sealing. The side walls were bulged out. The lamps, pews, windows, and other parts of the house, were considerably injured. See brother Seiven's letter among the communications in this number; and especially consider and respond to the appeal of the church for help.

Stumpstown Bethel.

The late storm has also materially injured, we are informed, the Bethel at Stumpstown, Lebanon county, Pa. But in the midst of this disaster, the Lord has sent them a heavenly influence, and some half dozen or more have been happily converted. A mixture of good and evil seems to be the lot of most men in this land of trial and probation. Hence one of old said: "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

Revival Intelligence.

Revivals are going on in various places. In this place—in Newberry, York county—in Fredericksburg, Lebanon county—in Middletown, Dauphin county, there are works of grace in gradual progression; and likewise in sundry places in the West. We hope the brethren will send us, ere long, full and accurate accounts of these refreshings from the presence of the Lord, for the benefit of our readers.

Brother J. Keller writes us that prospects are growing quite promising in several places on his circuit in Maryland.

Send in your Petitions!

Now is the time to petition the Legislature of Pennsylvania for a law giving the right of deciding whether alcoholic drink shall be legalized by the suffrages of the people. We recommend to all to read the eighth resolution of the State Temperance Convention, and to act accordingly. If we fail in getting this law in the several counties of this State, it will be the people's fault. Nothing is wanting to insure it but petitions, and these, with almost any number of signatures, can be easily obtained, if the friends of the cause will only exert themselves in due time.

Legislative Proceedings.

The Committee on Ways and Means have reported a bill authorizing the Canal Commissioners to receive proposals for the sale of the Public Improvements.

They have fixed on the 16th day of March for the final adjournment of the Legislature.

They passed a bill to incorporate the Pennsylvania Railroad Iron Manufacturing Company.

This bill Gov. Shunk has vetoed, because the individual liability clause is left out of the act.

They have passed a law for the suppression of gambling. The bill makes gambling a penitentiary offence. It also makes it an offence to invite a person to a place of gambling, under a penalty of from fifty to five hundred dollars.

Last Friday the Legislature had up for consideration the bill protecting the real estate of married women from the debts of their husbands. The bill elicited considerable debate until the hour of adjournment. The friends of the bill have some hopes of its final passage.

RESOLUTIONS

Passed by the late Pennsylvania State Temperance Convention.

1. Resolved, That the law which licenses and sustains the sale of intoxicating drinks, grants a privilege to the few at the expense of the many, and conflicts with the moral and pecuniary interests of society; and is therefore incompatible with sound legislation, the office of which is to protect the general interests of the community.

2. Resolved, That the traffic in intoxicating drinks is immoral and sinful; that it is productive of greater suffering and evil than any other cause; that it is a nuisance of the worst description, compared with which lottery policies, licentious publications, diseased and unwholesome food, and all other things the sale of which is prohibited by law, are in the aggregate but as dust in the balance; and that there is no reason for prohibiting the sale of those things, which does not apply with tenfold force to the sale of strong drink.

3. Resolved, That the sale of strong drink should be placed by law on a footing with other acknowledged nuisances, and prohibited as unqualifiedly as larceny, burglary, and other offences against the peace and welfare of society; and that the only ground, on which the enactment of a prohibitory penal law can be opposed, is that public sentiment has become so corrupt by usage and by former legislation, as to require a more gradual purification of the statute book, such as shall be sustained and enforced by the people.

4. Resolved, That the imposition of liquor selling establishments on a community, in opposition to the wishes of a majority of the people of that community, is a gross outrage on the rights of the people, which would not be tolerated, patiently, even by the minions of despotism; that such outrage and oppression are every day results of the present license system, and that the people should, at the very least, have the right of determining the question of license in their respective voting districts.

5. Resolved, That a law acknowledging this right is loudly called for by the citizens of the Commonwealth, according to the evidence presented to this convention from all quarters of the State; and that we have confidence in the Legislature at present assembled, which induces us to believe that they will without hesitation concede thus much to the spirit of democracy, on behalf of an oppressed and suffering community.

6. Resolved, That opposition to such a law bespeaks a want of confidence in popular government, unworthy a citizen of this republic, and that men who make the opposition may well be suspected of being moved by a grovelling appetite or sordid selfishness, rather than honorable and self-sacrificing patriotism, and of bearing in their bosoms hearts not American in principle and sympathy.

7. Resolved, That all alcoholic or intoxicating drinks should be included in the same list, as they are identified in their effects; and that the prohibition of spirituous and vinous liquors alone under those names, will not correct the evils complained of, but give occasion to much evasion and fraud.

8. Resolved, That this Convention, affectionately and earnestly exhort all the friends of temperance in the State, if not already so engaged, immediately and vigorously to commence the work of forwarding petitions to the Legislature, and circulating publications, and holding meetings to ask for and secure the proposed change in the license law, so that the whole State shall be embraced in one uniform law.

9. Resolved, That the friends of temperance are entirely willing to encounter all the injury to their cause, which some individuals anticipate, or effect to anticipate, as likely to result from the contemplated voting law, and to assume all the responsibility of such evil results. We are not afraid of trusting the question in the hands of the people, because we feel that there is enough of virtue and intelligence in our good old Commonwealth to secure sooner or later, the triumph of the cause of truth and humanity.

10. Resolved, That the history of legislation in Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and other States of our Union, on the subject of the sale of strong drink, exhibits a progress onward and upward as steady as the course of the sun in the heavens, and we have faith to believe, equally certain and irresistable in its final results.

11. Resolved, That the "Address" of the State Society on the license question be recommended for general circulation, and that our friends be requested to place a copy of it as far as practicable, in every family in the State.

12. Resolved, That all Editors of newspapers in Pennsylvania are hereby requested to give the Address of the State Temperance Society an insertion in their papers, and that the delegates to this Convention furnish the editors of their respective counties with a copy of this resolution, and of the Address.

13. Resolved, That the course of many of the political papers of this State in opening their columns to the discussion of the license question, and advocating the proposed change in the license law, is highly commendable, and indicates a decided and gratifying advance in public sentiment on this subject.

14. Resolved, That the press when properly exercised is a strong arm of the temperance movement, indispensable to its success, especially at the present period, and that every friend of the cause should contribute his mite by subscribing for one at least, of the following temperance papers published in this State, viz:—The Pledge and Standard, Philadelphia; The Olive Branch, Doylestown; The Good Samaritan, New Berlin; The Crystal Fount, West Chester; The Advocate, Meadville; and the Campaign, Girard, Erie county.

15. Resolved, That temperance men should encourage temperance houses, and that we cannot but regard it as a direct encouragement of the traffic, and as giving just reason for suspecting the soundness of any man's temperance principles, who will put up at a liquor house, when he may enjoy equally good accommodations at a temperance house.

Resolved, That the example set by the ladies of Philadelphia in procuring 16,000 signatures to petitions asking from the Court of Quarter Sessions of that city a faithful performance of their duty, and of sending some 40,000 names on petitions to the legislature, in favor of a law giving the people the right to vote on the granting of licenses, is worthy of imitation by ladies of every portion of the state, and deserves our hearty commendation.

Resolved, That the next State Temperance Convention be held at Harrisburg, on the third Wednesday of January 1848.

Resolved, That the following persons be the central Committee for the present year: J. C. Bucher, John A. Weir, R. F. Kelker, Dr. H. Gibbons, Prof. Jacobs, R. C. Hall, Judge Breckenridge, Joseph Weaver, Jr. A. Swineford, Wm. Patton, John Murray, Hon. Wm. Bigler, James Gilleland, H. Y. Slaymaker, Hon. Wm. Strong, R. M. Palmer, Wm. Henry, Dr. John Barker, John A. Hall, and Prof. Caldwell.

Resolved, That this Convention present a petition to the Legislature requesting them to pass a law to grant to the people of the Commonwealth the right to decide by ballot, whether any licenses shall be granted for the sale of alcoholic and intoxicating drinks.

This resolution was signed by the president and acting secretary of the convention, and laid before the Legislature on the following day.

The Year 1847.

The year 1847 is remarkable for several peculiarities. An exchange paper sums them up in the following manner:

"The year 1847 begins with Friday and ends with Friday. The 4th of July comes on Sunday. For the first time in the 'recollection of the oldest inhabitant,' there will be no full moon this year in the month of February. Our national political year begins on Sunday the 4th of March. There will be no eclipses visible in the year—January will have two full moons, and March a like number."

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

SERMON ON PATRIOTISM.

Preached on Thanksgiving Day, (November 26, 1846,) at Shippensburg, Cumberland county, Pa.

By JAMES MACKEY, V. D. M.

TEXT—"And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this: for he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue." Luke vii. 4, 5

The person of whom this high character is given, was a Roman Centurion, who commanded a company of soldiers stationed at Capernaum. By residing in Judea, he had acquired a knowledge of, and become a proselyte to, the Jewish religion; and by his justice and benevolence, he had greatly endeared himself to the people among whom he was a member.

This officer had a servant who was taken dangerously sick. Having heard of the fame of Jesus, he desired some of the elders of the Jews to go and entreat the compassion of the Saviour for this unhappy young man. The elders went; and when they were come to Jesus, they besought him with great earnestness to grant to the centurion the favor which he asked, alleging this argument: "He is worthy for whom thou shouldest do this; for he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue."

As he had for some time dwelt in Judea, had embraced the religion of the country, and probably intended to make it his permanent residence, he considered this as his own country. His love to the nation with which he was connected, the elders urged as an evidence of his personal worth, and for this reason they hoped Jesus would grant the favor requested. Jesus accordingly went and healed the servant. And not only on account of the centurion's love to the nation, but also in regard to that benevolence which he expressed for a servant, the humility with which he made his application, the strength of his faith, and the just reasoning by which he supported it. Jesus, in the presence of the people, gave him this high commendation: "I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel."

The encomiums bestowed on this centurion, may lead us to consider the nature and fruits of love to our country.

This is much the same as love to our neighbor, with only some circumstantial differences from the different relations of the object.

Love to our neighbor the Apostle has explained. "Love one another with a pure heart fervently; for he who loveth another hath fulfilled the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor."

Love to our country is the love to our neighbor extended on the national scale, and applied to the national good. In short, it is a desire for the general happiness of the people, and a disposition to promote it according to our rank and station in society.

This love, however, will not stop at the bounds of our country; it will pass over, and extend its good wishes to the whole human race. It would rejoice to see, not only one country only, but the world of mankind in a state of prosperity and happiness.

As every man is charged with the immediate care of himself and family, so he naturally feels more sensibly for himself and them, than for mankind in general. But whilst love for self and family prompts him to seek his own interests, and that of his immediate friends, benevolence operating in a just degree, will restrain him from pursuing his own interest to that degree, that would inquire the rights of others.

He who loves another with a pure heart, wishes to see all men happy. He will not seek his own interest at the expense of his neighbor's, nor the interest of his friends at the expense of his country. So neither will he attempt or desire to raise the glory, or extend the bounds of his country by oppressing or exterminating other nations, who have the same right, with himself, to existence, liberty and happiness.

This brings us to say some few things on the subject of War. Our idea of war is, that it is always unlawful, except in cases of necessary self-defence.

Whenever, therefore, war is got up for, and its object is merely for political purposes, for wealth, glory, or the extension of territory, it is the most horrid of all crimes; for every crime almost is involved in it, and every calamity produced by it.

If a nation, already possessed of sufficient territory, should wantonly attempt to dispossess other nations by spreading among them promiscuous destruction or oppression, whatever pretensions they may make of love to their own country, they are but plunderers of the rights of their fellow-creatures, and real humanity will weep at their success. Such was the boasted patriotism of the ancient Romans.

We shall now attend to the evidences of true love to our country.

I. If we love our country, we shall be feelingly affected with her dangers and calamities.

It has always been to me a matter of astonishment, that some men seem to care as little about the affairs of the country, as though they owed no duty to God, themselves, nor others. They are ready enough to receive, and turn to advantage, every blessing the providence of God vouchsafes to them, through national privileges, but like the painted Pharisee, whilst they would lay all the burden on other men's shoulders, would not touch any themselves with one finger. Neither common sense nor the Bible ever taught such a doctrine.

All public calamities are the consequence of indifference, or mistake on this subject, in connection with prevailing wickedness. Recollect, friends, what the Bible teaches on this subject: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Right views, a right practice, and a righteous disposition of heart, is what we need, and it will sweep from our earth the burdens under which our country groans, and stay the vengeful storm of a frowning Providence that hovers over us.

II. If we love our country, it will restrain us from injuring, and prompt us to serve our country. "Love worketh no ill." "By love we serve one another."

Let me here remark:

All vice and immorality tend to the common misery. In proportion as iniquity abounds, the public prosperity is endangered; consequently, every bad man, every vicious man, is bringing evil on his country. If his vices do not effect the general happiness directly, yet they do so remotely, by corrupting the manners of others. Evil example destroys much good. He, therefore, who would be the friend of his country, will, on a principle of love, abstain from every species of vice; and, on the other hand, will practice every social virtue.

If he is called to a public station, he will be faithful there, remembering that he is exhalted, not simply for himself, but for others—that his country has a demand upon him which he is bound to pay—that he is vested with authority which must be preserved inviolate, and held as a sacred trust for the use and benefit of those whose mouth-piece and servant he is.

If he acts in a private capacity, he will be careful to fill his humble place. He will live in all Godliness and honesty—cheerfully bear his part of public burdens—contribute to the support of reasonable government—yield obedience to just and good laws—give his voice for the promotion of such men as he believes are qualified, by their virtues and abilities to lead in society, and will use his influence for the general encouragement of religion.

As piety is the foundation of social virtue, he will pay due reverence to those sacred institutions which are the means of bringing men to the knowledge of God, and preserving a sense of His supreme government. In this view he will honor the Sabbath, and the ordinances of Divine worship, knowing them to be the instituted means of piety toward God, and benevolence to men.

III. A lover of his country has an affection for the "Church of God," and a concern to promote its credit and interest.

The centurion showed his love to the nation by building a synagogue; and it cannot be doubted that he attended at the synagogue too. He was a friend to religion; thus he showed himself a friend to the nation. And I remark, that any people that become so far degenerate as to despise the means of reformation, soon loose their spirituality, and with it their national security; for all good government is founded on the fear of God.

The church, then, as long as she sustains her purity, is the strongest bulwark of a nation.

Since religion is so necessary to the happiness of civil society, an enemy to the former cannot be a friend to the latter. He who treats revelation with contempt; he who tramples upon, or disregards Divine institutions; he who encourages vice by his example and conversation, does more to undermind the nation's security, than by any other means he can do to establish it.

IV. Love to our country will express itself in praying for its prosperity. The apostle directs that "prayers be made for all men," and particularly "for them who are in authority, that we may lead a peaceable and quiet life." This, he says, is "acceptable in the sight of God." If we believe that there is an Allwise and Almighty Governor who superintends the affairs of nations, we must believe it to be His will that we should apply to Him for national blessings, as well as for personal supports and mercies.

I now ask your attention to a few reflections which result from this subject.

1. True patriotism is a nobler attainment than some imagine.

It includes compassion for the unhappy, and hatred for sin—love of virture, disinterestedness, self-denial, industry, prudence, piety, and devotion; yea, every thing that is excellent and amiable. It is not an empty sound, but a solid virtue. It does not consist in a political parade, but a Christian virtue.

2. There is a great difference between talking warmly in our country's favor, and really loving it.

A man may say much in the praise of his country, its constitution, trade, soil, climate and production; he may plead for its rights with great earnestness, and do much to support its credit and respectability, and yet not be a real lover of it—not have any pure benevolence and piety to God, but be wholly influenced by ambition and avarice.

3. Civil Magistrates have no right to dictate men's belief, or control their consciences. But the worship of God, and obligations to virtue, are contrary to no man's conscience. He who has any religion at all acknowledges these. He who has no religion, and believes none, can have no conscience in the matter.

4. The Gospel, then, is in accordance with our civil institutions; it calls men to do nothing more than, as good members of society, they are bound to do. Some argue that civil rulers should not concern themselves about the support of religion, because they say religion is a spiritual concern. But we answer: that so far as it relates to the good of society, rulers ought to encourage and support this, as well as anything else that tends to the same good end.

Is it wrong to make laws against vice, and in favor of piety? Is it wrong to make laws against theft, oppression, drunkenness, idleness, and profanity?—and in favor of industry, charity, righteousness, and sobriety?—Such laws promote the public good—countenance piety, and suppress vice. None but those who talk nonsense will disapprove of such civil restrictions.

V. If we ought to regard the interests of our country at large, the same reasons urge us to consult the peace and happiness of the smaller divisions of which we are members.

The same principle which ought to govern nations, ought also to govern those societies into which nations are divided. Note! what the apostle says: "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in loveliness of mind let each esteem others better than himself." In all communities there will often be a diversity of sentiment. Peace and happiness will, therefore, depend on candor and condescention. What I wish to impress upon you here is, that in civil or religious society we must never pursue our own supposed interest in a manner evidently prejudicial to the general welfare. In religious society we must never, in circumstantial things, so stifly adhere to our peculiar sentiments, as to deprive others of the means of edification. When a church is formed, the members of it may happen to be divided in sentiment about smaller things, yet they should still remain united in affection, pursue the great objects in which they are agreed, and should so far condescend to one another, as that they may with one heart still glorify God. Let none seek to please himself merely.

VI. How careful we should be that no selfish motive influence our social or religious conduct.

The elders of the Jews, when they asked Jesus to favor the centurion, added: "He is worthy for whom thou shouldest do this." They expressed their sense, that a spirit of good will, influencing him toward the good of the nation, rendered him a worthy object of Divine favor. The Saviour hears their claims, complies with their request, and by His compliance confirms the justice of the sentiment. A man no further acts as a worthy member of society, than so far as he is guided by a proper regard to duties, social and relative; and a man's devotions are no further acceptable to God, than charity mingles itself with them. "Above all things, therefore, let us have fervent charity among ourselves."

"The spirit of the law is equity and justice. "In a government based on true principles, "the law is the sole sovereign of the nation. "It watches over its subjects in their ordinary "business, in their recreations, and in their "sleep. It guards their fortune, their lives "and their honors; in the broad noon-day it "ministers to their security. It watches over "the shop of the merchant, though a thousand "leagues intervene; over the seed of the hus-"bandman, cast for a season into the earth; "over the studies of the student, the labors of "the mechanic, the affairs of every man.—"None are high enough to offend with impu-"nity, nor so low that it will not protect them. "It is enthroned with the King, and sits in the "seat of the republican Magistrate. But it "also hovers over the couch of the lowly, and "stands sentinel at the prison, scrupulously "preserving to the felon whatever rights he "has not forfeited. The light of the law illu-"mines the palace and the hovel, and sur-"rounds the cradle and the bier. The strength "of the law laughs wickedness to scorn, and "spurns the entrenchments of iniquity. The "power of the law crushes the power of man, "and strips wealth of unrighteous immunity. "It detects falsehood and deceit. It is the "shield to screen from the fire of the slander-"ous tongue. It is the good man's protection, "and the wicked man's dread—the upholder "of morality—the guardian of right. Its power "is irresistible; its dominion indisputable. It "is above and around us; within us;—we can-"not fly from its protection; we cannot avert "its vengeance." [Vide Southern Literary Messenger.

Such is the law in its essence; such it should be in its enactments; such, too, it would be, if none aspired to its administration but those with pure hearts, enlarged views, and cultivated minds.

Human government has its foundation in the will of God. His providence has so brought it about, and the scriptures sanction it. Luke vii. 4, 5.

Some Reasons why I cannot join any other Organization but the 'Church of God.'

If it be temperance, abolition, non-resistance, Sons of Temperance, Odd Fellowship, or Free Masonry, they are all objectionable to my mind, though some of them are more so than others.

Reason first.—They are human in their origin. God has never instituted more than three institutions—the family, the church, and the state. The two first He has approvingly ordained; the last only as a necessary evil.—See Saml. 8th chap.

The family is God's first institution. This He has cemented together by ties that are as strong as death. The affection between husband and wife, parents and children, are strong and permanent.

The second is the church. This is united by ties that are much stronger than those that unite the family. The love of God & almighty truth, cements them together; having one faith, one baptism, one hope, one Lord, one God and father of all, who is over all and in you all; one Heaven to obtain, one hell to shun. The church is God's great moral reform society. The state never was intended to make a Christian out of the sinner—a lamb out of the lion—a sheep out of the wolf. There is no converting power in the state; it is all in the church. The agents are the truth and the spirit of inspiration.

I would ask the advocates of these pretended moral reform societies, whether it would make me a better Christian, husband, father, neighbor or citizen? or whether it would improve the Christian and moral character of other good men to join any of these societies? If not, then I pronounce them as useless to the Christian as a fifth wheel to a wagon.

Further, it is a reflection on the benevolence and goodness of God, in not providing the necessary means for the reformation of the world, with the aid and assistanee of the institutions of men. God at one time challenged the whole world to show wherein He could have done more for His vineyard than He had done? If He were to ask the advocates of these institutions, they would no doubt point out His deficiency, and offer their new institutions as a substitute to supply His deficiency.

I would ask my dear brethren, who differ from me on this subject, what can any of these societies boast of that is good, that Christianity does not abundantly supply?—Are they a temperance society? So is Christianity. No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God. You object perhaps and say, drunkards belong to the "Church of God.—This I deny. A drunkard may belong to a synagogue of satan, calling itself the "Church of God;" but a true "Church of God" never will tolerate drunkards in her communion, knowing them to be such. Are they a benevlent society? So is Christianity. "If any man have this world's goods, and see his brother have need, and shut up his bowels of compassion, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Are they non-resistanists? So is Christianity. "If any man smite you on the right cheek, offer to him the other also." "If any man take thy coat, forbid him not to take thy cloak also." "If any man take thy goods, ask them not again." To talk of fighting Christians!—why you might as well speak of sober drunkards, honest thieves, and pious robbers.

Reason second.—In these associations the good and the bad, the saint and sinner, Christ and Belial, are in the same work of reformation. That none are the friends of real reform but those who are what all mankind should be; that is, obedient to the whole law of God, I will not say: but how, I ask, can the obedient consistently join hand in hand with the disobedient in promoting holiness? Is it not evidently the duty of the former to bid the latter make to themselves clean hearts—to live out the holiness they would advance in others, and be a living commentary on true holiness, as the only proper way of reforming the world? It looks exceedingly bad for to see the ungodly active and vociferous for the spread of rightcousness. Reformation is the great employment of God in respect to this world, and His labors are the result of His benevolence and holiness. He therefore demands that all engaged in this employment, shall seek the same kind and degree of reformation which he does, that they shall do this from love to Him and those towards whom their labors are directed: that they shall be governed by the same pure motives which govern Himself, and that they shall use no means which He does not, or which would be inconsistent with His purity to employ.

Again, true reformers must sympathize with sinners—must regard all sin with the same utter abhorrence that God does, for its own sake, and that with all their souls. None but the righteous can do these things: therefore they only can co-act with God in reforming the world. Again, the aim of such organizations is to change public opinion; that is the head rather than the heart. God's plan is to change the head, if it needs it, but especially the heart. The public head has generally been pretty near right in respect to sin, but the public heart has always been wrong. Public opinion has always stamped infamy upon licentiousness, and law has affixed the penalty of crime; yet neither nor both have dried up its wasting waters. Drunkenness has always been considered a loathsome brutish practice, still the monster is sending its thousands to the grave. I do not say that a correct and enlightened public sentiment is no part of the business of reformers; but I do say that however much this may be done, it will amount to nothing unless more be done. It will induce men to join in a crusade against sin from motives of honor, regard to reputation, or hope of reward, or from any other consideration, rather than that of duty; and is in no sense the friend of reform, but in the highest sense the enemy of reform.

And just as soon as public opinion turns back, or these influences cease to act, he will leap into the vortex of open iniquity again.—Just so it has occurred in many places in reference to temperance. Public opinion leaped so dreadfully upon intemperance, as almost to dash it to pieces. Temperance was popular, distillers went down, because farmer's would not sell them corn. But as soon as the voice of public opinion fell a sleep, farmers found that corn did not bring as much as when whiskey was made out of it. Public opinion began to get drunk again, and farmers to sell corn to make whiskey. Distillers have revived, and drunkenness riots at noon day.

The above are a few of the reasons why, as it appears to me, the societies in question cannot meet God's approbatiou.

REMARKS.

1. It is easy to see why a man should be truly reformed himself, before he attempts to reform others. Because it is the only way by which he can demonstrate his sincerity—because it is necessary for him to show forth in his own example that character which he would impress on all men—because precept without example would be ruinous to any cause—because example is the highest, and properly speaking the only right moral influence which any being can exert. If there is any virtue in precept, aside from example, ungodly men and satan himself are virtuous.—For who ever heard the basest man on earth say that people ought to lie, swear, rob and murder! Why every one knows that knaves & hypocrites are continually preaching righteousness. Who does not know that this is human nature! What should men have said of Jesus Christ, if, while He inculcated self-denial by precepts, His example had been as selfish as a fiends? But His divine example was a glorious commentary on all He preached. Now let me ask, does any one believe that such a sweet consistency marks the conduct of those joined in these pretended moral reform associations?

2. It is easy to account for the errors into which multitudes have run in relation to these societies; they have placed virtue in action, instead of action with right motives. They have taken effect for the cause, and have supposed that temperance, &c., are the Gospel—that whosoever gave to such societies, supported the Gospel. But these are no more the Gospel than a falling stone is the attraction of gravity. They are the effects or fruits of the Gospel—the Gospel is love and obedience. To love will bring forth in ourselves the whole sisterhood of virtues. Under the delusion just mentioned, multitudes have joined these societies, and contribute to them, supposing themselves the better for this; while their daily conduct shows that they have no part in what they profess, and that all they have done proceeds from selfishness. They do it, &c., in obedience to public sentiment, in regard to reputation, or from love of excitement and strife of words.

3. It is absurd to suppose that God would accept any but those whose hearts are clean, to assist Him in the holy work of reforming the world. As this is a work of reforming men from sin to holiness, He will never be pleased with any thing less than this. "Be ye clean every whit." If God cannot unite with wicked men in turning the world from darkness to light, can we suppose that He is pleased with His children in doing it? How infinitely horrible it would be to see God go forth, hand in hand, with satan to reform the world! To see the white banner of heavenly love floating out on a union standard with the scoarched and smoky flag of infernal malice! is it any the less shocking when the followers of Christ, and of the evil one, attempt such a union? Does any one doubt the societies under consideration, are anything but such a union? How can infinite purity smile on such efforts.

4. God is for universal reformation. Unless men are also, He will blast their efforts by the breath of His fury. No matter how much a man may say and give to promote temperance, abolition, non-resistance, &c.; if at the same time he disregard holiness of heart and life throughout, he is the worst kind of an enemy of reform, and can never be its friend till he puts on the mind of Christ—following Him as a dear child.

5. It will follow that all true reformers will use the same means which God has appointed, and none others. It is by His blessed word and spirit, and not by those little petty means used by most of these institutions when they act the part of a monkey, to gain the rich reward of a loaf. How any Christian can use any means that the blessed Jesus would not approbate, if He were present, I know not. These societies intend to make sin unpopular, that mankind will shun it, but God reforms from sin, by making us repent of it, not because it is unpopular, but because it is wrong in itself. Is it not the tendency of these societies to make rightcousness popular. Mankind will progress to be reformed, to save their reputation. But, dear reader, let me tell you, that the way of holiness will never be popular, nor pleasant to flesh and blood. Let reformers be careful to do every thing with great humility, and according to the mind of Christ, and the ungodly will no more join in such labors than the devil himself.

THINGS IN THE CITY OF BROTHERLY LOVE.

NO. III.

Revivals---Fires---The Women---Business---Central Railroad---Telegraph---The Gale, &c. &c.

PHILADELPHIA, February 9, 1847.

REVIVALS of religion are now in progress in several of our churches. St. Georges' (Methodist) and the Independent Methodists, are the most specially favored, although there are numbers embracing religion among the rest of the churches.

We have had a number of fires since my last. The most serious one was the burning of the extensive building occupied by Messrs. KEEN & Co., curriers and leather dealers; a small tenement occupied by a very worthy lady, Mrs. LAW, as a fancy store and dwelling, and an old building used as a trunk manufactory, by Mr. W. KERN, together with considerable damage done to buildings opposite and adjoining those burned. The loss is estimated at over seventy thousand dollars, partly insured. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The place will be rebuilt as soon as possible.

The women of our city are very busy holding meetings, appointing committees, &c., to correspond with their female friends throughout the State, in regard to petitioning the Legislature for the abolition of the death penalty.

To judge from indications thus far, the prospect of the spring business is very fair. In fact, it has already commenced quite briskly, and many of our large wholesale houses are as busy as they can be, and as usual, our pavements are being blockaded with boxes, crates, &c.

The news by the Hibernia caused the heaviest transactions in the grain market, the day after its receipt, that have taken place for a year past. The following sales, intended for shipment to England, were made: Eight thousand barrels of flour, at six dollars twelve and a-half cents; five thousand barrels of corn meal, from four to one dollars and fifty cents; forty thousand bushels of wheat, from one dollar thirty to one dollar thirty-five cents; fourteen thousand bushels of corn, from seventy-one to eighty cents. A number of barques, &c., have been chartered for Liverpool at over two dollars per barrel—a price beyond any given from this port for years, if not unprecedented.

The necessary stock for the procuring of a charter for the central railroad has been subscribed, and the stockholders, I understand, will be called together as soon as possible, in accordance, however, with the provisions of the charter, for the purpose of electing directors. The company will then be organized, and of course the necessary engineers will be employed, and directed to make a thorough survey of the whole country, embracing the northern route, and the whole rigion over which it is practicable to make a road.

The placing of the wires of the new route of Telegraph, from Philadelphia to New York, will be completed ere this reaches your readers. The advantages of this route are, that it is more direct, more convenient and safer, which are certainly great advantages in this age of improvement.

The gale of the 4th blew a furious hurricane, doing considerable damage upon a small scale,—window-shutters were unswung,—awnings, &c., blown down,—trees torn up by the roots,—chimneys demolished, and houses, barns, stables, &c., unroofed. Considerable damage was done to the shipping.

No less than six new Episcopal churches, it is said, are to be erected during the present year in the city and county of Philadelphia. This extraordinary increase of churches has been mainly owing to the efforts of an association of recent formation, called the "Church Extension Society."

In the case of O'DUYHE vs. the county, an action to recover damages for the destruction of paintings in the parsonage house attached to St. Augustine's church, during the riots of 1844, was decided this week in favor of Plaintiff, and one thousand dollars was awarded him.

A gentleman by the name of ROBERT GRANT, Esq., has been creating considerable excitement among our good citizens in regard to the colored race. He is delivering a course of lectures on the "National History of the different species of Man," in which he endeavors to prove that the "negroes do not belong to the human race, but are a species of the Ourang Outang."

Yours, as ever,

LEONARD.

Correspondence---No. 6,

Between a Believer in Storrism, and a Believer in Bible Truth.

MAN has five senses, which are avennes by which God operates upon the soul, and the sense of feeling is the avenue by which God operates upon the soul by His spirit. Oftimes, when all nature is hushed in silence, and the sinner reclining on his conch, this still small voice comes, and he feels that all is not well; and if he dies in this state, where God and Christ are, he never can come. The word of God is the means by which God communicates His will to man; and for this purpose He has chosen men (and always had) to make known His will to man, and this is affected through the sense of hearing; for the Apostle says, "faith comes by hearing." So when the truth is faithfully declared, it first affects the sense of hearing, and if it produces no further effect, man will never be changed; but after the sense of hearing is rightly affected, the mind, or reasonable faculties, become confused and irritated, and then the conscience is aroused and alarmed. Now, having his eyes open. (viz: his understanding is enlightened) he begins to see where he is and what he is, viz: a sinner that has violated the law of God, and justly incurred the vengeance of God upon his soul. Now, too, he sees that he must give up his will, submit to God, and fly to Christ as his only refuge, there to confess all his sins, and rely by faith on Jesus, the sinner's friend. The moment he believes with full purpose of heart, he is pardoned; and the union takes place with the immortal soul and God, its Creator; and the moment also he believes, he is sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. Hence the Apostle says: "In whom also after ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." Eph. 1: 13. And then the spirit of God bears witness with his spirit, that he is a child of God. Romans 8: 16.

Now after man is thus changed, he remains the same man in appearance; his senses are the same; his intellectual powers are the same; his physical powers are the same; but with all these, he moves in a different channel; and whereas his mind was fixed on earthly things, now it is fixed on God and heavenly things. Man, in an unregenerate state, has desires and affections, as well as in a regenerate state; but his desires are evil. The soul of the wicked desireth evil." Prov. 21: 10. The immortality of the soul can be argued further:

From its vast capacities. The mind of man is capacitated to scan the ærial Heavens, and form ideas of the sun, the solar system, with all its planatory orbs revolving around it, &c. The body has not these thinking powers, but is capable of labor, and bearing fatigue, and suffering, &c.

From its boundless desires, man is desirous of possessing things as yet distant; many are so anxious to possess things that they have not, that it will engross all their thoughts on that object.

The sting of conscience, and the consciousness of sinning, men would be led to do many things that they do not, were it not for the sting of conscience. Now if the mind of man is thus capacitated, and the conscience capable of restraining man from many vices, which are only attributes of the soul, what must the soul be itself? and can its immortality be doubted. Various have been and are the opinions of men on the subject. Some believe it to be air or breath, some a flame or portion of heavenly light, others the thinking power; but from the word of God we must conclude that it is a spirit. Psalms 31: 5. Luke 23: 46. Acts 7. 59, and Cor. 5: 5.

The immortality of the soul can be argued from the parable of the sower and seed, where the heart of man is compared to the earth. The inherent nature of the earth since the fall, when it was cursed, is to bring forth thorns and thistles, so the heart of man, in its unregenerate state, brings forth as the Saviour said: For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. Now the earth has the same inherent nature of bringing forth in its uncultivated state, as in its cultivated state; the only difference is in its productions: so the heart of man has the same inherent nature of bringing forth in its unregenerate state, as in its regenerate state; and the fruits in both cases are described in the word of God.

Further, it can be argued from the analogy that exist between men and trees, and the Saviour comparing men to trees, and we know by experience that a tree can be changed by grafting, to bear a different kind of fruit to what it has bore; but it is the same trunk, the same roots, the same influx, and reflux to the sap. So the heart of man remains the heart, but is changed from a stony heart, which signifies a hard heart; to a fleshy heart, which signifies a tender and feeling heart.

ALETHES.

Agents of the "Gospel Publisher."

Brethren:—What are you doing? Are you collecting the outstanding dues for the Publisher, or are you not? Do you feel for us who have to bear such heavy burdens, or not? Remember, that a few of us are bound for about five thousand dollars, and had to give our individual obligations, or pay the money to save further trouble and expense. Now the most of us are very unable to bear it. And if it were otherwise, it would be very unfair for a few to bear the burden of ten thousand or twelve thousand persons. Whereas, if each one would pay between forty and fifty cents, the whole amount would be made up. But we will even admit that it would be unfair for some to pay that sum on account of their circumstances in the things of this world; we do not ask it of such. There are brethren that can, and we hope will make up the deficiency. A few of our good brethren have voluntarily offered, and have really taken upon themselves to pay five hundred dollars each, when in law they were only bound for about two hundred and forty dollars. O! that we had more of such noble hearted ones. Your unworthy brother is bound for the same amount, who would think it no such hardship to pay twenty or thirty dollars, which would be enough for him according to his circumstances: but the above is more than he is able to bear for ten years; and this is the case with other brethren of the Board.

Let me propose a plan that we all can take hold of. It is this: there must be upwards of two hundred and fifty organized churches, besides other preaching places, within the bounds of the several Elderships; but we will say two hundred and fifty. At each of these places they could raise, say fifteen dollars on an average. And at some places one brother could and would pay that much himself; at that rate there might be upwards of four thousand dollars collected. All that is wanting is some one or two of our brethren, in each place, to take hold of this matter, and collect in small or large sums, as they can get at it.

Brethren, lay these things to heart! I have borne a good part of the burden since I embraced religion but this seems rather too heavy. These things I say without boasting. For I thank God that he gave me a heart to do whatever I can.

But we have rather got away from our subject, as the preacher sometimes says. The agents we ask once more, what are you doing? Have you ceased to collect? For we have not received any money since the Elddership, and a very small sum at that time. Is it possible that you can let the matter rest at this time? We hope you will take a fresh start and urge these things on the minds of the people. Those who are indebted to the establishment will do well to pay off immediately for things may fall into other hands, and you might suffer by it as well as ourselves.

What are our brethren in the West doing in this matter? Are you doing anything to relieve us? Try to gather all in you can, and send on by the latter end of March, and then go on till we tell you it is enough, and depend upon it, we will not take too much off of you. And now, brethren, are we baptized into one body, even into Christ, and are we members of His body and members in particular? Let us feel for one another, and help to bear each others burden, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Your affectionate brother in Christ,

ONE OF THE SUFFERERS.

Good Times at Middletown.

For three weeks past the vineyard of the Lord here has been favored with gracious visitations of divine mercy. True, only a few souls—but yet they are precious—have turned to the Lord in repentance and faith. They are the first ingatherings to Christ in Middletown for some time past. So let us rejoice and bless God for a few wanderers returning to the Father's house—even as there is joy in Heaven for one sinner that repents.

It pleased God to permit death to enter the family circle of W. E., and take away one of the little ones of the family—a child three years old. A few days sickness, and the loved one was gone to return no more as a mortal to its parents arms. Why not take the parents and leave the child? They were not prepared.

So the voice of God's providence spake very loud to that little family. The father and mother, and a young woman, began to seek salvation; and two of them have found peace in believing. This gave considerable interest to the meetings, and others since are turning to God, and seeking His face in supplication at the altar of the house of prayer, as well as in private.

Thus has began a good work of grace in a place that had seemed almost like dry and burned ground. It is not began nor carried on in the strength of man—but in serious, and feeling, and devout prayers, and singing, and preaching.

O, that it may increase and spread around the two villages, and the neighborhood. For this let us pray and labor; and take great care to throw no stumbling block in the way of precious souls.

The brethren are much engaged in the work, and join to help it forward with heart and voice.

Mount Joy Bethel Injured.

Mount Joy, Feb. 3, 1847.

Dear Brother:—

I wish to inform you and the public generally of our misfortune.

Yesterday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, the storm past over this place in great power.—Our house of worship (the Bethel) has suffered very much, having the south gable-end blown in, carring with it the sealing and joice down upon the pulpit—cracking the lamps, and doing damage to benches and windows. The side walls are standing, but are bulged out. We cannot tell the extent of the damage to the roof, and other parts of the building at present, for the storm is still rageing, so that it is not safe to be in it at the present time.—We are now deprived of our house of worship until it is repaired again. And this you can see will take money, and that money we have not got, as we are in a measure poor, and have a debt upon the house of nearly four hundred dollars; we therefore ask help from God's open hearted children in the different churches. There are many brethren that can help, and no doubt they will. This can be done in a two-fold way: first, those individuals that will help in this good cause, can enclose their money in a letter, and send it to us without delay; second, there can be a public collection raised in each church and sent to us. This will be a very good way, if the leading brethren will see to it.

I remain yours, truly,

JOHN SERVER.

Letter from Brother David Neidigh, Jr.

Reedsburg, Wayne county, Ohio, January 4, 1847.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I feel glad that I can take up my pen to inform you and the readers of the Advocate, what the Lord is doing for us in these western countries at this time.

Brothers J. Neil and D. Gill commenced a protracted meeting on the 5th of December last, in Bloominggrove township, Richland county, Ohio. It appears that matters looked quite discouraging when they came to the place of meeting; but they commenced the meeting in faith, and believing that the Lord would help them and bless their labors; and, thanks be to God, their labors were not all in vain. They commenced to preach the old fashioned Gospel to the people; it began to find way to the hearts of the people, and some become inquirers what must we do to be saved; then those heavy ladened souls were pointed to the Lamb of God that died for them, that they might obtain the remission of their sins by a sincere repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

At this meeting there were eight or nine hopefully converted to God. And during the meeting there was an opportunity given to follow the Lord in the ordinance of Christian baptism when two were baptised, and six united with the church in that place; for to worship together, and for to walk together in the fear of the Lord. During the meeting the Lord saw fit to lay His afflicting hand on brother Neil, and he was not able to tend the meeting any longer. But the meeting was still kept up a few days by brother Gill, when he was under the necessity of closing the meeting for that time. Brother Neil left the place three or four days after the meeting, and went to his home; and after staying at home eight or ten days, he found that his health was tolerable good; he then thought of returning for to visit the brethren again. And while on his journey to the West, he sent word to brother Gill and myself that we should assist him in holding a protracted meeting in the aforementioned place.

Brother Neil commenced the meeting on the 26th of December. On Sabbath night brother Gill and myself arrived, and were gladly received by the brethren. We tried to hold the truth before the people again for the space of six days; and, thanks be to God, it was not in vain; three or four more were hopefully converted to God, and four more were baptised and united with the church at that place, and are happy on their way rejoicing in the God of their salvation. We also left some few to mourn over their sins, wishing us to pray for them, that they might be saved from their sins, and go with us to the kingdom. We had quite an unpleasant time of holding our meeting, as it rained, I think, more than I ever saw it rain in so short a time, as it did at this time. The waters became very high and very destructive here in the West. They have been higher here in the West than they ever have been known to be before. After the close of the meeting, I left the brethren for my home, and reached the same; but with some difficulty on account of high water.

Yours, in the bonds of love,

DAVID NEIDIGH, Jn.

Awwick, January 26, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

After my respects to you and yours, I would inform you and the readers of your excellent paper, that I have just closed a series of meetings. On the 2d inst. I went to Woodbury for the purpose of holding a protracted meeting. I met brother Barlow there, who had preached to the people the evening before. They told me they had a very warm meeting. In the evening I tried to preach to the people, and truly the Lord was with us, and blessed His children powerfully. On the Lord's-day morning brother Barlow preached to a large and attentive congregation. In the evening I lectured on the ordinances of God's house, before a very large crowd of people. After which we united in washing one another's feet, and partook of the broken emblems of Christ's suffering and death. This truly was a soul-refreshing time to those who truly love God, and keep His commandments; but hypocrites and sectarians murmured a good deal about it. This, however, only proves that it is of God, and not the tradition of man. After meeting brother Barlow, in company with several other brethren from Martinsburg, started for home to commence his school on Monday morning. And then I was left alone to continue the meeting. However, I was not freightened at the grumblings of the enemies of the Cross of Christ. In the name of the Lord I attempted to drive the Gospel bow at a venture; and after I had made the attempt, four came forward begging an interest in the prayers of God's people. Two professed to be saved from the power of sin by believing in Christ. My soul praise God for this! I remained at Woodbury until Friday morning, when the meeting ended.

Thus the church was greatly revived—four more hopefully converted to God—one was baptized in token of Christ's burial and resurrection. When I left the place, I came to Stonerstown and preached there on Friday evening. On Saturday morning I started for Round Nob school-house, where I commenced preaching in the evening, and continued until Monday night. The meeting resulted thus: the church was revived, the congregation regular, their attention and behaviour remarkably good for that place. On Tuesday morning I started for Broad Top. I came to brother Samuel Anderson's house, where I tried to preach at night; but as I had contracted a very severe cold by travelling and laboring so constant, I was able to speak but a few minutes. Yet such a dear, God-loving, happy people and place, I never witnessed in all my life before. As I was taken very ill with the cold, I got brother Edward Anderson to fill an appointment for me on Wednesday night, in Newburg, and I started for home—found my family all well, with the exception of my wife, who had also contracted a very bad cold. I tried to doctor myself and wife as soon as I could.

On Saturday the 16th, I commenced another protracted meeting at Awwick school-house, in the neighborhood where I live; and here I continued the meeting day and night, until last Sunday night the 24th. The result of this meeting was: three professed to be powerfully and hopefully converted; some of the lukewarm professors reclaimed; the church, I believe, in general, revived and cemented together in love; some of the unconverted left to mourn over their sins; some of the sincere inquirers after truth got their eyes opened, and sectarians and hypocrites got their antipathy raised against God and His cause: there is a general commotion in the neighborhood; but all will come right. I will now close my letter by informing you that I left home yesterday, and am now taking another round on my field of labor. I wish and beg you to pray for me and God's cause and children through this region of country.

I remain yours in the Gospel of Christ,

JACOB LININGER.

Letter from Brother J. S. Hostetter.

Shippensburg, January 20, 1847.

Much Esteemed Editor:—

If you think the following worthy of a place in the Advocate, it is at your disposal.

Under the sun on earth, among people, kindred, tongues and nations, what can be found more precious, more sacred, more pure, more durable, more authentic, and more valuable than the BIBLE? Among all that are called books or bare pages, the Bible is the first, chief and principal. Its purity is as gold tried in a furnace seven times. Its durability is more firm than the pillars of Heaven and earth.—Its preciousness is beyond the estimation of mortal mind. Its author is "God over all, and blessed forever more."

The Bible is a communication of Heaven, and contains the holy law of our Creator, and the testamony of our Divine Saviour. The Bible is the fountain of heavenly knowledge and intelligence, both civil and moral—the great luminary of the moral world, and true detector of the many false religions now in the world. The Bible sets forth and brings to the mind of man the character and perfections of the almighty, eternal and triune God—the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. The Bible is the book (or mother) of books. Its offspring are numerous; some are evil and corrupt—but, thank God, a great number are good, very good.

The Bible promises salvation to all the sons and daughters of Adam, that will apply to the BLOOD of Christ for it.

The Bible is the will of God, revealed from Heaven to man, which contains four things, viz:

1. Facts.
2. Commandments.
3. Promises; and,
4. Threatenings.

Under these four topics the Bible is made up. The facts are to be believed—the commandments obeyed—the promises enjoyed—and the threatenings avoided.

If the facts are not believed, the commands cannot be obeyed; and if the commands are not obeyed, the promises cannot be enjoyed; and if the promises are not enjoyed, the threatenings will not and cannot be avoided. And wo! wo! wo! to that man against whom the threatenings of the Bible will be denounced. The Bible is not all threatenings, nor promises, nor commands; but who can produce a single passage between the lids of the Bible that is not a fact, or truth? It is one solid chain of truth, comprising facts, commands, promises and threatening.

Here are four inexhaustable topics upon which we might expatiate. But I conclude, lest I be too lengthy. I would ask, however, dear reader, do you believe the Bible and obey it &c.? Remember the rule by which you must be fitted and prepared, if you wish to become part of the New Jerusalem.

May the Lord give grace, that the Bible and my heart may be constant companions, while a pilgrim here below, and hereafter enjoy all the glorious blessings which it promises to the believer. Amen.

Yours, in Bible affections,

J. S. HOSTETTER.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

The License Question.—At a recent election in Allegheny city, we learn from our exchange papers, the license system was voted down. The majority against the sale of liquors was much larger than it was in the city of Pittsburg. In one ward only three votes were cast in favor of the sale of ardent spirits as a beverage. This is a triumph at which the friends of Temperance may well rejoice. A noble beginning has thus been made in putting down the license system, which will doubtless have its influence in other sections of the State in which the question is to be submitted to the decision of the people at the ballot boxes. If the Legislature have not the moral courage to put an end to the traffic by a direct vote of their own as they ought to do, it is to be hoped that they may at least be prevailed upon to extend the same privilege to all other counties in the State, which they have extended to a few, and the happy results of which they are beginning to reap.

St. Louis and Cincinnati.—A public meeting was recently held at the Merchants' Exchange, Cincinnati, for the purpose of responding to the action of the Council of St. Louis, with reference to the projected enterprise of connecting that city with Cincinnati, by a Railroad, to pass through the capital of Indiana, and some point not far from the old capital (Vandalia) of Illinois. It was well attended. The Mayor of the city presided. The meeting was addressed by several gentlemen, and a Committee of 20 persons was appointed to report an Address and Resolutions expressive of the feelings and designs of the meeting, who retired for a time and discharged the duty assigned them. The address and resolutions were unanimously adopted. One of the resolutions agreed to, expressed the cordial approbation of the meeting in the project of uniting St. Louis and Cincinnati by a great work such as that which is proposed.

New York Bible Society.—The twenty-third annual report of the New York Bible Society, auxiliary to the American Bible Society with the constitution, &c., has been published. The distribution of the past year has been greater than that of any previous year, and amounts to 9,451 bibles, and 9,782 testaments, making a total of 19,233 volumes. It is now twenty-three years since the Society was organized. During the first twenty-two years it distributed 62,274 bibles, and 121,263 testaments, making 183,537 volumes; adding to this the distribution of the present year, 202,770 volumes have been put into circulation by this Society.

Awful Calamity.—One-fourth of Ripley, Ohio, in ashes—Great loss of Property—Three Children burned to death—two Firemen killed.—The Ripley Telegraph Extra, of Jan. 21st, dated 4 o'clock, A. M., says—"About one o'clock this morning, a fire broke out in the Iron Foundry of Messrs. Beatley and Burt, which was soon wrapt in flames. The Relief Fire company did every thing that mortals could do, but all was ineffectual. McMillon and Reynolds' large Mercantile house with its contents, is totally destroyed, so rapidly did the flames spread. Also, the Merchant Tailor shop of Johnson and Cremp. Three children of the widow Lenson, whose house was burned, perished in the flames. Dungan's Hotel is now in flames.

Relief to Ireland.—An immense and enthusiastic meeting was held at Washington, Feb. 9, at Odd Fellows' Hall, in aid of the starving poor of Ireland. Vice President Dallas presided, assisted by Vice Presidents from every State and Territory in the Union, and six Secretaries. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions, and during their absence an eloquent address was delivered by Mr. Dallas.

On the return of the Committee, Daniel Webster was desired to read the resolutions prepared by him—which he did, prefacing them with a brief but eloquent speech. The resolutions recommended immediate contributions throughout the country. The Collector and Mayor of Philadelphia, and many others, were placed on the Committee to receive and transmit donations.

A hint to Post Masters.—A postmaster in the interior of Pennsylvania recently had judgment given against him for the price of a subscription of several years to a distant newspaper, on the plea that he had not given sufficient legal notice to the publisher to stop it, and had continued to receive the numbers for several years and sell them for the postage. The magistrate decided that merely returning a copy of "John Smiths" papers with "stop this" written on it without postmark, or other indication of locality was not sufficient or legal notice, but a written notice, with name, place, date and reason, must be sent to the publisher, and "franked," that it may be taken out by him.

Export of Breadstuffs.—The Journal of Commerce says that more than 4,000,000 bushels of grain were exported from New York city last year to foreign countries, besides 1,192,428 bbls. flour, equal to 5,000,000 bushels more, making a total of 9,000,000 bushels, or its equivalent, from a single port. It is at the rate of 25,000 bushels in a day, the year round, Sundays and all. It is more than half a bushel to every white man, woman and child in the nation. The whole amount raised in the U. S. is supposed to exceed 1000,000,000 bushels.

Curious Fact.—It is a fact not generally known, we presume, that no president of the United States who had sons, was ever re elected. Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson, had no sons, and were re-elected; John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Harrison, and Tyler, had sons, and were not re-elected.

Printing of the Thirtieth Congress.—The National Intelligencer of the 2d inst., says: The Board of Officers to whom the duty is assigned by law, yesterday awarded the contract for the first four classes of the Printing of the next Congress, to Messrs. Wendell and Van Benthuysen, of Albany, New York; and the fifth class to Messrs. Tippin and Streeper, of Pennsylvania—these gentlemen having been the lowest bidders for the work.

Warm Hearted Irishmen.—We are informed upon reliable authority, says a New York paper, that since the first day of November—when the distress of Ireland for lack of food was too surely verified—more than eighty thousand dollars have been remitted in sums varying from $5 to $25, by Irish laborers, men and women servants, and others toiling for their daily bread—to their relatives in Ireland.

Distress in Ireland.—Great and unparalleled distress exists in Ireland; the plague and famine were carrying off the poor in great numbers.

☞The Constitution of Iowa makes ample provision for a magnificent school fund. In the organized counties, 442,107 acres of land have been reserved for that purpose; 463,048 acres in counties not yet organized, and 500,000 acres of public domain, to which the State is entitled on her admission into the Union—making an aggregate of 1,405,155 acres appropriated to the purposes of common school education.

☞The condition of Ireland continues to be the absorbing object of attention. Day after day the distress continues to increase, and famine is doing the work of death in various parts of the country. Immense numbers of poor half-starved creatures find their way across the channel, and beg and exist as best they can, by appeals to the feelings of the inhabitants in the great towns of England.

☞It is reported that Mehemet Ali has manifested a desire to establish a Railroad from Suez to Cairo. There is a talk of undertaking some works for the improvement of the navigation of the Nile in Nubia. It is said that at the end of the next month 20,000 workmen will be employed on this enterprise.

☞Information has just been received from Egypt by a respectable mercantile house in Belfast, that the overflowing of the Nile has carried away 93 villages in Lower Egypt, with all the produce they contained, including a very large quantity of flax. The Government has set vigorously to work to repair the dykes.

☞The Arkansas Legislature has passed an act which exempts all the property of a married woman, real or personal, not received from her husband after coverture, from liability for his debts or contracts.

☞The Presbyterian Board of Publication is about to establish a system of Colportage for the circulation of their books. A gentleman has given, through Rev. Dr. Boardman, $1,000 for this object.

☞The "Right of Way" bill, granting permission to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to extend their work through Virginia to the Ohio, has been defeated in the Legislature at Richmond.

☞An engineer in South Wales has constructed a locomotive with eight wheels, all connected. This monster climbs up very unfavorable inclines with loads that entirely baffle engines of any other construction.

☞The Government mills at Plymouth are employed night and day in grinding Indian corn for the relief of the destitute poor in Ireland and the Highlands of Scotland.

☞A fire occurred at Chilicothe, Ohio, on Saturday night last, which destroyed some twelve or fifteen houses, generally small frames. Damage not very great.

☞The total amount of the free church collections in Scotland, for the relief of the distress in the highlands and islands, is £4,364 10s. 7 1-2d.

☞Colporteurs in France are meeting with considerable success in distributing the Bible to the destitute—30,000 copies having been thus disposed of within the last three months.

☞An improvement in paddle wheels, by which the Atlantic may be crossed in six days, has been invented by a Baltimore mechanic.

☞The commerce of the lakes, this year, is estimated at more than $100,000,000, embracing about 600 vessels of various kinds.

☞The Society of Friends in England have contributed $20,000 towards the relief of the Irish poor.

☞A rock of 70,000 tons was removed by twenty ounces of gun cotton.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Petition for Peace with Mexico.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America.

Your Petitioners, on behalf of the American Peace Society, which embraces persons of every sect and party throughout the land interested in the promotion of universal and permanent peace, very respectfully but most earnestly entreat your Honorable Bodies to take without delay such measures, within the pale of your constitutional powers, as you may judge best fitted to terminate the present Mexican War without any further waste of blood and treasure.

We urge this request from no party or personal motives, but from a strong, imperative sense of duty as Christians, and as friends alike of our country and our species. We believe with Cicero, that 'the worst peace is preferable to the best war;' with Lord Brougham, that 'war is unchristian, and the greatest of human crimes;' with Franklin, that 'all wars are follies, and that it would be better for nations to settle their difficulties even by the cast of a die, than by fighting and destroying each other;' with Jefferson, 'that war is an instrument entirely inefficient towards redressing wrong, and multiplies instead of indemnifying losses;' with the Apostle, that 'wars and fightings come from the lusts of men;' and with Jesus Christ, that 'we ought to love our enemies, and do unto others as we would that they should do unto us.'

With such views, we cannot look with complacency, or in silence, on the malice and outrage, the vices, crimes and miseries inseparable from any war; and we feel constrained to remonstrate especially against the present war as repugnant to the spirit and precepts of our holy religion;—as at variance with the professed policy of our government from its origin;—as highly unjust and cruel to Mexico;—as unnecessary, and suicidal to ourselves; as fraught with no real good to either party, but pregnant with immense evils to both, and likely to bring disgrace upon our country, and the cause of popular freedom.

It seems to us, moreover, that our government, if in earnest for such a result, might easily bring this war to a close very soon. Were our forces recalled from Mexico, the contest would of necessity cease, and the way be opened for a peaceful, equitable adjustment of all difficulties between us. It is obviously the duty of our government to take the lead in measures of conciliation and peace; because, being by far the strongest party, we could make such advances without the imputation of weakness or fear, and because the war, as now carried on by us, is confessedly a war of invasion, conquest and vengeance.

Nor do we see any need, or use, or justifiable object of continuing the war any longer. If its motive be rapacity or ambition, a love of plunder, or a thirst for military glory, the wreaking of vengeance upon feeble, distracted Mexico, or the dismemberment of that Republic to enlarge our own, we must, as Christians, and as friends of our country and the world, protest most earnestly against the further prosecution of this war for such objects. If its sole aim is a fair and honorable adjustment of existing difficulties, this can be secured without another drop of blood, and every day of conflict is rendering Mexico less able and less inclined to pay what she owes us, more and more desperate in defence of her soil, and less willing, for a just compensation, to part even with the well nigh useless outskirts of her vast territory. Were the sword sheathed at once, we might, by amiable negotiation, obtain all the territory we can reasonably desire, for a mere fraction of what this war has already cost ourselves.

Meanwhile, we deplore its great and growing evils. Already have thousands fallen victims to the sword, to exposure and disease; and the land has begun to be filled with lamentation and sorrow. The war is also wasting millions on millions of treasure, and threatening to load us ere long with a debt that may far ages, hang like a vast incubus on the energies and interests of the nation. It is fast pouring over the land a flood of moral evils. It has deeply stirrid the war-passions of our people, and is spreading far and wide a war-spirit which may one day prove fatal to our liberties. Washington himself warned us against war as our deadliest foe; Madison solemnly assured us, that 'no nation can long preserve its freedom in the midst of continued warfare;' a distinguished general from the South in the war of 1812 proclaimed his belief, that another one of the like kind would crumble the fabric of our government into ruins; and the recent conduct of Com. Sloat and Gen. Kearney, in adding to our republic, territory enough for an empire, and creating therein a civil government, all by a mere word in the exercise of the war-power, proceeds on principles utterly inconsistent, in our view, with our free and glorious institutions. We know of no charter, or law, or legally expressed will of the people, that gave those commanders any right to exercise such supreme, unlimited powers. It seems to us an act of sheer despotism; and on the same principle might a Cæsar or Napoleon, at the head of a hundred thousand obsequious troops, change at will the present form of our government, and, by the aid of their bayonets, impose himself upon the country as Perpetual President.

On this point we cannot conceal our fears. Most republics have hitherto been whelmed in the vortex of war, our cotemporaries south of us have, from their earliest rise, been almost incessantly destroying each other by the sword; and thus has popular government become, sooner or later, a sort of foot-ball bandied over the earth in blood. God forbid that our own experiment should ever end thus; but, if we would prevent such a catastrophe, we must crush the evil in the bud by repudiating the practical despotism of war.

Still more do we deprecate the false and pernicious principles set afloat on the waves of this war. Besides all the vices and crimes inseparble from such a conflict, we have heard the cry of our country, right or wrong! the dogma that we must unite in the support of any war, however wicked, which our rulers may choose to declare; a principle that would nullify the edicts of heaven, and make the will of a single man, or a republican majority, the rule of our duty even against the express commands of God; a doctrine utterly unworthy of a Christian or a civilized people, and quite likely, if carried into general practice, to debase the moral character of our whole country, and prepare its future millions for a doom like Revolutionary France in the zenith of her blind and reckless atheism.

We speak our convictions without reserve; for we deem it our privilege and our duty. We look upon this war with undisguised abhorrence; we believe the general conscience of the nation to be decidedly, strongly against it; and we fear it will, if persisted in, call down upon us the just and fearful judgments of Heaven. We dare not, for any consideration, take upon ourselves the responsibility of this war; and we beseech your Honorable Bodies to arrest it, if you can; but, if this be not done, we wish, before God and man, to wash our hands from all share in what we deem its folly and its wickedness.

In behalf of the American Peace Society, and by order of its Executive Committee.

GEO. C. BECKWITH,
Corresponding Sec'y.
WILLIAM C. BROWN,
Recording Secretary.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

DIED—At Westminster, January 30, sister SARAH WARFIELD; aged 52 years, 9 months and 16 days.

Sister WARFIELD was brought to God through brother SNEDKER'S preaching some years ago, and afterwards baptized. I visited her during her sickness some three times. She always expressed a strong hope in God. She always told me that God was very good to her. She fell asleep, we trust, in Christ. She rests from her labors; and we hope she shall have part in the first resurrection. Her funeral services were attended to by the writer on Monday the 1st of February, in the Methodist Protestant meeting house, according to her request. Text, 2 Timothy 4: 6, 7, 8.

J. KELLER.

On the 12th inst., near Uniontown, DAVID, son of Abraham and Rebecca Appler; aged 21 years and 8 days.

He suffered very considerably for about eleven weeks from a gathering in his side, which was opened several weeks before his death. During his sickness he was brought to see the necessity of a change of heart—he sought after it earnestly, and professed to have obtained. On the 3d inst. his remains were brought into the Uniontown meeting-house, at which time a discourse was delivered from Eccl. 9: 5., by the writer, in the presence of many weeping friends and neighbors, with good effect we hope; after which he was put to the grave to rest till the trump of God shall sound.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Melancholy Occurrence.

Mr. Daniel Toy was drowned on Saturday, the 21st ult., in the Susquehanna, opposite Harrisburg. Three persons went out in a small boat to shoot ducks, when the boat upset and resulted in this fatal accident. Mr. Toy's body has not yet been found.

Proposition for Reducing our Terms.

If our friends will get us five hundred new subscribers, the terms of the Advocate shall be reduced to one dollar per annum. Who will lead off in making the effort? Who and how many will follow suit? Let us hear from some of you by the time of our next number, and from all by the time of the commencement of the next volume. We invite all to exert themselves in behalf of our enterprize, and for the reduction of our terms.

Our Agents.

We request our Agents, for the Advocate, to collect the dues, for the first quarter, from all our delinquent subscribers forthwith. There are about three hundred and fifty who stand delinquent on our books. These are all indebted sixty-two and a-half cents each. This sum we want them to pay up. Yet, if they prefer it, they may still have the whole volume by paying one dollar and twenty-five cents. They may have their choice, then, provided they will settle their accounts between this and the first of April next. The Agents will please see them on the subject.

A Small Beginning.

We proposed some time ago to send the Advocate gratis, for one year, to every person who would procure us five new subscribers, and become responsible for the payment.—This proposition has been accepted and responded to by several of our friends and brethren, to-wit:

Elder T. Hickernell has sent us 5 new subs.
Elder Davin Neidigh, Jr., do. - 4 do.
Elder Jacob Brewer, do. - 6 do.

Now how many more, we ask, will agree to this proposition, and have their names added to this list? Try, brethren, and see what you can do!

Prospectuses.

We have issued two Prospectuses for two new books, which will be found on our last page, and for which we want some good Agents. We want both State and County Agents to solicit subscribers for the works, and to sell books for us whilst they are canvassing the ground as solicitors.

Any person wishing to engage in this business, and who shall come well recommended, may find employment on liberal terms.

Decennial Anniversary.

The Twentieth Semi-Annual Examination will take place at the Lyceum Female Institute, near Mount Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., on the 31st of March, 1847.

This celebrated Institution was removed from Philadelphia to Mount Joy, where it has been in operation for the last ten years. It is now, therefore, concluded on to celebrate a Decennial Anniversary. Invitations are to be sent to all the old scholars and friends of the Seminary, and every thing is to be done that can be done, for the interest of the occasion. The friends of the Institution, generally, are invited to attend.

Pay your Ministers.

As the time is drawing near when a number of our ministers will change their places of labor, we hope that none of the churches and people, for whom they have been laboring, will permit them to remove without paying up their salaries.

The Great Head of the Church has adorned, that those who preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel; that is, the people among whom they labor or preach the Gospel, are to support them. This is a wise and reasonable arrangement. This is God's ordinance; and those who offend in this one point, and suffer their ministers to go away embarrassed and in debt, are guilty of the whole law of Christ; as much so, as those who neglect other ordinances, and break other commandments.—We hope then that no church will sin against God, by refusing or neglecting to pay their minister.

We would further say, that few or none of our ministers, perhaps, would ever be in want, if the Elders and Deacons would always do their duty. It is their duty to see after this matter. They ought to see to it, that the preacher or preachers get their salary quarterly, and that regularly without fail; then it will not only come seasonably for the preachers, but be always more easily raised by the people. However, be this as it may, for your soul's sake, for religion's sake, and for God's sake, do not stint and starve your ministers, or let them go away in debt!

Where this is done, there will be no revivals. Christ will take this as done to Him. He calls it robbing God, and they that rob God cannot expect to prosper. But bring your gifts into God's store-house, (the church) that there may be meat or food in His house, and prove Him herewith, and see whether he will not open to you the windows of Heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Melancholy Accident at Mount Joy.

A man, by the name of Waltman, was helping to load some cars about ten o'clock at night. The train was not all attached, and some of the cars moved against the one where he was engaged, and crushed him between the cars and warehouse, a space not more than four inches. He was a father much beloved by his family. He had been absent for a few days with some cars, and in the evening, on his return, as he passed his home, waved a token that he would soon be with them. He was detained however. Alas! he had waved his last farewell. He was taken to his dear family; but the spirit had fled to its God. Ah, time! Life every day proves to be but a breath upon a mirror!

Elder E. D. Wertz's Appointments.

Brother E. D. Wertz will preach, Providence permitting, at the following places, to-wit:

At brother John Hess', Washington county, April 8th; at brother Henry Sherich's, Washington county, April 9th; in Aleppo township, Greene county, April 10th, 11th and 12th.

☞ The brethren at the aforesaid places are requested to make the appointments known in their respective neighborhoods.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

The license law has been discussed for several days. Nothing definite can yet be known as to its final result. Our opinion however is, seven or eight counties will be included in the act passed by the last Legislature to decide, by ballot, whether license shall be granted to tavern-keepers within their several townships and wards.

An act to prevent kidnapping, and to repeal certain slave laws was passed.

The divorce acts the Governor has so far vetoed. Honor to his name!

"Publisher" Agents.

We are requested to urge the Agents for the Gospel Publisher to finish up collecting all the dues between this and the first of April, and to remit the moneys collected forthwith to Eder Joseph Ross, treasurer; or, if more convenient, to Elders Wm. Hinney, or Abraham Brenneman, committee.

Congress.

The Three Million Bill, with the Wilmot proviso, i. e., that no more slave territory shall hereafter be annexed to the United States, has passed in the lower House by a vote of 115 to 105. Six members from Pennsylvania voted against the proviso, to-wit: Jos. Black, C. J. Ingersol, H. D. Foster, J. Erdman, R. Broadhead, and M. McClean.

Aid to Ireland.

We understand there has been about fifteen hundred dollars subscribed for the relief of the sufferers in Ireland, by the members of the Legislature, and the citizens of Harrisburg: the former made up about six hundred dollars, and the latter made up the balance.

OBITUARY OF JOSEPH ZIMMERMAN.

On the 20th ult. we visited and spent a few days at Churchtown, Cumberland county, Pa., and stopped with our old and much esteemed friend, John Zimmerman; when, for the first time, we learnt that his son Joseph had departed this life. We condole the loss of our brother Zimmerman and his amiable family in this painful bereavement. But we rejoice to know that they mourn not as those who have no hope.

The following letter from Elder Chester Colton, and the subjoined preamble and resolutions of the New Carlisle Division, No. 57, Sons of Temperance, as a just tribute of their respects for the deceased, will give sufficiently the particulars of his death, and be read with interest by all the relatives and friends of our esteemed young brother.

New Carlisle, Clark co., Ohio,
October 14, 1846.

Dear Sir:—

You have doubtless received intelligence of the death of your son Joseph, at New Carlisle. I waited on him in his sickness, which continued about two weeks. His death was unexpected to us all. Joseph was a worthy young man, and was much respected by all who knew him. He was industrious and correct in his work. His attention to the means of grace was more than ordinary, and he appeared to advance in the divine life. He made the Bible his constant study, and carried it in his pocket daily; and when he had leisure he would read it, while others perhaps were reading newspapers or novels. He maintained a life of prayer.

I asked him, in his sickness, how he viewed the providence of God in relation to his affliction. He replied that God's dealings were all right. He signified that his hope, in reference to salvation, was bright, and that he derived consolation from the thought, that God reigned supreme over the universe.

I believe Joseph is in Heaven; and though he loved his parents, he would not desire to leave the society of the blessed. He is perfectly happy in the employments of Heaven, and no more tears will be shed on account of earthly or spiritual trouble.

Why he was taken away from his newly married wife, other relatives and the church, we know not; but there was a suitable reason why he should tarry no longer with us. Our best answer to the inquiry, why did God remove him from earth in early life? is this: "Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." "The will of the Lord be done."

I trust you will bow in submission to His will, and wisely improve the providence, knowing that "the Lord is righteous in all His ways, and holy in all His works." Let us "gird up the loins of our mind," press forward in the path of life, and stand prepared for all events; then we shall be ready at a moment's warning to pass over the Jordan of death, and enter the celestial Canaan.

Elizabeth, Joseph's widow, is a sincere mourner, and she deeply feels her loss; but seems disposed to submit to the heavy affliction, as coming from the gracious hand of God.

She is recovering from her late attack of sickness. She is an interesting and pious lady.

Yours, affectionately.

CHESTER COLTON.

TESTIMONY OF RESPECT.

At New Carlisle, Clark county, Ohio, on Tuesday, October 6th, at half-past 2 o'clock P. M., Joseph Zimmerman departed this life in the 21st year of his age.

Brother Zimmerman was a native of Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where his parents now reside, and from whom he separated some sixteen or eighteen months since, and became a citizen of New Carlisle. He was an uncompromising foe of intemperance—of immorality and vice of every character—of every grade. And while in the mournful event of his death the community, the church and the cause of humanity have sustained loss; our beloved brother has left a testimony that our loss is his infinite gain—that he now inhabits the spirit land of the blessed.

The New Carlisle Division, No. 57, Sons of Temperance, of which our lamented brother was a member, have caused, as a testimony of their high esteem, the following preamble and resolutions to be prepared; and have directed the R. S. to transmit the same to the Editor of the "Ohio Washingtonian Organ" for publication:

October 9, 1846.

Whereas, In the course of Divine Providence we have been called upon to perform the last tribute of respect due departed worth; in consigning to the unbroken slumbers of the silent tomb our worthy and much esteemed friend and brother, Joseph Zimmerman; Therefore,

Resolved, That we cherish his memory as a Son of Temperance—a man of strict moral habits, who, by his Christian department in life did secure, and in death retain, the esteem and respect of all who had the honor of his acquaintance.

Resolved, That as a Son of Temperance he was noble, dignified, and watchful, and earnest in ruling his spirit, by which he kept unsullied, on his part, the reputation of the Sons of Temperance.

Further, Resolved, That we deeply and sincerely deplore the circumstances which called us together, and found us mingling our sorrowstricken feelings with those of his sick, broken hearted widow. And while he is permitted to join the Great Grand Division on high, and mingle his aspirations with the just and perfect, let us be inspired with a laudable zeal to excel in those virtuous principles of benevolence, which have for their object the melioration of the condition of the children of men, and our conscientious regards for her, whom our brother has left with us.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be published in the Ohio Washtonian Organ;—one copy left with the widow, and one forwarded to the parents of the deceased.

By an act of the Division, the R. S. was requested to ask the Editor of the Organ to request Papers of Springfield, Clark county, and also papers of Carlisle Pennsylvania, to copy (if consistent.)

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

What is true Religion?

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1: 27.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." He that loveth not his brother abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a MURDERER; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." 1 John 3: 14, 15. This is so plain that it needs no further elucidation; if we love the brethren we know, that we have passed from death unto life, and as a matter of due course the practicable part of religion will follow, namely: "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." But on the other hand if the professor of religion does not love his brethren and sisters, but hatred of the deepest dye is rankling in his breast, towards but a single brother, you can at once conclude there is some deception in the profession, and instead of finding religion pure and undefiled, you will find hypocricy the ruling passion of an incarnate devil, or at least a very close approximation to one.

Claiming the privilege for a short time, of designating these characters by the name above mentioned, I shall proceed to unfold some of his secret and overt machinations.—It may be well to premise that these hypocrites are in partnership with the devil. Satan sometimes assumes the garb of an angel of light to accomplish his base designs, and sometimes he gets men and women to assist him to do his dirty work. Such are those who can shout and praise God with one breath, and slander their brethren and sisters with the next; they cannot sing, or pray before some of their brethren, and if they are already on their way to the prayer-meeting, and accidentally learn that one of the brethren or sisters will be there, whom they hate, they will turn and go home again. Do not all see that this is not religion? It is the spirit of the devil, namely, hatred. It has its source in hell!—Truly, such can say we know that we are born of the devil, because we hate the brethren. Shame on such barefaced hypocricy! Shame on such meanness! The Heathen would blush to act thus. All this shows a want of charity (love) which is an essential thing for a Christian to have. "Charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Envy and ambition are the leading features of the hypocrite, he must be puffed up, or he gets envious of the true Christian, and this envy shows itself in hatred towards those they envy. But the love of Christ in the soul envieth not, and "is not puffed up." "Charity suffereth long and is kind." "Love (charity) thinketh no evil." And if any person thinks no evil, they will speak no evil, "for out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." But in the face of all this, there are men and women even professing godliness, (but not in possession of it,) constantly both thinking and speaking lies about their brethren and sisters; and no thoughts are too abscene, no expression too indecent for them to make against the innocent. Nor are these things confined to one neighborhood. Wherever hypocrites live you will find it so. And too often the weak, but truly pious are influenced by the hypocrite to act like him, and thus finally become one too. May the Lord save me and my faithful brethren from the deceptive, foul and cunning tongue of the hypocrite.

These things are so plain, yet so humiliating that it is with the greatest reluctance they are mentioned. But stop ye hypocrites, slanderers, backbiters! The Bible tells us all about you; the world does not persecute you. Why? Because you are like the world. Christ said to His disciples. "If ye were of the world the world would love you, but because I have chosen you out of the world, therefore, the world hateth you.

Whenever you hear a man or a woman say they can live without getting persecuted, and that a Christian will not be slandered or persecuted unless he does wrongly, mark them as steeling hypocrites. For the Bible says differently. "Yea, all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. 3: 12. Persecution will come, if it does not come from the world, it will come from hypocrites. It usually comes from both.

Dear brethren and sisters when you are persecuted, you have this to comfort you.—Your Saviour was harshly treated and persecuted; the Apostles were persecuted; all true Christians in every age have been persecuted, and you ought not expect anything better.—All that reach Heaven pass up through deep tribulation. "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth;" to teach him the vanity of earth, and draw his affections heavenward, the centre of real "friendship, love and truth."

ANTI-HYPOCRITES.

Feb. 8, 1847.

Pernicious Publications.

Why is it that not more of the public, and more especially of the religions press, is occupied in denouncing those pernicious publications which have literally deluged the country? The bad effects these novels produce on our population must be immense. In my opinion they destroy more than our temperance, benevolent and religions societies are able to build. How perverted, yea, unnatural, are the tendencies of man! Is it possible that here, in a land of Christianity, where good and useful books are equally cheap with the bad, immoral and licentious, there should be such multitudes of people who choose the latter—books that destroy every feeling of honor, humanity and virtue, in the rising generation. When we open a newspaper, we find its columns occupied with paragraphs on "daring robberies," "incendiary fires," "unprecedented rogueries," "horrible murders," "affairs of honor," and the like. What is the cause of all this? Surely not our institutions, as foreign novalists take pride in holding under our noses. Not long since I happened to look into a paper published in New York, called the National Police Gazette, where they detailed a "Great Bank Robbery" so minutely, as to describe every little process connected with the manner in which the robbers proceeded to take the impression of the key-hole, and internal structure of the lock, and how they manufactured false keys, so that any body who wishes to commit a similar crime, may know how to set to it! And reading of this kind suits the taste of our youth! In this manner they are instructed in the "mysteries of New York," and robbers and thieves are manufactured wholesale. Is it a wonder that our papers are so full of "heinous crimes?" The labors of temperance, tract and Sunday-school societies, are of little avail as long as this state of things continues.

Good people are in the habit of bewailing the great number of fellow-beings that are ruined by the monster rum! but I believe that Old Satan catches more game in our country, at the present time, with the pens of Eugene Sue, Paul de Kock, &c., than he ever did at any time with the rum-bowl. Here fictitious publications bear a great resemblance to spirituous drink: just give an unguarded individual a taste of them, and he is gone. The narrative is so fascinating, the free vent which the hero of the tale gives to his passions and desires agrees so well with the appetites of our youth, that one requires only a peep at it, and down he will go until he is beyond the reach of religion, or even morality and honor. What a responsibility the writers and venders of this trash must have upon themselves!

These novels are so plenty, and of so many different kinds, and withal so enticing, that they have charms for every class of readers, and consequently find their way into all the retreats of leisure. The man of business and the student, the grave and the gay, male and female, all seek the agreeable relaxation of a story. Here we are introduced into all kinds of society, and become familiar with the most dissolute and detestable wretches on earth. We become acquainted with the most consumate villains, and enter the haunts of the most horrible dissipation.

Some of these novels are of a historical, and others of a religious character, and are probably harmless; but I cannot think that they are useful. If we wish to see a picture of the past, we have plenty of authentic histories that record nothing but the truth; and if we choose to read religious matter, we have the Bible, and other publications that are not fictitious. But by far the greater portion of our "cheap literature," and unhappily that worst in request, is liable, in a greater or less degree, to the charge of exerting a positively pernicious influence on the mind.—What is most sought for, are those tales that have robbers, murderers, and libertines for their heroes. Why must our youth be made acquainted with the fashionable dissipation and follies of London and Paris?

The politician, as well as the Christian, ought to proclaim against these books. Education and republicanism are intimately connected. Without the one, the other must fall. But people ought to be aware that education does not consist in reading and writing alone, but morality and religion—virtue must enter the combination. Greece was learned in letters, but she fell. In the midst of the most splendid developments of genius, the eloquence of Demosthenes could not save his country, because her morals were destroyed; and these were destroyed because she had a corruptible religion in a state of corruption. Unless our population becomes virtuous, our institutions cannot stand. Look at the number of rows and mobs that destroy the peace of our larger towns and cities; and even enter our Universities, and our Halls of legislation. We have now a number of patriotic statesmen, but these will soon pass from the stage, and those that now constitute our children and our youth, will take the government into their hand. They will be made Presidents, Governors and Legislators; and what a pity if they should destroy what our forefathers have founded and cemented with their blood.

"View of the Church."

Brother Winebrenner:—

I must say, I sincerely wish that the book entitled the Brief View of the Formation, Government and Discipline of the Church of God, had never existed, not that I believe the subject treated upon in the book, to be erroneous—nor that the book in proper hands would not be a useful one—if read by candid, and unprejudiced minds: but, simply because it has fallen into the hands of some masked sectarian biggots;—who are and have been trying their strength in persuading the people who know no better that that is our "discipline"—and that we have a "discipline" but keep it in disquise!!

Now, I always denied and still deny, that such is the case. Such pranks have been played against me twice, (and I am getting tired of such unotherly complements, from men too, professing to be sent from God to preach the Gospel) once, in Mahantongo valley, Schuylkill county, last spring: and the second time, a few weeks ago in my immediate neighborhood; while I have been unable to attend to my ministerial labors, and then too, let those men meet me, and they will brother me!! Now if you, I, and the brethren of the "Church of God," are such daring, what? Why such daring hypocrites, liars and deceivers; and those persons knowing this, why, I ask, do tney brother us? Reader can you see, through such actions? In the first I cannot in the second, I think I can.

In the first place, wherein I cannot see through is this, I dont know whether those persons are so professedly ignorant! that they are not capable of discerning between the "view" of a thing (or things,) and the thing itself—and therefore confound the one, with the other; or else, they are maliciously wicked, and deceitful. Now, one or the other must certainly be true.

The second, which I said, I do know or see through is, that if it can be made appear by them, that we indeed are such characters, and they still "brother" us, the devil must necessarially be our father! and they acknowledging us as brethren must be the same—this I clearly see through. The devil is then both their and our father. Now they may take either horn of the dilemma they please. They have put themselves in, and I cannot help them out any other way, than to make right their wrongs, and "sin no more lest a worse thing come upon them." But this I fear "don't run in their family," to retract when wrong. It takes honest men at least to do that; but it appears to me, there is utterly a want of honesty in those refferred to. I rather dislike dealing thus with my fellow-men, but it appears to me to keep silence under such circumstanees would not, be virtue. It would look (to me) like conniving at wrongs—the innocent, however, are always clear.

More anon,

M. F. SNAVELY.

Perpetuity of the Church.

Mr. Editor:—

The Long existence of the Christian church, would be pronounced, upon common priciples of reasoning, impossible. She finds in every man a natural and an inveterate enemy. To encounter and overcome the unanimous hostility of the world, she boasts no political stratagem, no disciplined legions, no outward coercion of any kind. Yet her expectation is that she will live forever.

To mock this hope, and to blot out her memmorial from under Heaven, the most furious efforts of fanataeism, the most ingenious art of statesmen, the contrated strength of empires, bave been frequently and perseveringly applied. The blood of her sons and her daughters has streamed like water; the smoke of the scaffold and the stake, where they wore the crown of martyrdom in the cause of Jesus, has ascended in thick volumes to the skies. The tribes of persecution have sported over her woes,and erected monuments,as they imagined, of her perpetual ruin. But where are her tyrants and where their empires? The tyrants have long since gone to their own place; their names have descended upon the roll of infamy; their empires have passed, like shadows, over the rock, they have successfully disappeared, and left not a trace behind them.

But what became of the church? She rose from her ashes, fresh in beauty and might; celestial glory beamed around her, she dashed down the monumental marble of her foes; and they who hated her, fled before her. She has celebrated the funeral of kings and kingdoms that plotted her destruction; and, with the inscriptions of their pride has transmitted to prosperity the records of their shame. How shall this phenomena be explained? We are at the present moment, witnesses of the fact but who can unfold the system? The book of truth and life has made our wonder cease.—"The Lord her God in the midst of her is mighty."

His presence is a fountain of health, and His protection a "wall of fire." He has betrothed her in eternal covenant to Himself. Her living heed, in whom she lives, is above, and His quickening spirit shall never depart from her. Armed with divine virtue, His Gospel, secret, silent, unobserved, enters the hearts of men, and sets up an everlasting kingdom. It eludes all the vigilence and baffles all the power of the adversary. Bars and bolts, are no obsticles to its approach; bonds, tortures, and death, cannot extinguish its influence. Let no man's heart tremble, then because of fear. Let no man despair (in these days of rebuke and blasphemy) of the Christian cause. The ark is launched, she rides upon the floods; the tempest sweeps along the deep; the billows break over her on every side; but Jehovah Jesus has promised to conduct her in safety to the Haven of peace. She cannot be lost unless the pilot perish.

More Good News.

York county, Pa.,
February 8, 1847.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I embrace the present opportunity of informing the friends of Zion, through the medium of your paper, that God is at present reviving His work in a powerful manner among us. We commenced a protracted meeting at the town of Newberry, on the 30th of January last, which is still in progress. The meeting from the commencement was attended with a mighty ingathering of people from all quarters; so much so, that the house, though large, was literally crammed both day and night. There were visible omens of good, the first evening. The fallow ground of their hearts appeared to have been broken up at the revival at the River school-house, where many a heart was broken by the hammer of God's word, and where many a dead sinner was resuscitated and made alive by the listing wind of the spirit of God that breathed upon the slain. A deep feeling pervaded the assemblies; but none yielded until Monday evening, when the Heavens gathered blackness, and the power of God in copious showers came down on them. Several came forward and asked an interest in the prayers of God's people, and two of them found the Lord precious to their souls. Since we have had mourners every night, as high as nine in an evening. Some twelve or fifteen have launched into liberty, passed from death unto life, and from the power of Satan to God; and scores more are under conviction so pungent, that some of them are afraid to get on their knees for fear they cannot rise. The quietness of the citizens have been so much disturbed by the cries of sinners and the shouts of saints, that some of them are getting wrothy. Old Beelzebnb is getting cross, because his kingdom is tottering and falling; for since God began to visit this region with an out-pouring of His spirit, about forty souls have professed to know the Lord, and the change is evident from the holy and happy effects it has produced. The hearts and lives of many in Fishing Creek Valley, have realized the truth of the vision of Isaiah, when taken with a prophetic glance, down the vista of time, to the happy effects produced by the faithful preaching of the Gospel, this howling "wilderness has been made to bud and blossom as the Rose of Sharon. Instead of thorns, has sprung up the fiir-tree, and instead of the briers, has come up the myrtle, which shall be to the Lord as a name or a sign that shall never be cut off." We have seen men of intemperate habits become temperate and chaste; we have seen men of profane habits incline to the reverential use of language, and devotional traits of character; we have seen families transformed into the image of God by the renovating influence of the Gospel of God's dear Son, and the prospects are still brightening for better times. May the Lord continue to work among the people, and snatch them as brands from the everlasting burnings, and preserve those that are saved from the paths of the Destroyer, by the words of his lips, is my prayer. Pray for us.

Nothing more at present, but

Remain yours fraternally,

JOSIAH H. HURLEY.

P. S.—Since the above was written, five more have found the Lord precious to their souls.

A Child Born Eighty-five Years Old!

Since the revival at Newberry, an old lady, eighty-five years of age, whom Satan had bound so many years, become alarmed on account of her sins, and, though tottering over the grave, has, in her old age, launched into liberty, and been born again, not of corruptible seed, but of the spirit of God.

Revival at York Haven.

The Lord is also working at York Haven, that little Sodom. where, in days gone by, they had no relish for the Word; but many are now melted down—the houses are filled—people are inquiring after the Lord—four or five were converted within a few days.

A word to All.

A careful reading of the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians would be of great importance to many professors of religion of the present day. It must be remembered, however, while perusing it, that the original word (Agape) means love, or affection, which is the true meaning of charity, as will be plainly seen by a reference to the German Testament, which has the word, Liebe. Read it, friends. And carry its teaching out in your conduct and conversation.

Feb. 8, 1847.

Letter from Elder George U. Harn.

PITTSBURG, February 8, 1847.

DEAR SIR:—

I arrived here on Thursday morning about 5 o'clock, in tolerable good health, after the most disagreeable journey I have travelled during the whole of my ministerial life. This was owing to ill health, and the extreme inclemency of the weather in the mountains.

On Wednesday we rode about twenty miles in continual suspence of our limbs or lives, by the expectation of the upsetting of the stage, in consequence of the ice in the road.

The state of the "little flock" here is equally as good, if not better, than I expected to find it. I am now more encouraged to believe that things will take a rise here, than I have ever been hitherto. I do not, by any means, think it right to neglect this place if some one of our young brethren can summons religion and courage enough to undergo the self-denial necessary to labor in it for the coming year. As for myself, I do not expect to remain longer than some time in April; when, the Lord permitting, I expect to go to Illinois and Iowa. I hope, therefore, the "Board of Missions," or the Standing Committee of the East Pa. Eldership, will see something to it.

As regards my tour through the Eastern churches, I have only to say, that I plainly perceived there has been a considerable falling off in the membership of many of them within the last two years. Many persons, who were bidding fair to be useful in time, and happy in eternity, have deserted to the foe and enemy of the Cross, while others have become so remarkable fond of schism, that they can no longer walk with their old brethren, as good or better than themselves. I suppose the greatest bane to pure religion in the present age is, this foul spirit of division that stalks abroad and runs at large almost unbridled.

While this is the case with many, there are but few conversions.

Also, there appears to be a growing indifference about attending to the ordinances of the Lord's house, and I also fear about preaching them up by the ministry. Once there was a pleasure and delight in preaching and observing them. But I lament to say, that I learned in several instances, old and long-standing churches had not attended to Feet-washing and the Lord's supper for a year, except at camp-meeting. What can we look for, under such circumstances, but a falling off, coldness and division?

I have always believed, and do still believe, that a regular observance of the ordinances of God is essential to a healthy state of a church. And when ministers grow slack in upholding them, it indicates a want of faith in the potency of what they profess to believe in.

While this is the state of things in many of the Eastern churches, we have also to lament we are not alone. I perceive by the reports of nearly all of the Baptist associations, that the same state of moral blast has been withering many of the most prosperous plants of the garden of the Lord. In many instances they report a great falling off, and but very few additions, and in some cases scarcely any addition in whole associations.

Under these appalling and afflicting circumstances, it becomes Gospel ministers,—

1. To acknowledge the facts to the church and world; for to conceal is dissimulation.

2. To inquire for the main causes of this state of humiliating circumstances. Is there not something radically wrong in the means and efforts used of late years? Has not the war spirit contributed largely to these state of things? And ought not the "friends of peace," every where, to devise and put on foot some plan to induce our rulers to desist from further hostilities against a sister republic? Why should the feelings of the whole civilized world be outraged any longer, and religion driven from the land by the demon of war, and the prevalency of infidelity, as a natural consequence! Also, is there not a croaking disposition to ape our neighbors, and compromise the claims of the Gospel with those who are unwilling to obey its precepts? While, however, I lament that this is the state of things in the East, more I think, than in the West, in proportion to the age and numerical strength of both sections of the church, I am also pleased that some congregations indicated the prospect of a better state of things in the future. Among the rest, the pastorial charge of Elder McFADDEN in Harrisburg. I learned that this congregation had become very illy attended; but I was gratified to see him have quite a crowded house of feeling and attentive hearers. Though I never had the pleasure of delivering a message, in the form of a sermon, to the church in Harrisburg, before my late visit to the East, I was much pleased with the Christian courtesy shown me, both in the pulpit and in the family circle, during my stay among them. I would also commend their liberality, as manifested toward me, at two public collections in the congregation. Some others, who received as much of my labors, and appeared as anxious for them, could pay no heed to this part of Christian duty, though they knew me to be dependant on those for whom I preached for my secular remuneration. Yea, they also seemed delighted to learn from me that I had at last summoned courage enough to venture, as a missionary, to the "far West;" but did they remember what makes a missionary go forth with courage, and believe those he leaves behind sincerely care for his welfare? Yea, some did, and also individual assurance to this end has been cheering; but others did not. Sir, I have always purposely avoided saying but little on these points, but a deep sense of duty has pointed me to this statement; not that I have fears for myself, for I have learned both to abound and suffer need; but these things lead me to inquire, do men indeed feel interested for the cause they profess to love?

Fraternally yours,

GEORGE U. HARN.

Letter from Brother John Ries.

MIDDLETOWN, BUTLER COUNTY, OHIO, February 7, 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Thanks to a kind Providence, we are all well; and I hope you and yours may enjoy the same blessing.

From the scriptures we learn that, "there is one body, one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Eph, 4: 4, 5. So it was in Apostolic times, and so it was intended, it should always remain; but we see it not so now. Thence I must contend for scriptural order: and when I speak of, or against sectarian dogmas and usages, I have the founding and discipline of the church, and not the piety of sects or individuals in view; for individuals may, or might become pious, moral and good meaning, whether they be Roman Catholic, Quaker, or of any other sectary: But this, (here and there a pious individual) brings not the church into Apostolic order, so that all, in every place, be united in one, as in the Apostolic age; if it even were possible that all sectarians could or would become pious, or, if they even were so; still that would not bring the church into scriptural order.

Surely if persons can become pious under sectarian teaching, much more so under scriptural; if some sectarians do become pious, and live a moral life, that does not bring the church into a scriptural state or order: and we must remember, that, after a person is connected with a sect for a time, he becomes so sectarianized, so selfish, prejudiced and bigotted, that his character is FAR from the scriptural standard of piety; that is, universal love or philantrophy, whatever his pretentions may be; for no one is truly pious in the scripture sense, (and this is the only right sense,) but he who, like Christ Jesus the Saviour, can and does, with his philantrophic soul, infold ALL the human family in his arms of compassion and love: this no sectarian can do, for in the very nature of things, he can only love his own party supremely, or he would not uphold it.

Even at first, persons are introduced into a selfish system, (for all sectarian systems are necessarially selfish,) and they need be connected with a sect but a short time, until they are fully traditionized to sectarian selfishness. Many persons, at the time they join a sect, feel a universal love, and they think they have entered the "Church of God," but soon they feel differently; for they soon hear their sectarian brethren speak unkind against others, and favorable of their own ism, which will abate their love, and fill them with prejudice in favor of the sect they were converted to; and it cannot be otherwise in the very nature of things; for as long as there are sects, there is selfishness and bigotry reigning in the breasts of their adherents.

It is now at this time the duty of every proclaimer of the Gospel, who knows and believes the truth; to gather into one, all persons in every place, as speedily as possible. Then, after the people are thus gathered and united, according to the Gospel, when they are brought into the church by the one same faith, and the one same baptism, then they can be scripturally taught and disciplined. This is what every teacher of the Gospel ought now to do. It is a glorious philantrophic work, wherein all good men necessarially ought to be engaged: for they who bring people together, to agree in "the truth," are called peace makers, by the Saviour, and He says, "they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 5: 9.

The man who does not understand the Gospel, cannot obey it—and does not believe it, nor in its author; a man can only obey as far as he believes; and is sanctified only so far as he obeys. In other words. A man can only obey the Gospel as far as he understands it. A wicked sin-loving man may, in one sense, understand the Gospel, but having no relish for its duties, he resists its claims. Rom. 2: 18.

No more at present, but remain yours,

JOHN RIES.

Letter from Brother J. Strawbridge.

SHIPPENSBURG, February, 1847.

DEAR BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

If the following letter should be deemed worthy of a space in the columns of your valuable periodical, you can give it publicity when a sufficiency of room can be procured.

The CHURCH ADVOCATE should be in the hands of every member of the "Church of God." It truly merits their most liberal support. May its circulation and patronage soon be as co-extensive other religious papers, and through its powerful influence, and through the dissemination of religious truth, prove to be an inestimable blessing to the religious world.

The great apostle Paul, in addressing his second epistle to his Corinthian brethren, (12th chap. 2d and 4th verses) says: "I knew a man in Christ, about fourteen years ago, whether in the body, I cannot tell, or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth; such an one caught up to the third heaven."

We infer from the language of this devoted man of God, that Heaven, or Paradise, is a place of indiscribable happiness. It is said in the scriptures of divine truth, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him." The language of the pious Psalmist is as follows: "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God! There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High." John says, "And the city had no need of the sun neither of the moon to shine in it; for the glory of God did light it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

It is a heart-cheering thought to the weary pilgrim on his journey to fairer climes on high, that there remaineth a rest for him—that in the wide realms of unchanging felicity, he shall rejoice in anthems of redeeming love, saying: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Blessing and glory, power and might be unto our God, for ever and ever. Amen."

The humble disciple of our Lord Jesus has many encouraging promises left him upon the pages of sacred record. "The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive, and he shall be blessed upon the earth. God is his refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

The Christian with an eye of faith looks far beyond the transient and fleeting shores of times for the reward of his labors; he knows that in due season he shall reap if he faint not. He ever trusteth in Him, "in whom we have redemption through His blood the forgivness of our sins, according to the riches of His grace." "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather togather in one, all things in Christ, both which are in Heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him."

The meek and faithful follower of the Lord often wishes to depart and be with Christ which is much better. He has learned, through the history of his own experience, that this vain world is no friend of grace to help him on to God. This earth is not his abiding place. He is seeking a building, a house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens; where he shall be gathered with all the finally ransomed of the Lord of hosts--with the "general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in Heaven, and to God, the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect. And to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than of Abel." "Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and Godly fear.

We soon, and perhaps very soon, shall be done with all the things that are sublunary in their nature, and these bodies encircled in the mantle of death, and our spirits borne to another world. Death, the king of monsters, is a welcome messenger to the humble child of God: with Christian resignation he exclaims, "I'll gladly go with thee."

Your humble fellow Christian,

JOSEPH STRAWBRIDGE, Jr.

Letter from Elder J. Glenn.

Greene township, Indiana co., Pa., January 27, 1847.

Dear Brother Winebrenner:—

I embrace this present opportunity of writing to inform you and all to whom this epistle may come, of some of my travels in this western country.

I left my home on the 2d of December last, intending to visit several of the churches in the West. With difficulty I arrived at old Harmony on the 5th. From thence brother Barkey and myself went to the neighborhood of Muddy creek, where we commenced a meeting. The people came out, the prospects were favorable, and one professed to find pardon on the conditions of the Gospel. Others felt the need of a Saviour, notwithstanding we had some opponents who, to their own shame, endeavored to disturb the meeting.

On Sabbath evening, after preaching by brother Wertz, we gave an invitation for mourners to come out as subjects of prayer. While thus engaged, there was a man opposed us publicly under the pretence of a seeker. He, however, admitted the Saviour might be found in the grove, or in the closet, or anywhere, hut did not know the mourner's bench, or what you may please to call it, was one place among the rest. Such was his consistency and superstition, and after all this, to our astonishment, he professed to be a Christian and belonged to a church. One of those old hope-so-churches. O, how long will men continue to be so inconsistent with themselves, and stand in the way of those who might do good and be useful! The Baptist brethren requested a sermon on the three ordinances of God's house, which was acceeded to by brother Wertz. After service brother Barkey and myself were invited home by one of our Pedo-Baptist friends, who treated us very kindly. But we soon got into an argument with him on the perpetuity of the Jewish church and its ordinances. He is a man of general information, and is reasonable in his arguments. We got along with him with satisfaction. He thinks we can do good there.

We left there and went to Even township. I preached once there, and from that we went to Rockland, and held a meeting over the Sabbath. The prospects were good there.—We attended to the ordinances on Sabbath evening, and had the Cumberlands and Methodists to unite with us. If the meeting had been continued, I think, there would have been much good done there. The brethren were very much revived. May the good Lord bless all the dear little flock in that place.

From there we come and commeneed a meeting near Harmony. The prospects were dull. The people did not turn out to meeting as we desired, yet the brethren seem to be in a tolerably good state there. They have their oppositions to war against, yet still they seem to be going on. May the good Lord also abundantly bless them, and make them all to increase more and more. After this we held a meeting at Slippery Rock over two Sabbaths. At the commencement there was quite an interesting time. Some found it good to attend the meeting, and gave their hearts to God.—Thus they found pardon and acceptance with the Lord.

The brethren and sisters are generally zealous in the cause. May the good Lord bless all His dear little ones throughout this western country!

I came to Harmony, from there to Pittsburg, and from there to Betheny, where I preached twice. From there I came home. From the last information the brethren are all doing well. No more at present, but remain yours in love,

J. GLENN.

Letter from Elder Henry Murray.

Wayne county, Ohio, February 5, 1847.

Brother John Winebrenner:—

I take my seat this afternoon, to drop a few lines for the Advocate, which I trust will be read with some considerable interest by the readers of the Advocate. The scriptures say, "That good news from a far country is like cold water to a thirsty soul." I trust I have some of the best kind of news to send to the readers of the Advocate, which is as follows: That sinners are turning to God, and that the cause of God seems to be on the march in this western country.

I would inform you that I commenced a protracted meeting in Smithville, on the 26th of December, and protracted the meeting until the 4th of January, during which time we had quite an interesting time. The little church at Smithville was much revived: a goodly number came forward during the meeting and presented themselves as subjects of prayer, and seven out of that number professed to find peace with God. A number more, in my judgment, were laboring under serious feeling; but in consequence of having no help, with the exception of the brethren in Smithville, and having preached twelve times during the meeting, I was considerably worn down, and therefore was obliged to bring the meeting to a close. I baptized two of the converts and then came home and rested a few days.

I left home on the 11th of January and went to my first appointment on the Stark circuit, it being a distance of 28 miles, got to brother Stump's just as the day was disappearing.—After having warmed myself and got some refreshment, I went to the school-house, a distance of half a mile, and preached from 1 Thess. 2: 14. After preaching we proceeded to organize a church, of eleven members, according to the Gospel order. Next day I left them in good spirits, and my prayer to God is, that the little church in the neighborhood of brother Stump's, may be like the church at Thessalonica, whose fame had spread far and wide.

From brother Stump's I psssed round the circuit; came home on the 22d of January and commenced a protracted meenting in Moreland on the 23d of the month above mentioned. The preachers present in the commencement of the meeting were brothers J. Neil and D. Gill. Brother Megrew was with us two nights and one day--preached once for us; in consequenee of bad health, could not preach more. Brother Neil left on the 25th and brother Gill on the 29th. Since that time I have been protracting the meeting myself, and expect to be with the brethren until Sabbath next; then I expect to leave home.—The result of the meeting thus far has been pretty good. The church in Moreland has been somewhat revived. There have been nine forward to be prayed for, and six out of that number have professed to find peace with God. On last evening we attended the ordinances of God's house, such as the Washing of the saints feet and the Breaking of bread. We had quite a soul cheering time. After which there were six united with the church, according to the Gospel order, two of whom I also baptized by burying the whole body under the water, which undoubtedly was the ancient mode of baptism. O, may God help my brethren with myself to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Pray for unworthy me.

Nothing more at present,

But remain, your brother and Fellow-laborer in the Gospel,

HENRY MURRAY.

Letter from Elder T. Hickernell.

Zanesfield, Logan county, Ohio, February 9, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

This is to inform you, since I wrote last, I have attended several large meetings and had some refreshings from the presence of the Lord. At the large meeting in the Vermillion church four or five were forward to be prayed for, and one or two professed a hope in Christ. One or two also, were converted in the neighborhood of Lexington. I heard by brother Neil, that they were receiving a refreshing at Moreland, Wayne county. I also had a two days meeting in the neighborhood of brother Jacob Pathamore's, Union county, Ohio: the prospects there, were more favorable than any where else. This will come on my circuit in the ensuing year. I have not time to write any more at present as I have twenty-five miles to go to day to an appointment.—Give me credit for the monies for the five new subscribers that I sent you and oblige.

Yours truly,

T. HICKERNELL.

Sabbath-school at Washington, Lancaster county, Pa.

February 15, 1847.

Dear Brother:—

Being absent from home a few weeks, I received a letter from a dear friend, who informed me that the Sabbath-school in the church, at Washington, had commenced some eight or ten days ago; and I must say that I felt rejoiced when I read it.

I have made several attempts, during last summer and fall, to stir up some of the brethren and sisters to get a school started in the brick church; but all seemed to be in vain, until sister Catharine Kauffman went to work and went forth. like an officer on duty, in this good and blessed cause; and it appears that her labors were not in vain; for I understand that there were sixty-three scholars present on the first Sabbath. May the Lord abundantly bless the school! And I hope and pray that sister Catharine may in no wise loose her reward.

I told her not long ago that if she would take charge of the work, it would go on. And, moreover, dear brethren, it is indeed the case, and I have frequently seen it so, that in some cases, one good and faithful sister can do more good than twenty lazy brethren!!

Let us then pray that the Lord may bless the offiers, teachers and pupils of this institution, and that we may all travel together up through the delightsome land by the valley of mulberry trees, till we shall arrive in the city, where we will worship our God in peace.

Yours, in love,

ANDREW J. KAUFFMAN.

Letter from Elder E. D. Wertz.

Old Harmony, Butler county, Pa., February 12, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

In reading the last of your columns, I am happy to see that the Lord is reviving His work in different parts of God's vineyard, and in particular that we have good tidings from Ohio. May the good Lord give His faithful churches refreshing seasons from His rich and glorious presence, for we are needy!

"—— Lord, revive us,

All our help must come from thee.

I have nothing very particular to report or give, yet we hope a better day is coming for us. I have been in Venango for some weeks, and not altogether in vain; some five or more got religion. In that number is one old sinner of Rockland. A number more have been out to seek for religion—almost persuaded to give their hearts to God. May we yet have a glorious havest time in that part of God's vineyard!

In coming to old Harmony, and entering the house of A. Shantz, I found four of the family sick. From here I went to brother J. Latshaw, and found S. E. Latshaw also taken sick. In Harmony numbers are sick with a bad disease. They are brought very low in a short time. O may this affliction learn the people of this place to fear and love God.

I shall go from this on my way to Pittsburg, to comply with G. U. Harn's request, in holding a meeting in that place.

We want a good number of books. We hope you have got them there. Give us your prayers.

No more at present.

But remember a lover

Of the cause of Immanuel,

E. D. WERTZ.

☞ We have just heard good news from Shippensburg. The Lord is reviving His work among His people. Particulars in our next.

Letter from Brother J. R. Machlan.

NEWBERRY TOWNSHIP, YORK CO., PA., February 23, 1847.

BROTHER J. WINEBRENNER:—

I wish to give you and the readers of the ADVOCATE an account of the Newberry protracted meeting, that commenced last Saturday evening three weeks, and closed last Sunday evening, and resulted in the conversion of between twenty-five and thirty souls.

On the second evening of the meeting two professed conversion; on the third night several were forward, and some professed to find peace. After meeting was over, a few of us brethren were invited to go and see and converse with an old Presbyterian lady, aged eighty-four years; and about eleven o'clock the Lord blessed her. She was surprised to find that religion was so simple. She praised the Lord aloud for His goodness and mercies to an aged sinner like her. From that time the work progressed with increasing power, and many were awakened to see that without an interest in the blood of Christ, they would be lost. So powerfully were some wrought on, that they took their hats and fled from the house.

We had the ordinances of the Lord's house last Saturday evening, when the converts nearly all communed. On Sabbath morning we had an interesting time at experience meeting, when some united with the "Church of God." A solemn feeling seemed to prevail from the commencement of the meeting.—And I trust that we may yet see more fruit brought forth, and especially of the labors at the late meeting. Pray for us.

J. R. MACHLAN.

NEWS DEPARTMENT.

Newspapers.—A table, comparing the number of newspapers with the amount of population in each country, has recently been published, which, if accurate in its statement, shows the people of the U. States to be the most enlightened under the sun. Newspapers are the cheapest of all kinds of literature, and few that can read at all, are willing to be deprived of this source of amusement and instruction. Therefore, the comparison of the newspapers and the population of a country may considered as a fair measure of its intelligence. The United States, with a population of 19,000,000, has 1,250 newspapers, or about 15,112 to each newspaper; Great Britain and Ireland with a population of 29,000,000, has only 480 newspapers, or 60, 416 to each journal; France, with 34,000,000 inhabitants, has 250 newspapers, or 136,000 persons to to each; Spain, with 14,000,000, has only 12 newspapers, or 1,166,000 persons to each, the least in proportion of any other country; Russia has 15,000,000 inhabitants, 288 newspapers; Holland has 3,633,000 inhabitants, 150 newspapers; Belgium has 3,250,000 inhabitants, 62 newspapers; Denmark has 2,000,000 inhabitants, 80 newspapers; Switzerland has 2,100,000 inhabitants, 30 newspapers; portugal has 3,800,000 inhabitants, 17 newspapers: Russia in Europe has 42,000,000 inhabitants, 84 newspapers; Austria has 33,000,000 inhabitants 91 newspapers.

Oppression of Ireland.—Much has been said upon this painful topic, and the poverty, ignorance and general wretchedness of the mass of the population has been traced to different sources. Perhaps, however, the following estimates may expose one of these evils:

"The London Standard says, it has been calculated that the Romish Clergy in Ireland receive annually for confessions the sum of $1,350,000; for christenings, $150,000; for unctions and burials, $270,000; for marriages, $1,350,000; for prayer out of purgatory, $450,000; for collections at chapels, $2,410,000; for curate collections, $101,000; for Government grant at Maynooth College, $45,000." Total, $6,135,550.

The State Printing.—On Tuesday last being the day allotting the State Printing, under the lowest-bidder system, at 12 o'clock the members of the Senate were introduced, and the Convention of both Houses was organized for this purpose. The bids were required to be made at the rate per cent. below the prices fixed in the State Printing bill, and were as follows:

ENGLISH PRINTING.

J. M. G. Lescure, - -	65 per cent.
Emanuel Guyer, - -	62½ "
John P. Rutherford, -	61 "
I. G. M'Kinley, - -	60 "
Theo. Fenn, - - -	56 "

GERMAN PRINTING.

John F. Keepers, - -	55¼ "
Jacob Baab, - - -	55 "
I. G. M'Kinley, - -	51 "
Charles Swartz, - -	50¼ "
Geo. Bergner, - -	56¼ "
Valentine Hummel, -	33 "

J. M. G. LESCURE being the lowest bidder for the English printing; and BERGNER for the German; it was allotted accordingly.

Manufacture of Gun Cotton.—The Courier des Etats Unis states that a house in Philadelphia has announced that it has purchased from Prof. Schonbein, the earliest inventor of gun cotton, the exclusive right to manufacture this cotton in the U. States. This house adds, that towards the middle of February they will be ready to supply all orders which shall be addressed to them. A paper calculates that the consumption of this cotton will be for one year in this country at least as much as 250,000 bales.

Churches in New York City.—The number of churches in each denomination is as follows:—African Union 1—Baptist 23—Congregational 5—Dutch Reformed 17—Friends 4—Jewish 9—Lutheran 3—Methodist Episcopal 27—Methodist Protestant 1—Presbyterian 31—Reformed Presbyterian 2—Associate Reformed 2—Associate Presbyterian 2—Protestant Episcopal 37—Roman Catholic 16—Unitarian 2—Universalist 4—Welsh 2—Miscellaneous 18—Total 206.

The Anti-Renters Pardoned.—The Governor of New York has pardoned the anti-renters, who set the laws at defiance in that State. Dr. Boughton, Van Steinburgh, Earl and O'Connor have been pardoned but not restored to citizenship, while the others are fully restored.

Pennsylvania Railroad.—The U. S. Gazette of Tuesday last says:—"We understand that the Mayor of this city, yesterday, subscribed for thirty thousand shares of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and paid the first instalments, viz:—$150,000. This, with the individual subscription, will enable the Commissioners to apply to the Governor for letters patent, and then the stockholders will elect a Board of Directors, and the work will be entered upon."

Manufacturers in the South.—From an article in the Tuscaloosa Monitor, we learn that there are eighteen cotton factories in Georgia. It is thought that there is a capital of a million and a half invested in these factories, and that they pay a dividend of from 18 to 24 per cent. on this capital. There are, besides, some other similar works in course of erection.

The Native American Convention.—Which met in this borough on Monday last nominated EMANUEL C. REIGERT, Esq., of Lancaster city, for Governor, and Capt. ROBERT H. MORTON, of Harrisburg, for Canal Commissioner. Mr. Reigert had verry little oppositon and Capt. Morton was nominated by acclamation.

Conviction of Haggerty.—John Haggerty, of Lancaster, who was charged with the murder of Melchoir Fordney and Catarine Tripple, on the 17th of October 1846, has been convicted of murder on the first degree, and sentence of death was passed upon him, by the Hon. ELLIS LEWIS.

Perpetual Imprisonment in Wisconsin.—A bill has passed the Assembly of the Wisconsin Legislaturn to substitute perpetual imprisonment for capital punishment in that State. The same bill has been ordered to a third reading in the Council by a vote of 7 to 6.

Decision.—We see it stated in several exchanges that the Post Master General has decided that printers can send their bills to their subscribers, free of postage.

Scotland.—The distress in Scotland seems scarcely less than in Ireland, and earnest appeals are made for assistance.

☞ There are seven Cotton Factories in Allegheny city, opposite Pittsburg, which consume about 5,000,000 pounds of cotton every year, which at ten cents per pound, costs $500,000. The manufactured articles produced are worth about $1,000,000, thus leaving a created capital of half a million of dollars.

☞ On Friday week, the House of Representatives of Delaware passed an act for the abolition of Slavery in that State. The vote stood 12 to 8.

☞ Fresh Shad sold at Washington, D. C., last week, at 25 cents each, and were plenty.

☞ Ice broken, and ice melted, represent the two kinds of repentance.—Nevins.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Luck.

Rev. H. W. BEECHER says in one of his lectures:—

"I may here, as well as any where, impart the secret of good and bad luck. There are men, who supposing Providence to have an implacable spite against them, bemoan in the poverty of a wretched old age the misfortunes of their lives. Luck forever ran against them and for others. One with a good profession, lost his luck in the river, where he idled away his time a fishing when he should have been in the office. Another, with a good trade, perpetually burnt up his luck by his hot temper, which provoked his employers to leave him. Another, with a lucrative business, lost his luck by amazing diligence at every thing but his business. Another, who steadily followed his trade, as steadily followed his bottle. Another, who was honest and constant at his work erred by perpetual misjudgment;—he lacked discretion. Hundreds lose their luck by endorsing; by sanguine speculations; by trusting fraudulent men; and by dishonest gains. A man never has good luck who has a bad wife. I never knew an early rising, hard-working, prudent man, careful of his earnings, and strictly honest, who complained of bad luck. A good character, good habits and iron industry are impregnable to the assaults of all the ill luck that fools ever dreamed of. But when I see a tatterdemalion, creeping out of a grocery late in the afternoon, with his hands stuck in his pockets, the rim of his hat turned up and the crown knocked in, I know he has bad luck,—for the worst of all luck is to be a sluggard, a knave, or a tippler."

Heating Rooms.--Seasonable advice.

There is a great deal of science in the heating of rooms; and in Philadelphia, where in almost every house anthracite coal is used, it is a matter of much importance that a knowledge of the proper mode should be widely extended. Upon it the purity of the atmosphere and the health of the inmates of the house depend. On this point the following extract from a scientific journal contains some hints which may be useful:

"Rooms heated with anthracite coal, and rooms heated with close stoves in which wood is burnt, have very dry atmospheres. The use of water in such rooms is very congenial to health, but the water should not be placed in an iron or tin vessel upon the stove, for the reason that it will undergo that degree of heat which will make its vapors offensive and injurious to breathe. It is injurious to the human system to breathe putrid water vapors of this kind, as it is to breathe vapors from stagnant ponds in hot weather. If water is used upon a stove, an iron pan should be made use of, and this filled with dry sand; on the sand set an earthen bowl filled with clean water, which should be changed twice a day, and the bowl washed and kept as clean as if used for a drinking vessel. Where hard coal is burned in a grate, a glass globe suspended in the room, filled with clean pure water, and as the heated air rises to the top of the room, it will steadily evaporate the water and moisten the dry and heated air. Persons who prefer the atmosphere of salt water vapor, can add salt to the water, or if they prefer an aromatic atmosphere, they can add Cologne water, or any other perfume which they prefer. It is as important to have clean air for breathing as to have clean water for drinking. Basement rooms, where hard coal is burnt, should be frequently ventilated. Small children accustomed to stay in basement rooms, find a bad air near the floor. This air should be removed by allowing the doors to be opened frequently to let in fresh air. A little care in these matters will tend wonderfully to comfort and enjoyment."

Little Emma.

Mr. Editor—Being a constant reader of your excellent paper, and ever interested in that department devoted especially to children, I take pleasure in contributing for it an account of one affecting and happy death which took place in our village a few days since.

Little Emma was ten years old. She had been for two or three years a constant scholar in the Sabbath-school. Opposite her name, in her teacher's class-book, every Sabbath, was the number of a book noted —taken, returned.

She was taken sick. Day after day she was confined to her little bed. The disease assumed a more malignant form. The skill of her physician was baffled.—The anxiety of her parents for her recovery was written in their countenance.—Little Emma discovered it, and asked her kind mother—"Do you think that I'll get well?"

Her mother replied: "I cannot tell you, my dear child; you are very sick."

"I know I am," little Emma said; "I know, too, if I do not recover, I have a home in heaven, which my dear Saviour prepared for me."

The disease was accomplishing its design upon her little form. She grew more feeble, but her hopes grew brighter and brighter, and her conversation more heavenly. Of death she spoke without a tear —of her Saviour with emotions of love.

"I know," she would say, "that he died for me."

One of more mature years could not have entertained clearer views of the great plan of salvation, and brighter dreams of heaven.

The last day of her stay upon earth was at hand. She said—"Mother! I know that I never can get well. I soon must die!"

Her mother asked, "Do you want to die and part with father, mother, brothers, and sisters, or live?"

"Oh, mother!" she replied, "I love you much, my father, brothers and sisters much, my Sabbath-school, playmates and companions, but I love my dear Saviour more, and with him I desire to be."

She was sensible of her approaching dissolution, and called her parents, and brothers and sisters around her bedside. Taking each, separately, by the hand, she asked their forgiveness, wherein she had wronged them, and said, "I forgive you."

After she had thus forgiven, and asked the forgiveness of her family, she took her mother affectionately by the hand, and requested her to distribute her toys and articles of dress to this and that member of the family. Having disposed of her little possessions, she said:

"Now I am prepared to die. I never more shall meet you upon earth—never more go to Sabbath-school. I am done, soon, with the pain of this life. I go to meet my dear Saviour. My desire is that you may so live as to meet me in heaven. Farewell."

Thus ended the life of little Emma.—Although young, she left many evidences of her acceptance at the throne of mercy.

"She knew in whom she trusted."

Yours respectfully,

S. S.

Origin of various Articles of Food and Luxury.

The potato is a native of South America, and is still found in Chili, Peru, and Monte Video. In its native state, the roots are small and bitter. The first mention of it by European writers is in 1588. It is now spread over the world. Wheat and rye originated in Tartary and Siberia, where they are still indigenous. The only country where oats is found wild is in Abyssinia, thence may be considered a native. Maize or Indian corn is a native of Mexico, and was unknown in Europe until the discoveries of Columbus. The bread fruit tree is a native of the South Sea Island, particularly of Otacite. Tea is found a native nowhere except in China and Japan, from which country the world is supplied. The cocoa nut is a native of most equinoctial countries, and is one of the most valuable trees, as food, clothing and shelter are afforded by it. Coffee is a native of Arabia Felix, but is now spread into both the East and West Indies. The best coffee is brought from Mocha, in Arabia, where about fourteen millions of pounds are annually exported. St. Domingo furnishes from sixty to seventy millions of pounds yearly. All the varieties of the apple are derived from the crab apple, which is found native in most parts of the world. The peach is derived from Persia, where it still grows in a native state, small, bitter and with poisonous qualities. Tobacco is a native of Mexico and South America, and lately one species has been found in New Holland. Tobacco was first introduced into England from North Carolina, in 1589, by Walter Raleigh. Asparagus was brought from Asia; cabbage and lettice from Holland; horse redish from China; rice from Ethiopia; beans from the East Indies; onions are natives of various places both in Asia and Africa. The sugar cane is a native of China, and from thence is derived the art of making sugar from it.

Singing in the Family.

We visited at the house of a friend not long ago, where the members of the family all sing regularly at worship, and we could not help wishing that the practice was more general. It adds greatly to the interest of devotional exercises especially among children. It makes the family altar a pleasant place, even to those who have not learned to render to God the service of the heart.

Besides, singing in the family circle has a good influence directly on the affections. The moral influence of vocal music, especially music of a sanctified character, has always been happy in the extreme. It exercises a hallowed power over the soul—it sweeps the secret strings of virtue and purity there, and sets them all in harmonious vibration. As it drove the demon from the depraved and wretched monarch of Israel, so it will banish from the chambers of the soul the dark spirits of vice and crime, and excite a purer and holier feeling.

Five Maxims to be observed through Life.

1. Never regret what is irretrievably lost.
2. Never believe that which seems improbable.
3. Never expose your disappointments to the world.
4. Never complain of being ill used.
5. Always speak well of your friends, and of your enimies speak always good but never evil.

POETRY.

For the Church Advocate.

THERE'S JOY IN HEAVEN.

BY JOHN F. WEISHAMPEL.

Tune:—"A life on th' ocean wave."

There's joy in Heav'n above,
There's joy on earth below,
For those who Jesus love,
And his salvation know;—
Then all who seek in vain,
Unceasing joys to gain,
For Christ leave sin behind,
And then true joy you'll find.

There's joy in Heav'n above,
There's joy on earth below,
For those who Jesus love,
And his salvation know.

This world can but afford
A transitory bliss:
But he who loves the Lord,
Perpetual joy is his;—
'Tis his while life shall last,
'Tis his when life is past,
'Tis his on Canaan's shore,
'Tis his forevermore.

There's joy in Heav'n above, &c.

When life is past and gone,
And in our graves we lie:
If there we be alone,
We shall forever die;
But who on Christ believe,
Though dead, again shall live:
Their Guide through death he'll be
To immortality.

There's joy in Heav'n above, &c.

And when the trump shall sound,
And all the saints shall rise,—
Who sleep beneath the ground;—
With unbeclouded eyes
Then they their Lord shall see,
And ever with him be,
And sing the Saviour's praise,
Aloud, through endless days.

There's joy in Heav'n above, &c.

With endless joy in view,—
O what a happy thought!—
I bid the world adieu,
And seek its pleasures not.
Nay, give me Jesus here,
And give me Jesus there:
Without him all is pain,
But with him all is gain.

There's joy in Heav'n above, &c.

There's joy in Heav'n for me,
A crown of glory bright;
And I shall honor'd be,
By Him, who is the Light.
My soul shall ever bloom,
My body leave the tomb,
And raise the anthem high'r,
With the angelic choir.

There's joy in Heav'n above, &c.

ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A YEAR. "EARNESTLY CONTEND FOR THE FAITH WHICH WAS ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS." PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

VOLUME XI. HARRISBURG, Pa., MARCH 15, 1847. NUMBER 22.

THE ADVOCATE

Is printed and published in Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge, Harrisburg, Pa.,

By JOHN WINEBRENNER, V. D. M., Editor.

Terms and Regulations.

The Church Advocate will be printed and published semi-monthly, on a large super-royal sheet, at $1,25 per volume, payable always in advance, or within the first three months of taking the paper.

All persons failing to comply with these terms, shall have their papers stopped at the expiration of the first quarter, from the time the paper is sent, and be held accountable for two quarters; that is to say, for 62½ cents; which sum shall be invariably exacted before the paper will be re-sent.

All the accredited ministers of the Church of God, and such other persons as shall have regular certificates of their appointment from the Editor, shall be the only authorized agents for this paper.

Letters and communications addressed to the Editor, through the Post-Office, must be post-paid, except those containing remittances.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Another Request.

We are thankful to those of our friends who have sent us the third and eighth numbers of the Advocate. We shall be much gratified to have a few more sent us, and also the THIRTEENTH NUMBER. Who will be kind enough to oblige us, from among those who do not file their papers? From those who file them we do not ask the favor.

"Publisher" Agents.

We are requested to urge the Agents for the Gospel Publisher to finish up collecting all the dues between this and the first of April, and to remit the moneys collected forthwith to Eder Joseph Ross, treasurer; or, if more convenient, to Elders Wm. Hinney, or Abraham Brenneman, committee.

Our Agents.

We request our Agents, for the Advocate, to collect the dues, for the first quarter, from all our delinquent subscribers forthwith. There are about three hundred and fifty who stand delinquent on our books. These are all indebted sixty-two and a-half cents each. This sum we want them to pay up. Yet, if they prefer it, they may still have the whole volume by paying one dollar and twenty-five cents. They may have their choice, then, provided they will settle their accounts between this and the first of April next. The Agents will please see them on the subject.

Proposition for Reducing our Terms.

If our friends will get us five hundred new subscribers, the terms of the Advocate shall be reduced to one dollar per annum. Who will lead off in making the effort? Who and how many will follow suite? Let us hear from some of you by the time of our next number, and from all by the time of the commencement of the next volume. We invite all to exert themselves in behalf of our enterprize, and for the reduction of our terms.

Decennial Anniversary.

The Twentieth Semi-Annual Examination will take place at the Lyceum Female Institute, near Mount Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., on the 31st of March, 1847.

This celebrated Institution was removed from Philadelphia to Mount Joy, where it has been in operation for the last ten years. It is now, therefore, concluded on to celebrate a Decennial Anniversary. Invitations are to be sent to all the old scholars and friends of the Seminary, and every thing is to be done that can be done, for the interest of the occasion. The friends of the Institution, generally, are invited to attend.

A Small Beginning.

We proposed some time ago to send the Advocate gratis, for one year, to every person who would procure us five new subscribers, and become responsible for the payment.—This proposition has been accepted and responded to by several of our friends and brethren, to-wit:

Elder T. Hickernell has sent us	5	new subs.
Elder David Neidigh, Jr., do. -	4	do.
Elder Jacob Brewen, do. -	6	do.

Now how many more, we ask, will agree to this proposition, and have their names added to this list? Try, brethren, and see what you can do!

Prospectuses.

We have issued two Prospectuses for two new books, which will be found on our last page, and for which we want some good Agents. We want both State and County Agents to solicit subscribers for the works, and to sell books for us whilst they are canvassing the ground as solicitors.

Any person wishing to engage in this business, and who shall come well recommended, may find employment on liberal terms.

Canals Opened.

The Chesapeak and Ohio Canal was opened on the 22d ult.

The Pennsylvania Canal was opened on the 10th inst.

Plagiarism.

What is plagiarism? It is literary theft, or the art of giving another man's writing as his own.

There are a good many would-be-writers and speakers in our day, who are guilty of playing this game, and thus attempt to exalt themselves above their measure. Some few of these literary knaves have made their appearance among the contributors to the columns of the Advocate. We shall mention no names, nor expose any one beyond what they have done it themselves, with the intelligent readers of our columns. Yet we hope and request that no one will act the plagiarist in his contributions hereafter. If any person or persons will send us good pieces or extracts from any author for the columns of the Advocate, we shall take a pleasure to insert them for the benefit of our readers, provided they are properly credited; but we are not willing to publish the productions of wise heads over the signatures of numskulls and block-heads! who are silly enough to attempt to raise their own reputation by sheer fraud and stealth. Let plagiarists, then, beware!

Elder E. D. Wertz's Appointments.

Brother E. D. Wertz will preach, Providence permitting, at the following places, to-wit:

At brother John Hess', Washington county, April 8th; at brother Henry Sherich's, Washington county, April 9th; in Aleppo township, Greene county, April 10th, 11th and 12th.

☞ The brethren at the aforesaid places are requested to make the appointments known in their respective neighborhoods.

War and Mail Steamers.

A bill passed both Houses of Congress providing for the construction and employment, by the government, of sixteen war and mail steamers.

The bill provides, first, for the construction of four war steamers of the first class.

Secondly, a line of mail steamers from New York to Liverpool, consisting of five ships of not less than twenty thousand tons each.

Thirdly, a line of mail steamers from New York to New Orleans, touching at Savannah in Georgia and Havana, with a branch line from Havana to Chagres, comprising five ships of not less than one thousand five hundred tons each, the ships of both lines to be constructed under the direction of the Navy Department.

Fourthly, a line of steamers from Panama on the Pacific, to Oregon, touching at the intermediate ports.

These vessels, so employed, are to be subject to the order of and purchase by the Government at any time. They are all to be commanded by Naval officers; and a Mail Agent and four Passed Midshipmen are to be placed on board of each, the latter as watch officers and for improvement in the management of steamships.

Nominations.

The Native American Convention, which met in this place on the 22d of February last, nominated for Governor, Emanuel C. Reichart, of Lancaster county. For Canal Commissioner, Robert H. Morton, of Dauphin county.

The Democratic Convention, which met here on the 4th inst., nominated for Governor, Francis R. Shunk, of Harrisburg, the present incumbent. For Canal Commissioner, Morris Longstreth, of Montgomery county.

The Whig Convention, which assembled here on the 9th inst., nominated for Governor, General James Irvin, of Centre county. For Canal Commissioner, Joseph W. Patton, of Carlisle, Cumberland county.

COMMENTARY ON MATTHEW V. 19.

"Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach THEM, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

This text we have been requested to explain. We cheerfully comply with the request by giving our opinion.

The commandments spoken of in this text, refer, we think, to the precepts of the law. This is plain from the preceding context.

The kingdom of Heaven, primarily, means the kingdom of glory. This is clear from the succeeding context.

Whosoever, then, shall dissolve, disannul, or make void one of the least of the Divine precepts, and shall teach others to do the same, shall be called, accounted or esteemed, the least and unworthiest of all men, by the inhabitants of Heaven. But, on the other hand, whoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called, accounted and esteemed, the greatest and worthiest among men, by the dwellers in the kingdom of God.

This passage shows that in Heaven they have a knowledge of the character and doings of men on earth; and hence they not only "rejoice when sinners repent," but also judge of the merits and demerits of men, and especially of the teachers of religion. If then the disannulling of the least commandment of the law of Moses is condemned and disapproved of in Heaven, how much more the destroying, making void, or setting aside of the commandments of Jesus Christ. O! ye disobeyers, corruptors and false teachers, in all sects and parties, pause and consider your ways: for Solomon said, "There is a way that seemeth right to man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 16: 25. And Moses said: "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up to you of your brethren, like to me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say to you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3: 22. 23.

Revival News.

"Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted." Isaiah 12: 4.

We feel thankful that we can still record good news concerning the Lord's doings among the people in various places. The Lord has exalted His name in a glorious manner among the people of Shippensburg. Brother J. C. Owens writes as follows:

"The good Lord is doing a great work among us. Our meeting has been in progress for ten days and fifteen nights. We have had as many as twenty-two out at once to be prayed for. The work is still increasing. It is said there has never been such an excitement in Shippensburg on the subject of religion. Many have been powerfully converted. Our revival is of the right kind. Heads of families and grown persons are its subjects. We keep up our meetings day and night, and have crowded congregations.—Were it not for the preachers of other denominations, I would be bad off for help. The Lutherans, German Reformed and Methodists, are all at work with us. This is the way things ought to be."

Brother J. Ulsh, in Pfauts' Valley, Perry county, writes us the following concerning the state of things in that quarter:

"There is at this time a meeting in progress in our school-house. Several have, I trust, embraced religion since it commenced.

"The cause of God appears to look up in this section of country. There is a considerable stir in Turkey Valley. Several protracted meetings were held there by the Brethren and Methodists, during which time there were nine or ten brought from darkness to light, and I hope from the power of Satan to God. We still look for better times."

The church in brother Basehore's neighborhood is also enjoying a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. About 15 or 20 have professed a change, and the work is still going on with unabating power. We hope some of the preachers will go up to the help of the church in that place.

In Middletown, Dauphin county, the revival is still in progress. Meetings are held every night; the congregations are large, and many appear to be under awakenings. The number of converts, since the commencement of the work, are about thirty. We hope Bishop J. Flake will give us a particular account of the work for our next paper.

Jim Riggs Sentenced to be Hung!

A colored man, by the name of Jim Riggs, was tried lately at Orwigsburg, Schuylkill county, for the murder of Charles Gunder, a foreigner. He was found guilty, and is sentenced to be hung.

Obituary.

Died, on the 3d of March, 1847, John Heck, sen., of Milltown, Cumberland county, Pa. aged 77 years.

Brother Heck emigrated from Berks to Cumberland county, in the spring of 1785, the time of the great Ice flood. He bought a farm at the mouth of the Cedar Spring, where Milltown is now located, and where he resided, since his emigration from Berks county, to the time of his death.

He was an industrious, kind and benevolent man, highly esteemed and respected by the community generally.

As a Christian, he was remarkable for his hospitality and liberality. His house was not only a preaching place, but also the poor man's and preacher's home, for many years past. As a member of the "Church of God," he done much in support of the same. We hope his children and brethren in the church will remember and imitate his example: then may they hope that their last end, like his, will be peace.

Our Book Agents.

We request all our book Agents who are in arrears, for a longer time than six months, to settle their accounts by the first of April next. And further, we wish hereby to give notice that hereafter no one can have a longer credit than six months.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

ELDER THOMAS' REPLY TO ELDER MILLER.

Lancaster, Lancaster county, } February, 1847. }

Brother Winebrenner:—

As brother Wm. Miller has at last appeared in the columns of the Advocate, as the disclaimer of all social institutions except the family and the church, and has assigned a few reasons as sufficient to decide his course with respect to them; I ask the liberty, through the same medium, to show, however satisfactory those reasons may be to his own mind, they are not exactly conclusive to mine.

But before I enter upon a scrutiny of his reasons and arguments, let me remark; It would have been much more satisfactory, had brother Miller made a plain, open, manly demonstration against the particular institution that his main force is leveled at, instead of (keeping out of view his principal object) endeavoring to involve the members of any one of them in the defence and advocacy of all. However, as he only deals in general principles, it will only be expected that I shall follow where he leads. And his first reason for not joining a benevolent or moral reform institution is,—

1. "They are human in their origin."

1. This I admit to be true respecting the means and measures employed to carry out the great principles of some of those social institutions, but touching the great principles themselves, I affirm it is not true, as I shall attempt to prove in the sequel.

Now with regard to my admission of means employed and measures used, being human in their origin, this strikes with as much force against the domestic or family institution, as against those alluded to above. And I ask, are there no means or measures used in the church, for the carrying out of the great principles of Christianity, but just such as we have a divine warrant for in the Bible? "God has never (says brother M.) instituted more than three institutions," viz: "the family, the church and the state—the two former approvingly, the latter as a necessary evil. See I Sam. 8th chapter."

Suppose, for argument sake, this position to be correct; does this prove that all the instrumentalities or means necessary in carrying out the principles of those three institutions, for maintaining order in those organizations, are divinely appointed? If this is not proved, and it is clear it cannot be, then it is evident that God has left some things in the government of our families, and in the carrying out His great purposes by the church, and in the state, too, to the dictates of reason, and the nature of the circumstances in which mankind may be placed.

Yet, keeping always in view the great cardinal principles of those institutions, will brother M. affirm that all the means he uses for the government of his family, for the education of his children, &c., are appointed? or that he has a direct warrant from the Bible for all the means and measures he employs in the promotion of holiness among men? If he will not affirm this, (and I presume he will not) then is it not as clear as a sun-beam, that a part of the instrumentality he does use must be of "human origin?"

If the above position be correct, and I think it is, brother M., to be consistent with himself, must give up the dictates of reason and common prudence in the government of his family, abandon all means and measures used by the church not clearly revealed in the Bible, and wait for a fresh revelation from Heaven before he dare proceed one step further than what is written in the scriptures. In a word, he must give up every thing connected with moral or benevolent enterprises that is of "human origin."

On brother M's principle, how can he educate his children by human means? He must, to carry it out, keep them from the public or district schools: he must necessarially either educate them in his family, or in the church, unless he proves our institutions of learning are not "human in their origin." The same principle, if carried out, would prevent brother M. from letting any of his family, who might be so unfortunate as to become blind, deaf, or insane, enter any of those institutions organized by the humane and benevolent, for ameliorating the condition of the unfortunate, because these institutions, in brother M's. sense, are all "human in their origin."

I have argued this point on the ground that what brother M. would not do himself, he would not allow any of his family to do.

2. Notwithstanding I may not be able to give chapter and verse from the Bible for any of those benevolent institutions to which I might feel myself at perfect liberty to attach myself; yet that, to my mind, is no argument to prove that they are with respect to their great cardinal principles of "human origin." Great principles are eternal and unchangeable in their nature, always the same in whatever embodiment they may appear.—But that the outward garb, or form, in which they may be embodied will make no difference in their influence upon mankind, I will not attempt to say; but, I will say, where there is direct revelation to the contrary, every member of the human family is left free to judge how he may best promote them for the good of his fellow-men and God's glory.

But I proceed to my main argument; and this is founded upon man's social relations.

Now man, with all his powers, physical, intellectual and moral, (I mean his original faculties) is divine in his origin. This will not be disputed. Any social relation, therefore, that may grow out of his original constitution, with any of his species, in the very nature and fitness of things, cannot be considered a relation of mere "human origin." There may, therefore, be social institutions growing out of our social relations, in perfect accordance with the divine order of things.

Social institutions are those which form the basis, or grow out of the various relations of human society. Man is a social being. His physical, mental and moral constitution, has a manifest reference to a state of social existence.

Destitute of the strength which distinguishes many animals, unfurnished by nature, either with weapons to resist, or speed to escape from their attacks, care for his safety alone would lead him to unite himself in close alliance with others of his species. The years of childhood and old age are conditions in which he must of necessity depend upon others, and in claiming, during these periods of infirmity, sustenance and protection from his fellowmen, he should not only consent in the days of his strength to anticipate and deserve them himself, but also contribute his share as a reciproeal duty for the good of others.

If, therefore, my second argument be sonnd, and I think it is, there is a social relation existing between man and his fellow-man, not necessarially based upon, nor connected with the family, the church, or state relations, and in some instances must operate independent of, though not contrary to any of those relations.

The inference then is clear, that social institutions may exist, based upon our social relations, independent of family, church, or state, in perfect conformity with the divine order of things. I might illustrate this by a thousand comparisons, but one simple one may suffice. Suppose a herd of hungry wolves should be prowling around and through brother M's. neighborhood, destroying the flocks and herds of the farmers, and endangering their lives and the lives of the members of their families, and their number and ferocity was such, that nothing short of a body of armed men would be sufficient to exterminate them, and quiet the fears of the inhabitants. And for this purpose these farmers organize themselves into a body—would there be any thing improper or unlawful in such a society? Such things have occurred in this country, and may again. Here then is a social organization founded upon the social relations of society, based upon reason—our common humanity demands it, the peace and safety of the neighborhood demands it. This, then, for the time being, or for the period for which it was organized, would, to all intents and purposes, be a social institution, and a benevolent one too in its object. But it is neither a family, a church, or state institution. Now, on brother M's. principle, were he called upon by these neighbors to join them in expelling these destructive animals from the neighborhood, his reply would be: "No gentlemen, I can't join you. I belong to two divine institutions, the family and the church; and as you have no divine warrant for an organization to destroy wolves, I cannot conscientously identify myself with you. If you belonged to my family, or the church, I would; as it is, I cannot; your institution is "human in its origin."

Brother M. may object to the above illustration, because it does not partake of a moral reform association; but as my object is to show that certain social associations may of necessity grow out of our social relations, distinct from our family, church or state relations, my object is gained, and his 1st reason, viz: They are "human in their origin," vanishes like the "baseless fabric of a vision."

Remark:—Brother M., in the above illustration, may answer his own question whether such a connection would make him a better Christian, husband, father, neighbor, or citizen! I hesitate not to say, it would prove him a more useful neighbor and citizen, while it would not change any of his divinely appointed relations.

3. Having, as I think, removed the foundation of brother M's building, I shall now make a short analysis of the building itself. And,

1. Did I wish to be critical, I might ask brother M. how he would prove from the 8th chapter of 1 Samuel, that God ordained the state institution as a necessary evil! All that can be proved in the obove scripture is, a change in the administration of the laws of the state, not the ordination of a state institution: this existed long before. But as this is only a small blunder, and not essential to the main subject, it may pass.

2. Touching what brother M. has said regarding the family institution, I agree with him.

3. Respecting the constituent elements of the church with its cementing principles and reforming powers, all he said is good and true.

4. As to the question whether a connection with any of those institutions would make him a better Christian, husband, father, neighbor, or citizen, I answer: It might not change any of the moral quality of those several relations, but I am certain it would make him a more intelligent one, and I think a more useful member of society.

5. "It is a reflection on the benevolence and goodness of God, in not providing the necessary means for the reformation of the world without the aid (it should be) and assistance of the institutions of men." Now in the whole of the above, and what follows in this paragraph, brother M. is evidently fighting with a ghost of his own fancy. If brother M. had taken the pains to inform himself upon this subject, he would have learned long since that none of his brethren to whom he appeals, in the next paragraph, ever united with or advocated any institution that was designed to supersede the church, or conflict in the least with her interest. Yet the ground he assumes is, that all social institutions not clearly ordained by the Lord are designed to tear up the foundations of society and destroy the family, the church and the state relations; or if not destroy them, take all the reforming power they possess from them and mold it in a manner unauthorized. Don't get alarmed brother M. There is plenty of evil still to combat.—Intemperance, slavery, war, poverty, famine and wretchedness, still exist to an alarming extent. And notwithstanding the existence of many benevolent and moral reform associations, the church is not stripped of her power or instrumentality. She has or might have all she ever possessed, and may she not use it as successfully as ever she did? And when she has done all that she can do to reform and save the world in her organized capacity, may not I, an humble member of her community, join with my neighbors to put out a fire that is raging and consuming the substance of a poor fellow citizen? or unite with them to restore a poor inebriate who lies in the gutter, self-degraded and forsaken by many of his fellows? But suppose we only succeed in restoring him so far as to make him a good citizen, father, husband and neighbor, would this be a reflection upon the goodness and benevolence of God, &c? No, you would say if you do it as a Christian, it would not. Its your duty. But if you do the former as a member of a fire association, or the latter as a member of a temperance society, then it reflects upon the goodness and benevolence of God, because all benevolent feeling and reforming power belongs to the church.

This is clearly the ridiculous position to which brother M's logic leads.

And now I ask in either of the above cases, how am I to act? If my neighbor's house is burning down, shall I stand still and let it burn on, until the church comes together to put it out? or shall I join some Fire company that is actively engaged in pouring water upon the fire? In the second case, shall I do nothing to save the man from the effects of intemperance unless I can act alone, or in connection with the church? If I operate at all, either with the Fire company or with the temperance society, let the emergency be what it may, I am not only consenting to the lawfulness of such organizations, but for the time being, I am actually associated with them. The mere formalities of joining an institution cannot alter the operative principle of the institution, any more than joining a local church can make a man a Christian, or the not formally joining, (if he acts in concert with Christians) destroy his Christianity. Away then with such subtleties and sophisms, that would call it a reflection upon the benevolence and goodness of God, for a Christian to act in perfect accordance with his social relations.

Ireland at this very time is withering under the blighting curse of famine and pestilence, as a consequence. Thousands are perishing daily for want of bread. She appeals to the sympathies of the benevolent of all lands, especially to our own, and her cries have pierced the hearts of thousands out of the church as well as in it, and they respond to her cries by forming societies all over the land to collect and send money and provisions for her relief. These are social institutions, benevolent societies, "human in their origin," for there is not a word about them in the Bible. And all this sympathy and benevolence, according to brother M., is a reflection on the benevolence and goodness of God. If I did not know brother M's. practice to be better than the principle he has laid down, I should be tempted to advise him to take a voyage to the Island of Juan Fernandez, where Selkerk wrote upon the rock:

"I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute," &c.

6. He says, "I would ask my dear brethren, &c., what can any of these societies boast, of that is good, that Christianity does not abundantly supply?" I answer emphatically; nothing. Christianity I understand to be a pure set of holy benevolent principles. Hence Christianity supplies temperance societies with their principles. It supplies benevolent societies with their principles. And as far as non-resistant societies follow these holy principles, they are supplied. I thank brother M. for the proof, as it is ample.

II. "In these associations, the good and the bad, the saint and the sinner, Christ and Belial, are in the same work of reformation."

1. In the above reason and arguments that follow, it is so evident that brother M. raises the same false issues that I have answered under the first head: that it is almost a work of supererogation to attempt an answer to this. Now brother M. is assuredly laboring under one or the other of two grand mistakes. Either he believes these societies profess to be religious societies in an evangelical sense, or he believes there can be no reformation in morals short of evangelical holiness. It is certain that reasoning from one or both of these errors as his premises, is the cause of the blunders he has fallen into in nearly every paragraph he has written. I will inform brother M. again, that I advocate the claims of no society as a religious society, in the strict sense of the term, but that of the "Church of the living God." And with regard to the second error, it is passing strange that a man with the discriminating powers of mind, which brother M. possesses, should not be able to distinguish between a moral institution and one purely religious. But so it is, and hence he talks of sinners "promoting holiness, and the ungodly being vociferous for the spread of righteousness," &c. Now all this reasoning is good; I have not a word to say against it if properly applied. But in his train of reasoning, it's not to the point; it don't touch the case in hand; its all based upon a false foundation. If he were delineating the character of a Christian minister, with reference to his holy office and work, it would be perfectly relevant; but as it is, it is adding his fifth wheel to the wagon.

I have but one or two questions to answer upon this point and I shall leave it. These are with reference to what he says about example. I believe in the doctrine he sets forth. To promote holiness, a man should set a holy example. Well, to promote temperance, a temperance example must be given. Temperance societies do this, and this is all they profess to be. Benevolent societies give liberally to the sons and daughters of affliction. This being the object of their association they frequently give a tangible evidence of their sincerity. The only question left, is the abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, in view of all the dreadful evils arising from its use, a right principle in a sinner! If it is, then it can't be wrong in a Christian. These two men, therefore, on the subject of temperance, are under the influence of a right principle in their individual capacity, and both influenced by the same principle on this subject. Now suppose they join together to infuse their principle into the minds of others, who may be under the blighting curse of intemperance. Here then is a temperance society. These men, one a Christain, the other a sinner, join together on this point because they see alike, and feel alike, and are wise enough to know their united efforts will be more efficient than if divided. Where, brother M., is the moral wrong? There is no change of principle by the union; they feel and see as they did before; and can a principle that is morally right when held by the two individuals separately, become morally wrong when the holders unite together to make the principle more operative? This position is so clear that none but a jaundiced eye and a prejudiced mind can fail to see the force of the conclusion.

2. "True reformers must sympathize with sinners." True, brother M's. good temperance men sympathize with the intemperate. Hence they make use of all the available means within their reach to save them.

Regarding "the public head being generally right on the subject of sin:" I remark, however true this may be with regard to other things on the subject of temperance, it has, until of late, been almost universally radically wrong; and that some men's heads are still wrong on this subject, I want no better example than brother M. himself. It is a well known fact that but a few years ago dram drinking was almost a universal practice. Ministers, elders, deacons, church members, fathers, sons, mothers and daughters, all to a greater or less extent were in the habit of taking their todies and julips, &c., and there was nothing dishonorable in the practice, because public opinion sustained it. Now the thing is changed. Public opinion has stamped such a practice with infamy. Was public opinion right then? If it was, it is wrong now. If right now, it surely must have been wrong once. What, I ask has made this change? what has converted the public sentiment on this great moral question? That it has been converted in part, no reasonable man will deny. This revolution has been effected by the agitation of this question, and the organization of temperance societies; not as brother M. intimates, by law enactments to restrain vice. Law cannot progress a step faster than the public sentiment demands it; for no law can be operative when not sustained by public opinion. The conclusion then is, if a total abstinence community is more moral than a drunken one, and if temperance societies promote the first, and destroy the latter, by giving a healtny moral tone to public sentiment, they cannot be wrong.

Again, respecting "these influences ceasing to act, or public opinion turning back," &c., I ask why, brother M., does that public opinion that is almost always right turn back? Yes, says brother M., it does. And why? because these influences cease to act. I ask no clearer demonstration of their utility. If religious influences cease to act, will not irreligion prevail! will not those who have been Christians plunge again into the vortex of sin? It can't be otherwise. It is evident, therefore, to prevent backsliding, these religious influences must be constantly exercised. And on the samo principle to prevent intemperance, temperance influences must be constantly used to save men from plunging into the vortex of intemperance.

I again thank brother M. for the service he has done the cause I advocate in this paragraph. I shall not attempt to reply to brother M's. remarks any further at present.

1. Because I have written perhaps more already than can be published in one number of the ADVOCATE, though I hope if possible the Editor will not deny it.

2. Because these remarks are mere inferences from premises answered above.

3. I prefer answering brother M. when we meet face to face.

Yours, fraternally,

EDWARD H. THOMAS.

Read the Scriptures.

AN excellent method of enkindling piety, is reading the scriptures. A Christian, indeed, should have this sacred book ever folded in his breast. There is a richness and a comfort in it that nothing else can equal. Every word is big with instruction—every sentence is divine. It is a mine, perpetually opening—the deeper we dig, the richer is the ore. It is a feast adapted to every taste—the most exalted understanding must admire—and the lowest cannot fail to comprehend its instructions. If people only read for the sake of entertainment, where can they find a book equal to the BIBLE? What other production, either ancient or modern, has such striking passages of the pathetic and sublime?—the vehement and impassioned? Where are there such lofty images, such grand conceptions, or such picturesque and animated descriptions, as in the Psalms? There is scarcely a person in the world to whose case some of them are not adapted, nor a sorrow which they cannot soothe. In one part plaintive, affecting, penitential; in another full of triumph and exultation—ennobling, elevating. Here describing the immensity, Majesty, Omnipotence and Omnipresence of God: there the littleness of the world, and the vanity of man. Whoever can read them without emotion, must be pronounced void both of piety and taste. The sacred stories of the scriptures are related with amazing simplicity. The parables are beautiful, pointed and instructive. And the epistles of St. Paul are a model of the sublimest and most energetic eloquence, that can be found in any age, or in any language.

When the immortal LOCKE and NEWTON had dived into every other kind of knowledge, they sat down to contemplate the vanity and poverty of all, compared with the richness of the scriptures. The famous BACON, an oracle of learning in his day, confessed them to be the source of real wisdom. The illustrious SELDON, on his death-bed, assured Bishop USHER that the whole of his immense library could not give him half the comfort which he derived from one single sentence of the inspired writings. 'Tis true the old scriptures may, in part, appear dry and insipid; but when you consider them as typical of the new, and affording a strong collateral testimony to the truth of revelation, as describing the circumstances, manners and anecdotes of a peculiar chosen people, whose history, rebelion, captivity and dispersion, are interwoven with the whole system of Christianity, we will read them with a greater relish, and a more Godly edification.

Jesus Christ is the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets. All the incidents we read, point to him as their origin and their end. The great Corner Stone in Zion—the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. The bondage of the children of Israel in Egypt, is an image of our captivity to sin, and their deliverance of our redemption through the blood of Christ. Their journeying through the wilderness is a strong picture of our wearisome passage through this vale of tears. Moses is the Saviour, making waters of comfort gush from the stony rock. The manna is the food of his word, and the waters are the graces of his Holy Spirit. The beautiful and affecting history of Joseph, is an emblem of that better personage, who was envied, hated, persecuted, and murdered by his brethren, for the general salvation. Abraham is a striking image of the Almighty, offering up his only son, and all the ceremonies of the law point to that true blood of sprinkling, which alone can take away the sins of the world. Thus is every page holy; thus do we tread every moment on consecrated ground, and thus every word, when properly understood, is spirit and life.

But of all the scriptures, the Gospels are certainly the most edifying and instructive. They are plain, forcible and spiritual. They come from the very mouth of holiness and wisdom, and do not admit of any wrong constructions, or doubtful interpretations. If there was only the fifth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel extant, we should have an incomparable abridgement of Christianity sufficient to direct our faith, or animate our practice, and flash confusion on that host of writers, who have built so many wrong and dangerous opinions on the pretended basis of revelation.

The sayings of our Lord are so very obvious, as to need little or no explanation. They are a precious wine, which the profane wisdom of scholars and philosphers have mixed with water. If men had only studied them with earnestness, instead of their own interests, prejudices and passions, we should never have been distracted with so many systems of error and superstition.

As we read, we should meditate. Meditation is the stomach, which digests this food. Reflect many hours for reading one; for there is such a condensed richness in the scriptures, that one single verse will often suggest ample fund for serious contemplation. Every moment that we pursue this book, we should consider ourselves as in the immediate presence of God. Fancy, we hear Him deliver the commandments in all the thunder and lightnings of the Mount; remembering that though Heaven and earth fail, one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

We should also examine ourselves by the promises and threatenings as we go along, and not forget to bless God, upon our knees, that He has given us such a lamp for our feet, and such a light to our path. Without this sacred volume, the world would be at this very moment dark, gloomy and unenlightened, worshipping stocks and stones; perhaps offering human blood, and tormenting themselves with burdensome ceremonies that have no manner of connection with the heart, and perplexed with a thousand enigmas, which it never could solve. The light which superficial sceptics have, they have, in a great degree, derived from the scriptures. The arguments which they level against Christianity, have been suggested by the light of Christianity itself. More anon.

NEWBURG, Feb. 22, 1847.

May a Christian Defend his Life, Liberty, Property, Character, or Religion, with Carnal Weepings?

This is a plain, simple and fair question, and one that is fraught with eternal consequences. I am well aware there are both temporal and eternal interests connected with this question; but as the eternal are of infinite more importance than the temporal, and as the lesser interests must give place to the greater, therefore a Christian must sacrifice his temporal interests to secure his eternal; that is, if the former stands in competition with the latter. The former, I know, also will give way to the latter in the minds and actions of all true disciples of Jesus Christ, especially if they remember the sayings of the great Teacher: "And there went great multitudes with him; and he turned and said to them, If any man come to me, and hateth not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters; yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Again he said: "And he said to them all, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me; for whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." Luke 9: 23, 24.

Now in order to show you that life is greater than all temporal blessings, hear the Great Teacher again: "Therefore, I say to you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body what ye shall put on." Look also at the following great question: "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" I answer, YES; and who will dare answer, No? It will surely be admitted that human life is greater than any other earthly blessing; for if life is lost, all other earthly blessings are lost with it; but if the former is retained, there is a possibility of regaining the latter. But taking it for granted that natural life is the greatest of all natural blessings, I shall here propound the following question, viz:

Can a Christian kill his Enemy to save his own Life?

Don't be frightened at this proposition. This brings to view, at once, the great and true gist, and point of the subject. When the varnish and rose buds are all stripped off from the subject, and you see it in its naked form, then you are prepared to pronounce your best judgment.

If a Christian may use the sword in defence of his temporal life, may he not use it also in defence of eternal life? If he may fight in defence of earthly blessings, may he not fight in defence of Heavenly blessings, also? If he may fight for straws, may he not fight for dollars? There is an infinitely greater difference between straws and dollars, than there is between earthly and Heavenly blessings. You can never make any person of good sense believe, when the subject is fairly stated before him, that it is wrong to fight for Heavenly things, who is taught to believe it right to fight for earthly blessings.

Brethren, I call upon you, in the name of the Lord, (for my heart feels much interested on this subject) to consider this question. I have remained silent on this subject, till I do believe I would be criminal in the sight of God and man, to be silent any longer: I mean with the pen.

I ask then, brethren, if a Christian may use the sword in defence of his religion or his life, what would become of the spirit of martyrdom? The example of Christ and the Apostles? The precepts: "Resist not evil"—"overcome evil with good"—"turn the other cheek"—"love your enemies"—"pray for them that persecute you, and spitefully use you"—"if your enemy hunger, feed him; if he is thirsty, give him to drink"—"beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place to wrath, for it is written, 'Vengeance is mine, and I will repay, saith the Lord.'" These are a few among many other passages to the same effect, which I think would be useless to name, for they are as common as household furniture.

I really think a good brother could hardly run into such a fatal error, unless an evil eye of unbelief had overtaken him. "If thy eye be evil, then thy body shall be full of darkness; and if that light which is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

Some may perhaps object and say, that self-defence is the first law of nature. It may be so, for aught I know; but I do know that it is not the first law of grace. If self-defence be right because it is natural, then it would follow that it must be right to hate an enemy; for it is just as natural to hate an enemy, as to defend self. By nature we are all the children of wrath, but it is by grace we are the sons of God.

In conclusion I would say, I do not wish to spin out this article too long, for I know there are fearful consequences to the carnal mind, or to flesh and blood, in living out this blessed doctrine. But so long as I hear the voice of the blessed Jesus say, "Fear not him that can kill the body," and have His blessed example and precepts for my guide, to my mind, they all vanish like fog before the rising sun. If men will look at consequences in becoming Christians, Christianity will be expelled from the earth in twenty years from this time. I would advise all men to count the cost before they set out to be Christians; for if they are not willing to sacrifice all things that stand in the way of their duty to God and man, they will certainly be accounted as enemies, and not as friends, when they come to cast up the sum of all their labors; and then, instead of hearing that blessed sentence of approbation, they will hear that dreadful sentence of detestation, "Who hath required this at your hands?"

WILLIAM MILLER.

ORRSTOWN, PA., Feb. 28, 1847.

Child of the Living God.

CHILD of the living God! Happy the being who is entitled to the name! "For his is the kingdom of heaven: rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." Many there are who aspire for the name, but few shall gain it. Who are the fortunate few? Prove yourselves by your faith, your manner of living, and your conduct in suffering. Faith lays the foundation, life or deed builds thereon, and suffering fortifies; by death the building is finished, and a great deal depends on how a thing is finished. If the last stroke is to be applied effectually, every one that was made before must have been good.

Upon these four points, faith, life, suffering and death, I will say a few words to my readers, availing myself largely of scripture, and the opinions of wiser heads than mine.

1.—Faith. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." (a) How must we believe? From the inmost of our hearts, and with all our strength, like David: "Thou art mine: what thou art, thou art to me: all thou hast is mine. Lord, if I only have thee, I care not about heaven or earth." And then "by prayer and supplication let your requests be made known to God." (b) "The Lord is nigh to them that are of a broken heart." (c) "We have the testimony of David that a 'poor man cried, and the Lord heard him.'" (d)

When we have thus obtained, and thus practice faith, we have laid the foundation for our future welfare. We must now commence to build upon it. How may we know that we are building? Examine,—

2. Your Manner of Living. How must this be? "Walk in love, as Christ also has loved us." (e) Charity characterizes the Christian. It includes all our duties towards man, as faith does towards God. What charity will do and not do, you can see. 2 Cor. 13. If we have this in our hearts, we can throw ourselves into the arms of Jesus and say, "I am thine; what I am, I am in thee, and all I have is thine." Nothing evinces a more charitable disposition than a practice of moderation. Sectarianism is the most unchristian motive on earth. "There is nothing in the world more wholesome or more necessary for us to learn, than this gracious lesson of humility, moderation and forbearance, without which no man is or can be a Christian." (f) May we all, in our respective stations, become more disposed to provoke one another to love and good works, and less disposed to backbite and devour one another for our opinions. May Christianity have its roots in our hearts rather than in our heads. May it shew forth its fruit in the purity and integrity of our lives, rather than in the vehemence and subtilty of our disputes." (g) In all persuations, the bigots are persecutors; the men of a cool and reasonable piety are favorers of toleration; because bigots, not taking the pains to be acquainted with the grounds of their adversary's tenets, conceive them to be so absurd and monstrous, that no man of sense can give in to them in good earnest: for which reason they are convinced that some very bad motive induces them to pretend to the belief of such doctrines, and to the maintaining them with obstinacy. This is a general principle in all religious differences, and it is the corner-stone of all persecution."

3.—Suffering. "All that will live Godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution;" (h) but when it comes to this, many back out. But we must "run with patience the race that is set before us;" (i) we must have patience in tribulation, and endure to the end. "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." (j) Patience in suffering proves a strong faith. Peter has said, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened to you:" much more "rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's suffering," (k) and inasmuch "as the trial of your faith being much more precious than gold that perishes, though it be tried with fire, might be found to praise, and honor and glory at the appearance of Jesus Christ;" (l) for "if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then ye are bastards, and not sons." (m) "Wherefore, let them that suffer, according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator." (n)

It appears, then, that all who wish to be children of the living God, must suffer. But this is only for a short time! Rejoice, my soul, "the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me to his heavenly kingdom." (o) "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" (p) No, verily not! "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." (q) In Heaven "we shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on us, nor any heat: for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed us, and shall lead us to living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes." (r) "And then we know that we shall be like him;" (s) "and we shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." (t) Yes, our bondage here shall end, and we, "as the ransomed of the Lord, shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon our heads; we shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." (u)

Death will close our earthly career. His grim visage is staring in our faces. Soon this mortal frame must crumble to ashes. A few fleety hours, and we shall stand upon Jordan's stormy banks. The wind will blow!—the waves will roar! Have we courage to enter its waters, and strength to reach the opposite shore? Have we built upon a solid foundation? Have we material enough to finish the structure? It must be finished!—and finished well! It requires not only a solid foundation to stand against the floods, but the material of the building must be good, and it must be finished well and durably, that the storm may not blow it down, and all be lost. If our faith and our deeds will not hold out to death, all our singing, and praying, and preaching, will have been in vain.

May the Lord help us and stand by us: may He give us a spirit of endurance and perseverance: may He fill our hearts with wisdom and truth, and guide us to our end: may we always know and perform our duties, and all of us be united in love and friendship. "Let us trust in the Lord with all our heart, and lean not to our own understanding. Let us in all our ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct our paths. Let us not despise the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction; for whom the Lord loveth, he correcteth." (v)

Letter from Brother A. D. Williams.

Hamilton College, N. Y., February 24, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

Yours of the 17th ult., and also the papers and pamphlets that you had the goodness to send me, came duly to hand; for which you will please accept my thanks. Allow me, however, to correct your compositor in relation to my letter published in the Advocate for January 15th, so as to read Arminian, instead of Aminian, and fifty-five thousand communicants, instead of fifteen.

I cannot refrain from expressing my satisfaction with the spirit of all you sent me, and from hoping that the correspondence thus commenced may continue in the same spirit, and cement most strongly the bonds of Christian affection. Error of every kind and of Protean shapes is increasing and growing bold on every side; and not content with appearing in its own proper character, it has but too often been successful in introducing itself as an "angel of light." Catholicism is a striking and fatal example of this; and while leading her minions down to the pit, corrupting and poisoning all by her fiendish touch, she successfully persuades them that she is conducting them to the very gates of Paradise. With satanic exultation, errors apparently of the most opposite character, and seemingly composed of the most discordant elements, are uniting, agreeing only to oppose, and if possible destroy virtue, and happiness, and holiness. Intemperance, licentiousness, war, and a thousand other desolating scourges ravage our land and the world, while Christians have not been awake to the importance of uniting in opposition to a common foe.

To be sure, I would not have that union which, like the mechanical mixture of oil and water, unites under the influence of excitement only to separate with loss in the first interval of quiet; but that union of aim and object, actuated by the same hallowed spirit, pointing only to Heaven and human salvation, that like melted wax mingles and loses all traces of its former plurality or separation.—So if Christians do not in the main agree in sentiment, union of feeling or of action is impossible, and they should be content to "agree to disagree," and exercise that "charity which thinketh no evil and hides a multitude of sins." But if they are united in sentiment, they should be by all means in feeling and action; for it is also true in religion that "union is strength."

It is a matter of rejoicing that Christians are beginning to lay aside contention and division, and to exalt "Christ and Him crucified." The morning of a better day seems to be dawning, and gives hopeful promises to Zion. Many arousing from their lethargic slumbers, are beginning to cry like the weeping prophet, "Oh that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people;" or, like the sweet songster of Israel, when his harp unstrung had been hung upon the willow: "Restore to me the joys of thy salvation; uphold me by thy free spirit; then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted to thee." As a consequence revivals are becoming more frequent, and the song of the new convert has once more become a sound familiar to our ears, and gladened our hearts.

That God may give you, and the people with whom you are connected, abundant success, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

A. D. WILLIAMS.

Letter from Elder John Hickernell.

Bethany, Westmoreland county, Pa., March 3, 1847.

Dear Brother:—

I have one more round to make on my large field of Gospel labor, and then I shall wind my course to the head waters of the Susquehanna river, in compliance with the appointment I received at our last Eldership. This I conceive to be the duty of every one in order to keep up a pleasant co-operation.

I think there are none of our beloved brethren in the ministry that are going to disobey instructions, but will, so far as I have understood, be true to their trust. Brother Wertz is preparing for his place of destination.—Brother Klein is already prepared for his appointment. We hope the brethren in the North will see to have him moved this spring. The preachers in Ohio that belong to this Eldership, viz: brothers Cook and Richmond, are already on their fields of labor.

How pleasant it is when brethren live together in love, and union, and especially brethren in the ministry. When this is the case, then when they meet in their nnual Elderships, they can sympathise with each other and lay their minds together for adopting the most appropriate method for the spread of the Gospel, and apply themselves with unabating zeal and delight to the performance of duty.

I cannot reconcile the conduct of those who can quote the apostle, "Wo is me if I preach not the Gospel," and then pursue a course which is diametrically opposed to it. It is said actions speak louder than words.—Oh that we felt more interested for the spread of the Gospel and for the salvation of souls! This would stimulate us to go forward in duty, like an apostle, willing to spend and be spent for Christ and His cause.

A word to my dear brethren in the ministry of the West Pennsylvania Eldership. Let us, my brethren, go on as co-workers together, as wise master builders, laying no other but the true foundation, which is Christ Jesus. The Lord has done much for us the few years we have been in these Western regions. It is true, if we were to enter into those accommodating systems we might soon grow strong in numbers, but this is not our business.—Our business is to do the work of an Evangelist, and make full proof of our ministry.

I here will give you a short detail of my last trip to Virginia. In this place I frequently wished for help, and several times requested some of the brethren in the ministry to assist, but all proved vain: I mean the local not the traveling brethren. A few weeks ago, I went there to hold a protracted meeting. However, before I reached the place, I was informed that all, with the exceptions of three or there abouts, had embraced religion under the labors of the Wesleyan Methodists. I knew not what course to pursue in preaching until I got to the place. Then hearing that an allegation was made by one in the neighborhood that there were no churches in existence now that are like the churches in the days of the apostles, I concluded to enlighten the people on this subject, and that there were churches in existence now of the same character with the churches of God in Judea. I delivered five discourses on primitive church policy. The result was good, the preaching well attended, the excitement run very high, but very friendly. Some said as soon as I would have the great superstructure finished they would go into it. Three embraced religion. Three were baptized. Nine united together in church fellowship. Others said if they had known that I would have baptized them without requiring them to leave their church, they would have been baptized. Others observed they would wait till their preacher would come around, and if he did not baptize them, they would not fellowship him any longer.

In this agitated state I left them, and started for the north part of my circuit. What an immense amount of good might be done in these quarters and all around my circuit, if laborers could be obtained. I hope the time is at hand when preachers and churches will be more active.

No more, but remain your brother,

JOHN HICKERNELL.

Letter from Elder J. Stamm.

HINKLETOWN, Feb. 11, 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

I take up my pen once more to drop a few lines for the ADVOCATE, in order to inform the readers of the same of the state of religion in this place.

I rejoice to let you know that Elder T. STROHM organized a small church here, on the evening of the 5th ult. I was appointed Elder, and brother ROHRERS Deacon. Brother R. speaks in public, and I hope and trust in God that he will be of much help to further on the cause of God in this place. I also hope this little church may be a blessing to the town and neighborhood. I also rejoice greatly that the time has come and the hour arrived, when a church could be established in this place. We hope the Lord will add to the number, and revive His work more and more. This is my prayer—Amen and Amen!

Will the brethren remember us, and visit us, and preach for us?

Brothers WINEBRENNER and S. BOWMAN, when will you pay your vows and come to this place, as you promised! The Lord help us to do all the good we can!

I remain yours in love,

J. STAMM.

Letter from Elder John Hickernell.

BETHANY, WESTMORELAND co., PA., 1847.

BROTHER WINEBRENNER:—

Not long since I had the privilege of conversing with an old gentleman on many points of religion. Among the rest, the washing of the saints' feet and baptism were talked of. On these subjects he took the position that many take in the present day, that the washing of feet should be attended to when necessary; that is, when the feet need cleansing, or when a man is sick, and not able to attend to it himself. I asked him to prove that, but he failed in the attempt. He further stated that he was not prepared at present to prove it. He asked me whether I did not believe that a man could get to Heaven without attending to baptism? This question has very frequently been propounded to me. The reason why many ask that question is, they wish us to say what Christ has not said. My reply was this: that if I said that a man could get to Heaven without baptism, I might be asked to prove it, which I could not do. I further stated that God has committed an important trust in the hands of His ministers, that they should go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatever He had commanded them.

Now for me to say any thing else would be trifling with God. Far be it from me, that I should adopt this accommodating system for the purpose of gratifying the carnal propensities of men! No, never shall I, by the help of God, teach men that they can be saved by disobeying the Lord. It was for salvation, and to be honored by my Lord, when He shall be revealed from Heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, that I submitted to be led into the water, and be buried with Christ in baptism—not excluding any other duty made obligatory upon me. Why should I decline in telling others to do the same, if I love them as myself, knowing that these duties are founded upon infalible authority?

Yours in love,

JOHN HICKERNELL.

The Peace Bill.—AN ACT approproating three millions of dollars, to enable the President to conclude a treaty of peace and limits with Mexico.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whereas a state of war now exists between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, which it is desirable should be speedily terminated upon terms just and honorable to both nations; and whereas assurances have heretofore been given to the Government of Mexico that it was the desire of the President to settle all questions between the two countries on the most liberal and satisfactory terms, according to the rights of each and the mutual interests and security of the two countries: and whereas, the President may be able to conclude a treaty of peace with the Republic of Mexico prior to the next session of Congress, if means for that object are at his disposal:

And whereas, in the adjustment of so many complicated questions as now exist between the two countries, it may possibly happen that an expenditure of money will be called for by the stipulations of any treaty which may be entered into: therefore the sum of Three Millions of Dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to conclude a treaty of peace, limits and boundaries with the Republic of Mexico, be used by him in the event that said treaty, when signed by the authorized agents of the two Governments and duly ratified by Mexico, shall call for the expenditure of the same, or any part thereof; full and accurate accounts for which expenditures shall be by him transmitted to Congress at as early a day as practicable.

Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.

APPROVED, March 3, 1847.
JAMES K. POLK.

Shocking Tragedy.—Murder and Suicide, on Tuesday of last week, Mr. Daniel Snyder, of upper Mahantango, was murdered by his wife, who it appears, arose about 6 o'clock in the morning, and while her husband was yet asleep, struck him in the forehead with an axe, killing him with a single blow. The eldest son who slept on the second floor, was attracted to the scene of murder by the groans of the father, when he was told by the mother that she had "done it." She then attempted to throw herself into the well, but was prevented by the interference of some of the children. She then rushed into the house and immediately cut her throat with a razor.

Mrs. Snyder had been for some time previous confined in the Almshouse, as a lunatic, but her reason having, to appearance, returned, she was permitted to return home, where she had not been more than about two weeks when the awful tragedy took place which has left a family of nine children in a moment, as it were, to deplore the loss of both father and mother.—Miner's Journal.

The new Regiment.—The War Department will accept seven companies from New York and three from New Jersey, making one regiment for these two States. From Rhode Island, one company, Maine three, New Hampshire two, connecticut two, and Vermont two, or one regiment from New England. From Maryland four companies, and Delaware one. It is said that Pennsylvania and Ohio will each furnish a regiment; and that North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, conjointly, will furnish one. Three companies will be accepted from Illinois. The mounted regiment will probably be raised in Tennessee and Kentucky. I have not been able to ascertain the proportion from other States.

A Will.—The Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, who died recently in Philadelphia, is supposed to have been the Wealthiest Methodist preach in America—Leaving an estate of the value of from $150,000 to $200,000. He was buried as per will, in the front of St. George's Church, leaving that Church $1000 to supply its poor with wood in winter; the New York Book Concern $1000, to pay for printing Bibles; $1000 to vartous M. Churches in Philadelphia, and ten annual ground rents of $30 each, for the benefit of worn out preachers. The balance is variously willed.

Louisiana Sugar.—The editor of the N. Orleans Tropic speaks in high praise of a sample of grown and manufactured in Louisiana. The process of manufacture is a new one, and the sugar almost snowy white, perfectly dry, coarse grained, and entirely free from dirt.

Astronomical Discovery.—Sir Wm. Hamilton, member of the Irish Royal Academy, announces in the Dublin Evening Post, an astronomical discovery of great importance. He professes to have discovered, aided by mathematical calculations, the true centre of our solar system, that is to say, the point round which the sun herself turns, and the planets which are only her satellites. Sir William states also, like an observer in Liverpool, and like some astronomers in New York, that the new planet of Le Verrier is surrounded by a luminous ring like that Saturn.

Baptist Missions.—The zeal and success of our baptist brethren are worthy of admiration. During the past year, the Missionary Union has received $90,000 into its treasury from the contributions of the churches. Eleven new missionaries have been sent to the heathen. The Union, now supports about two hundred and fifty missionaries, American and native. It is expected that the Rev. Mr. Abbott, whose health has improved during his visit to this country, will resume his labors among the Karen during the next season.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Cholera.—A letter from Constantinople of the 17th of December has the following: News have been received from Persia that the Cholera was still raging and sweeping off thousands. At Oroomiah the mortality was upwards of 200 a day on the poor population of 10,000. I have just seen a doctor assuring me that, accordin to statisties the deaths had greatly exceeded the worst year of the plague; he calculates that more than 100,000 have been destroyed. I do not think the statement exaggerated in the least.

Local Alliance.—An Alliance of evangelical Christians has been formed in Richland county, Ohio, comprising seven or eight denominations. They meet once a month in various parts of the county—laymen as well as ministers—and by interchange of sentiments endeavor to ascertain their points of agreement, and how far Christian union is profitable. They intend to become auxiliary to the American Evangelical Alliance, when formed.

Cheap Postage.—We know not when or where the experiment of comparative freedom was ever more successful, than in Great Britain under the cheap postage system. The result is, that the annual income to government from the Mail service, over all expenses, exceeds four millions of dollars, although letters are carried throughout the Kingdom for a penny in advance, and newspapers for nothing, and both are delivered to individuals, at their doors, without charge.—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

Emigrants Arrived.—From a report made to Congress, we learn that the following numbers of emigrants have arrived in the United States from Europe, for the year ending September 30, 1846; Maine, 5,930; New Hampshire, 25; Massachusetts, 14,079; Rhode Island, 83; New York, 98,863; Pennsylvania, 7,235; Delaware, 6; Maryland, 9,337; Virginia, 82; North Carolina, 3; South Carolina, 408; Louisiana, 22,148; Florida, 90; Texas, 254—Total, 157,647.

John R. Clay, Charge de Affaires at Peru.

Richard Rush, of Pennsylvania, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenopotentiary to his Majesty the King of France.

Number of clearances to foreign ports during the same period:—Ships 9, barques 14, brigs 13, schooners 8—total 44; of which 35 were American. 2 British, 6 Bremen, and 1 French.

The License Law.—Petitions from all portions of the State of Maryland are pouring into the Legislature, praying that the question of License or no License may be submitted to the voters of each district in the State. We have every reason to believe that the members of the Legislature are disposed to submit this important question to the people for their action and decision.—Annopolis Repub.

Relief to Ireland and Scotland.—The collection in the Roman Catholic churches in New York on the 31st ult., in aid of the starving population of Ireland, amounted to from $12,000 to $15,000.

The churches of the same denomination in Boston and its vicinity have contributed upwards of $19,000. which sum was sent out in the steamer Cambria, which left Boston on Monday for Liverpool.

Destitution in Scotland.—At a public meeting recently held in Edinburg, for the relief of the sufferers in the Isles and Highlands of Scotland, it was stated that there were 350,000 individuals deprived of their usual means of support, and that 150,000 required food immediately to prevent them from dying of starvation.

Arrival of Imigrants.—The following were the arrivals of immigrants at N. Y. during the month of February: From Great Britain 3,248; France 337; other ports 67; total 3,652. In April and May the aggregate number will be greatly increased.

Canal Opened.—Water was let into the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal on Monday the 22d ult.

M. E. Church—North.—The minutes of 1846 of the Northern Division of the "M. E. Church," report a membership of 612,125 whites, and 20,515 colored; being a decrease of 12,173 whites, and 224 colored.

From Pittsburg.—The stockholders of the Pittsburg and M'Connelsville Railroad met on the 25th ult., and adopted resolutions unfriendly to the Baltimore connection and favorable to the Central route.—They adjourned until the 27th of April.

License Law in Delaware.—The bill authorizing the people to decide by ballot whether the license to retail intoxicating liquors shall be permitted among them, passed the House—Yeas, 12 Nays, 5.

Abolition of Slavery.—The Government of Uruguay, South America, have abolished slavery throughout that republic.—The owners of slaves are to be re-imbursed at the public expense.

The License Question.—In Warren county, in this State, an election was held to test this question, and every township except one voted for "no license" by large majorities,

Comparative Value.—While corn in England is worth two dollars and sixteen cents a bushel; it brings but little more than nine cents in the interior of Illinois.

☞The bill which passed the Senate on Wednesday the 3d inst., authorizes the Postmaster General to establish a mail route to Oregon and appropriates $100,000 for the service. The bill allows a selection between Charleston, Savannah, Pensacola and New Orleans as the starting point—thence to Havana—thence to Chagres, and across the Isthmus to the Pacific

☞The city of Bremen has subscribed $100,000; the government of Prussia $100,000; the free city of Frankfort $20,000, and other cities sums corresponding to their abilities, towards the establishment of the steamship line between New York and Bremen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Good Resolutions.

The following most excellent resolutions were found in the pocket-book of the late Rev. John H. Rice, D. D., after his death. They are worthy not only of being extensively circulated through the medium of the press, but also of being engraved on the heart of every one who desires to live a consistent Christian life:

"What I resolve, that I will endeavor to do.

"1. To keep under my body, and change my physical constitution. Take food for nourishment, and not for pleasure. Take no more than is necessary, and be indifferent as to the quality. Sleep for refreshment, and not for indulgence.—Harden and subdue my flesh by labor, directed to useful purposes. Endeavor to do as much useful work every day as I can. Dress as cheaply as comports with decency.

"2. To use all my property for benevolent purposes. Pay every thing I owe, as soon as possible. Save all that I can by simplicity of living, and by practicing self-denial. And give all I can in the exercise of sound discretion, to objects of benevolence. Never spare person, property, or reputation, if I can do good.—Necessary that I should die poor.

"3. As to my disposition and conduct towards others:

1. Endeavor to feel kind towards every one. Never indulge anger, malice, envy, jealousy, towards any human being.

2. Endeavor to speak as I ought about every one—aiming, in all that I say, to promote the comfort, improvement, and happiness of every one who lives.

3. Endeavor to act so as to advance.

1. The present comfort.

2. The intellectual improvement.

3. The purity and moral good of my fellow-men.

"As to my Creator, to endeavor to fix more deeply in my mind all the truth that I can possibly discover respecting Him; and to feel, think, and act, in every respect in correspondence with that truth.

"Finally; when I have done all, to acknowledge that I am nothing, that I deserve nothing, and that my Creator has a right to do with me as seems good to him."—Morning Star.

MARY.—Who does not love the common yet beautiful name, Mary? It is from the Hebrew, and means a "tear drop." What sweet and joyous hours of other days—what pleasing associations, does not the very name call up in every heart? Who knows aught ill of Mary?—Who that does not love the name? If there is anything gentle and valued and womanly, what Mary possesses it not? Was it not Mary who was "Last at the cross,

And earliest at the grave?"

And was not Mary the mother of the Saviour of the world?

GOLD AND DROSS IN THE CRUCIBLE.—Let gold be heated ever so long in the crucible, and it remains. But dross goes off in a smoke. So it is with truth and falsehood in the crucible of free investigation.—Anon.

Differences of Opinion.

I am determined not to quarrel with other evangelical bodies of Christians, so long as I see the enemy at work, and Christ, the Captain, calling me to take the field against him. Let us go and make mankind Christians first, and then discuss whether they shall be of our denomination or not.

I wish for the sake of sound doctrine that the brethren would love each other. For one I am determined to do so. I will not call any brother a fox though he should have some degree of management about him; nor a bear, though he may not have all the civility in the world; nor a snake in the grass, because he does not tell me all his plans. If I really do fear that any one, called a brother, bears none of the lineaments of the first-begotten, I will tell the Lord my fears, and pray for him; and before I have done at the throne of grace, I will say, "search me O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me."—Nevins.

Truth and Love.

I am sure truth never lost any thing by by being spoken of in love. I am of opinion that a principle reason why we are not more of one mind, is that we are not more of one heart. How soon they who feel heart to heart, begin to see eye to eye! The way to think alike is first to feel alike; and if the feeling be love, the thought will be truth. I wish, therefore, for the sake of sound doctrine, that the brethren would love one another.—Dr. Nevins.

WRITE IT IN GOLD.—'The great comprehensive truths,' says President Quincy, 'written in letters of living light on every page of our history are these: Human happiness has no perfect security but freedom; freedom, none but virtue; virtue, none but knowledge; and neither freedom, nor knowledge, has any vigor or immortal hope, except in the principles of the Christian faith, and in the sanctions of the Christian religion.'

MARRIAGE NOTICES.

And mingled into one."

ADVRETISEMENTS.

M'ALLISTER'S OINTMENT.

It has POWER to cause all external SORES, SCROFULOUS humors, SKIN DISEASES, POISONOUS WOUNDS to discharge their putrid matters, and then heals them.

It is rightly termed All-healing, for there is scarcely a disease, external or internal, that it will not benefit. I have used it for the last fourteen years for all diseases of the chest, consumption and liver, involving the utmost danger and responsibility, and I declare before Heaven and man, that not in one single case has it failed to benefit when the patient was within the reach of mortal means.

I have had physicians, learned in the profession. I have had ministers of the Gospel, judges of the bench, aldermen, lawyers, gentlemen of the highest erudition, and multitudes of the poor use it in every variety of way, and there has been but one voice—one universal voice—saying: "M'Allister, your Ointment is GOOD."

CONSUMPTION—It can hardly be credited that a salve can have any effect upon the lungs, seated as they are, within the system. But, if placed upon the chest, it penetrates to the lungs, separates the poisonous particles that are consuming them, and expels them from the system. It is curing persons of Consumption continually.

HEADACHE—The salve has cured persons of the headache of twelve year's standing, and who had it regular every week, so that vomiting took place.

Deafness and Ear Ache are helped with like success.

RHEUMATISM—It removes almost immediately the inflammation and swelling, when the pain ceases. Read the Directions around the box.

COLD FEET—Consumption, Liver Complaint, pain in the chest or side, falling off of the hair, one or the other always accompanies cold feet. (This Ointment is the true remedy.) It is a sure sign of disease to have cold feet.

In Scrofula, Old Sores, Erysipelas, Saltrheum, Liver Complaint, Sore Eyes, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Broken or Sore Breast, Piles, all chest diseases, such as Asthma, Oppression, Pain—also Sore Lips, Chapped Hands, Tumors, Cutaneous Eruptions, Nervous Diseases and of the Spine, there is no medicine now known as good.

SCALD HEAD—We have cured cases that actually defied every thing known, as well as the ability of fifteen or twenty doctors. One man told us he had spent five hundred dollars on his children without any benefit, when a few boxes of Ointment cured them.

BALDNESS—It will restore the hair sooner than any other thing.

BURNS—It is the best thing in the world for Burns. (Read the Directions around the box.)

WORMS—It will drive every vestige of them away. (Read the Directions around the box.)

There is probably no medicine on the face of the earth at once so sure and so safe in the expulsion of worms.

CORNS—Occasional use of the Ointment will always keep corns from growing. People need never be troubled with them, if they will use it.

PILES—Thousands are yearly cured by this Ointment.

JAMES M'ALLISTER & CO.
Sole proprietors of the above medicine.

CAUTION—No OINTMENT will be genuine unless the name of James M'Allister, or James M'Allister & Co., are written with a pen on every lable.

EXTENSION OF CONTRACT.

Lancaster, Pa., March 9, 1847.

Brother Winebrenner:—

I have conversed with brother Garlk since I received yours, touching the continuation of the Advocate; and so far as we, the Publishing Committee of the General Eldership, are concerned, we are perfectly satisfied that you should continue it for another year, under the old contract. So if you see proper, you can make the necessary arrangements, and go on. We have received no other proposal for publishing it.

Give my love to the brethren in Harrisburg, keeping a good share for yourself and family.

E. H. THOMAS,

In behalf of the Publishing Committee.

NOTICE.

From the foregoing document, our patrons will perceive that we have our contract extended for another year. The substance of the contract is this: After the payment of all expenses and a reasonable salary, we are to pay a bonus of one dollar for every paying subscriber on our list, to the Publishing Committee of the General Eldership, to be divided among the several Annual Elderships, in proportion to their numerical strength. We give this timely notice for reasons given in the following appeal.

EDITOR'S APPEAL.

Yet two weeks more, and this volume will be completed. By that time, or at least by the first of May, the time when the first number of the next volume will be issued, we should like to know whether five hundred new subscribers can be raised, or not. We have proposed to reduce the terms of the Advocate to One Dollar per Annum, provided said number of new subscriber can be procured. Our present number of subscribers will not justify the reduction; but with an addition of five hundred more, we can afford to publish the paper at One Dollar; and we shall willingly make the reduction as soon as our list of subscribers will justify it.

We now, therefore, appeal to the Agents and patrons of the Advocate for aid and co-operation, in swelling the list of our subscribers. Doubtless, the thing can be done. All that is wanting is effort, on the part of our friends of the church and our cause, to ensure and secure the desired object. What then can we say to enlest our brethren and friends in this cause? We have already pointed to the noble and worthy examples in other denominations. We have shown the benefits and advantages that would accrue to the cause from the success of such an effort. We have dwelt some on the chagrin, shame, mortification and loss, of another suspension of the organ of the church. What more, then, can we say to induce you to act, and to act promptly, in this matter? We can only add, by way of encouragement, what in substance we have said before, let each minister try to get five new subscribers, and he shall receive his own paper gratis during the next year; and let each present subscriber try to get at least one more new subscriber, and then each one will be sure to get his paper a quarter dollar cheaper, and so all will be benefitted—the cause will be promoted—and God will be glorified.

Be sure then to make a timely effort, each one in his or her own proper person, and this good and desirable work will be easily accomplished. And remember, moreover, all we ask you to do, and all you intend to do, we shall expect you to do, between this and the commencement of the next volume, on the first of May ensuing.

Error Corrected.

The letter in the 21st number of the Advocate, giving an account of the Sabbath-school in Washington, Lancaster county, Pa., and signed Andrew J. Kauffman, ought to have had the signature of ANDREW H. KAUFFMAN. It was an oversight of the compositor.

A Request.

Our friends and brethren will oblige us very much, if they will be careful, when sending us new subscribers, to give the Post Office, county and State, of each subscriber, in a plain legible hand: and when they remit money, always do the same. This will be a small matter for them to observe, and will save us a vast deal of trouble and perplexity.

Our Travelling Agent.

Information is hereby given, that we have appointed our young brother, John Strayer, as a travelling Agent for the Church Advocate, and other purposes. He will visit the churches within the bounds of the East Pa. Eldership, during the spring and summer seasons, for the purpose of soliciting subscribers, selling books and collecting dues. Elder Strayer has been in delicate health for some time past. With a view to improve his heal h by travelling, and to aid us in our operations as editor of the Advocate, he has agreed to accept this agency. We hope our brethren and friends, generally, will receive him kindly, and assist him in the prosecution of his work, as it becomes Christian friends and professors of religion.

Adjournment of the Legislature.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania adjourned on Tuesday the 16th ult. The most of the members were from the working class of our citizens, and hence they did not neglect to improve the time whilst they were together. They toiled and labored like men. They were in session seventy-one days, and passed about four hundred and fifty bills and resolutions. This was bravo for a short session. Yet we regret that they did not prolong the session a week or ten days longer, so as to have time to pass some fifty or a hundred bills more, and among them some very important and necessary ones.

The License Bill.

This bill was shamefully mangled and bandied about by the pro license members in the Legislature, till it was finally defeated, (what little was left of it) for want of time to get the Executive approval.

We hope that the friends of temperance and good order will give due notice to all parties,—Whigs, Democrats and Natives,—both here and throughout the State, that they be more careful than usual as to whom they shall nominate for the Legislature next fall. Men who are Anti-Democratic, or who are opposed to let the people govern themselves, and decide questions of public policy at the ballot-box, are unworthy of a seat in the Legislature. Such was the character of some of the members of the late Legislative body. We hope the good sense of our citizens will dictate the propriety of marking them, and of filling their places with wise and good men, who are Democratic Republicans in theory and in practice, in private and public life.

LICENSE CASES

Decided by the United States Supreme Court.

These cases came up, by way of appeal, from Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, for trial in the Supreme Court of the United States. The facts in the cases were these:

Sundry persons having violated the license laws of said States, were prosecuted under the laws for said violations, and judgments given against the defendants. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. The ground of appeal was that the State had no authority to make any restrictions on the subject, it being a matter of commerce, over which the General Government had exclusive control. The cases were very ably argued in the Supreme Court, both at the last and the preceding term. There were six of the nine Judges upon the bench—Taney, McLean, Wayne, Nelson, Woodbury and Grier.

The opinion given by the Court upon the important license cases, was as follows:

"The judgment of the Lower Courts are affirmed, and the Supreme Court decides that the States have a right to regulate the trade in, and licensing of, the sale of ardent spirits."

A shrewed editor down East has aptly and pertinently said:

"Lawyers and pettifoggers have made some astonishing pleas in justification of this murderous business, upon the unconstitutionality of the License Laws, while their hard-hearted clients have heretofore been encouraged in their work of death."

But now the question of constitutionality, this decision of the Supreme Court has happily put to rest and settled beyond legal controversy, in favor of the right and power of the States to pass laws prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors.

Let the friends of temperance take fresh courage and push forward the noble and glorious cause of moral reform. The temperance banner is destined to wave in triumph over King Alcohol, and all his factors and pettifoggers.

New Postage Law.

False Teaching.

Our Lord charged the Jews with false teaching when they taught for doctrine the commandments of men. If, in making this allegation, Christ was blameless, then may we be justifiable in charging some of our neighbors with identically the same thing.

One of them, in pleading for the right of infant sprinkling, but a short time ago, stated, among other things equally unscriptural, that "every parent who neglected to have his children baptized, transgressed an express and positive command of God."

Now we would respectfully request the so-called Reverend gentleman to please give us some Bible authority for this assertion? If there is in all the Bible "an express and positive command for infant sprinkling," we have yet to learn where it is to be found: and it is precisely so with the most of the people of Harrisburg.

We have read and searched the scriptures of truth over and over, and we have never found either precept or example for the ceremony of infant sprinkling. Hence we cannot but believe that there is false teaching among us, even as there was among the ancient Jews: and one, not the least of those errors, is, the teaching and practice of infant sprinkling, (obviously a human invention) for an institution of God. Every ordinance of God is founded on statute law. Where there is no such law, there can be no transgression. When, therefore, ministers are bold to declare from the pulpit, "that every parent that neglects to have his children baptized, transgresses an express and positive command of God," we cannot forbear to challege him to the proof.

CONTRIBUTORS' DEPAR'T.

Sketch of a Sermon,

Delivered at the new Bethel, in the City of Utica, N. Y., February 7, 1847.

By A. D. WILLIAMS, V. D. M.

TEXT—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace; good will to men." Luke 2: 14.

As a whole, the history of the world is a continued story of bloodshed. Every page is reddened and gory with human slaughter, and the whole of its thrilling narrations is little else than the recitals of feuds and quarrels, and the exhibition of the damning sin of ambition. Real peace has scarcely been known, and although the temple of JANUS was twice closed during the continuance of the Roman power, yet it indicated little more than that Rome was the mistress of the known world, and that her vassals submitted to her sway because they had not the power to resist. Christ, however, announced the doctrine of peace. His was a mission of mercy—of good will to men.

There is in the text a grand summary of Christianity. Angels, bright spirits from on high, were for once permitted to overleap the battlements of heaven, and exhibit the fulness of their joy to the humble shepherds of Judea's plain; and in one grand concert of song to testify, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace; good will to men." The Saviour, the long promised Messiah, had just been ushered into the world, and what inferior theme, suppose ye, than a grand summary of His gospel could he the subject of their thoughts? Surely none. From the subject, then, we draw this general proposition, viz:

The Essential Element of Christianity is Peace.

In order to a clear understanding of the subject, it is necessary to define what we understand by peace, and its opposite, war.—There is, moreover, a difficulty in distinctly defining them, so as to embrace all their characteristics, and still be significant of them only. But whatever is affirmed of the one, is evidently the antithesis of the other; as these terms are always understood to be respectively the opposite of the other.

Peace, as taught by the Saviour, is not inaction, nor neutrality; for He every where urges His followers to action, and that too of the most energetic and decisive kind. He proclaimed plainly, "He that is not with me is against me." It may safely be affirmed that Peace is manifested in active exertion for the benefit of mankind, and on the other hand, that War is active exertion for the destruction and spoliation of mankind. Keeping this in view, I remark,—

1. The Gospel is an exhibition of love. It was love that induced the Father to send His Son to redeem the world. It was love that induced the Saviour to suffer for man's salvation; and we are informed that love worketh no ill to its neighbor.

2. The Saviour taught and practised peace. He preached: "As ye would that others should do to you, do ye even so to them:" than which, nothing can be more opposed to human slaughter. He commanded Peter to purchase a sword, that in a time when every principle of defensive war urged its use, he might give a most decided and pointed disapproval of war. Though at His command, more than ten legions of angels would have rescued him, yet he died upon the Cross. When Samaria had added insult to rejection, he emphatically reproved his disciples for wishing to command fire from Heaven to consume the city. And though his whole life was full indeed of incidents, that, in our estimation, would have justified and even demanded bloodshed, he never for once indulged in either retaliation or self-defence. If Christ is our example, what a rebuke to modern Christian's practice? The Christian's warfare and weapons are not earnal.

3. Christianity is promulgated by means of peace. Unlike Mahomedanism, it does not plant the glittering sword at the breast, and exclaim, "Believe or die." None of the paraphernalia of war is put into the hands of the Christian minister as he goes forth to convert the nations to God. Quite the reverse. They are sent forth as defenceless sheep among wolves. No sword—none but God is their shield.

4. Its influence is peace. Who ever thought of Christianity inciting its possessors to contention and bloodshed? It calms the passions by its majic voice—"Peace; be still!" And it may safely be affirmed, that just in proportion as any nation has become truly Christian, has it ceased to act upon the principles of war.

5. Early Christians would not fight. During the most of the ten persecutions, converts to Christianity were so numerous, that in human estimation they might have successfully resisted those pagan tyrants, or at least procured an undisturbed tolerance. But this they did not do. The testimony of the early Christian writers, on this point, is explicit. TERTULLIAN, CLEMENS of Allexandria, LACTANTIUS, IRENEUS, and JUSTIN MARTYR, all testify that Christians of their times would not enroll themselves in armies; and when arrested for it, their uniform declaration was: "I am a Christian, and therefore I cannot fight." CELSUS, a heathen opposer of Christianity, alledges this against them as a crime. If all this be true, the inference is legitimate and plain, that War is Incompatible with Christianity.

Nevertheless, let us look for a few moments at its evil effects.

1. It needlessly consumes property. Riches can, and ought to be used for the spread of the Gospel; and yet our present war with Mexico has cost more money already, than has ever been spent to support missionaries.

2. It severs social ties. Not a single principle of love, affection or regard, but what is wantonly and ruthlessly violated by it; and not a single flood-gate of woe or misery that is not opened by it.

3. In the destruction of life, it assumes God's prerogative. He alone gives life, and He alone has authority to take it away; and no one without a sanction from God's throne has any right to destroy it. And where has the Gospel commanded, or even sanctioned war? Echo answers, where?

4. War is contrary to the spirit of Christ, and ordinarily retards the spread of the Gospel. On this point little need be said: every one is conscious that killing human beings is incompatible with religious revivals, and that war cannot feed upon Christian emotions.

5. It violates every element of happiness. Every thing conducive to true happiness is opposed to war, and consequently as one prevails, the other is destroyed.

6. Christianity cannot universally prevail until war is no more. To say it could, would be to say that war, with all its horrid cruelties, might dwell in Heaven. No one will for a moment suppose that the Mellennial day will be employed in marshalling armies and killing men. War then must cease before the world can be converted.

Here I might appropriately close; but nature and reason corroborate the sanctions of Revelation. Suffer me to allude to them.

Mankind is a great common brotherhood. They have a common origin and peculiarities, and will have a common destiny. All are destined to die and to be judged according to the deeds done in the body. Man, moreover, is distinguished from the brute only by his human nature, and this human nature, every one will allow, is every where identical. If so, its interests and necessities are every where identical, and consequently cannot conflict. But admiting that they can: Does active exertion, for the benefit of mankind, require human butchery? If you would benefit a man, must you kill him, or his neighbor? Few will so affirm. And yet if it were so, it does not follow that we are authorized to do it. God has nowhere made us the executors of such a necessity, if it existed; as it does not.
